108. If a maintenance debtor wishes effect to be given in another State to an adjusted order, account must be taken of the reversed roles of the parties. Adjustment at the instance of the maintenance debtor can only be aimed at a remission or reduction of the amount of maintenance. Reliance on such a decision in another Contracting State does not therefore involve 'enforcement' within the meaning of Sections 2 and 3 of Title III, but rather recognition as referred to in Section 1 of that Title. It is true that the second paragraph of Article 26 makes provision for a special application to obtain recognition of a judgment, and the provisions of Sections 2 and 3 of Title III concerning enforcement are applicable to such an application. If, in these circumstances, recognition is to be granted to a judgment which has been amended on the application of the maintenance debtor, the position is as follows: the applicant within the meaning of Articles 34 and 36 is not the creditor but the debtor, and therefore, according to Article 34, the creditor is the party who is not entitled to make any submissions. The right of appeal of the party against whom enforcement is sought, provided for in Article 36, lies with the creditor in this case. As applicant, the maintenance debtor has the right laid down in the second paragraph of Article 42, read together with the second paragraph of Article 26, to request recognition of part only of an adjusting order. For the application of Article 44 it has to be determined whether, as plaintiff, he was granted legal aid in the original proceedings.

II. Trusts

1. Problems which the Convention in its present form would create with regard to trusts

109. A distinguishing feature of United Kingdom and Irish law is the trust. In these two States it provides the solution to many problems which Continental legal systems overcome in an altogether different way. The basic structure of a trust may be described as the relationship which arises when a person or persons (the trustees) hold rights of any kind for the benefit of one or more persons (the beneficiaries) or for some object permitted by law, in such a way that the real benefit of the property accrues, not to the trustees, but to the beneficiaries (who may, however, include one or more of the trustees) or other object of the trust. Basically two kinds of legal relationships can be distinguished in a trust; they may be defined as the internal relationships and the external relationships.

110. (a) In his external relationships, i.e. in legal dealings with persons who are not beneficiaries of the trust, the trustee acts like any other owner of property. He can dispose of and acquire rights, enter into commitments binding on the trust and acquire rights for its benefit. As far as these acts are concerned no adjustments to the 1968 Convention are necessary. Its provisions on jurisdiction are applicable, as in legal dealings between persons who are not acting as trustees. If a Belgian lessee of property situated in Belgium, but belonging to an English trust, sues to be allowed into occupation, Article 16 (1) is applicable, irrespective of the fact that the property belongs to a trust.

111. (b) Problems arise in connection with the internal relationships of a trust, i.e. as between the trustees themselves, between persons claiming the status of trustees and, above all, between trustees on the one hand and the beneficiaries of a trust on the other. Disputes may occur among a number of persons as to who has been properly appointed as a trustee; among a number of trustees doubts may arise as to the extent of their respective rights to one another; there may be disputes between the trustees and the beneficiaries as to the rights of the latter to or in connection with the trust property, as to whether, for example, the trustee is obliged to hand over assets to a child beneficiary of the trust after the child has attained a certain age. Disputes may also arise between the settlor and other parties involved in the trust.

112. The internal relationships of a trust are not necessarily covered by the 1968 Convention. They are excluded from its scope when the trust deals with one of the matters referred to in the second paragraph of Article 1. Thus as a legal institution the trust plays a significant role in connection with the law of succession. If a trust has been established by a will, disputes arising from the internal relationships are outside the scope of the 1968 Convention (see paragraph 52). The same applies when a trustee is appointed in bankruptcy proceedings; he would correspond to a liquidator ('Konkursverwalter') in Continental legal systems.

113. Where the 1968 Convention is applicable to the internal relationships of a trust, its provisions on jurisdiction were in their original form not always well adapted to this legal institution. To base jurisdiction on the domicile of the defendant trustee would not be appropriate in trust matters. A trust has no legal personality as such. If, however, an action is brought against a defendant in his capacity as trustee, his domicile would not necessarily be a suitable basis for determining jurisdiction. If a person leaves the United Kingdom to go to Corsica, it is right and proper that, in the absence of any special jurisdiction, claims directed against him personally should be brought only before Corsican courts. If, however, he is a sole or joint trustee or co-trustee of trust property situated in the United Kingdom and hitherto administered there, the beneficiaries and the other trustees cannot be expected to seek redress in a Corsican court.

Moreover, the legal relationships between trustees inter se, and between the trustees and the beneficiaries, are not of a contractual nature; in most cases, the trustees are not even authorized to conclude agreements conferring jurisdiction by consent. Jurisdiction for actions arising from the internal relationships of a trust can be based, therefore, neither on Article 5 (1) nor — as a rule — on agreements conferring jurisdiction by consent pursuant to Article 17. To overcome this difficulty simply by amending the 1968 Convention so as to allow a settlor to stipulate which courts are to have jurisdiction would only partly solve the problem. Such an amendment would not include already existing trusts, and the most suitable jurisdiction for possible disputes cannot always be foreseen when creating a trust.

2. The solution proposed

114. (a)The solution proposed in the new paragraph(6) of Article 5 is based on the argument that trusts, even though they have no legal personality, may be said to have a geographical centre of operation. This would fulfil functions similar to those fulfilled by the 'seat' of business associations without legal personality. It is true that United Kingdom and Irish law have so far provided only a tentative definition of such a central point of a trust. However, the concept of the domicile of a trust is not, at present, unknown in legal practice and theory ([32]). In his manual on Private International Law the Scottish Professor Anton gives the following definition ([33]):

> 'The domicile of a trust is thought to be basically a matter depending upon the wishes of a truster and his expressed intentions will usually be conclusive. In their absence the truster's intentions will be inferred from such circumstances as the administrative centre of the trust, the place of residence of the trustees, the situs of the assets of the trust, the nature of the trust purposes and the place where these are to be fulfilled.'

No doubt these notions about the domicile of a trust were developed mainly for the purpose of determining the legal system to be applied, usually either English or Scottish law. The principal characteristics of 'domicile' so defined and some of the factors on which it is based would also justify making it the basis for founding jurisdiction. The proposed new provision does not, strictly speaking, create a special jurisdiction. It covers only a very limited number of cases and is, therefore, added to Article 5 rather than to Article 2. For the non-exclusive character of the new provision see paragraph 118.

115. (b) The following are some detailed comments on the Working Party's proposal (see paragraph 181).

116. The concepts 'trust', 'trustee' and 'domicile' have not been translated into the other Community languages, since they relate to a distinctive feature of United Kingdom and Irish law. However, the Member States can give a more detailed definition of the concept of a trust in their national language in their legislation implementing the Accession Convention.

117. The phrase 'created by the operation of a statute, or by a written instrument, or created orally and evidenced in writing' is intended to indicate clearly that the new rules on jurisdiction apply only to cases in which under United Kingdom or Irish law a trust has been expressly constituted, or for which provision is made by Statute. This is important, because these legal systems solve many problems with which Continental systems have to deal in a completely different way, by means of so-called 'constructive' or 'implied' trusts. Where the latter are involved, the new Article 5 (6) is not applicable, as for instance where, after conclusion of a contract of sale, but prior to the transfer of title, the vendor is treated as holding the property on trust for the purchaser (see paragraph 172). Trusts resulting from the operation of a statutory provision are unlikely to fall within the scope of the 1968 Convention. Since in the United Kingdom, for example, children cannot own real property, a trust in their favour arises by operation of statute, if the circumstances are such that adult persons would have acquired ownership.

118. It should be noted that the new provision is not exclusive. It merely establishes an additional jurisdiction.The trustee who has gone to Corsica (see paragraph 113) can also be sued in the courts there. However, a settlor would be free to stipulate an exclusive jurisdiction (see paragraph 174).

119. If proceedings are brought in a Contracting State, relating to a trust which is subject to a foreign legal system, the question arises as to which law determines the domicile of that trust. The new version of Article 53 proposes the same criterion as that adopted in the 1968 Convention for ascertaining the 'seat' of a company. As far as the legal systems of England and Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Ireland are concerned, application of this provision should present no serious difficulty. There are at present no rules of private international law in the legal systems of the Continental Member States of the Community for determining the domicile of a trust. The courts of those States will have to evolve such rules to enable them to apply the trust provisions of the 1968 Convention. Two possibilities exist. It could be contended that the domicile of a trust should be determined by the legal system to which the trust is subject. One could, however, also contend that the court concerned should decide the issue in accordance with its own lex fori which would have to evolve its own appropriate criteria.

120. In principle, the exclusive jurisdictions provided for by Article 16 take priority over the new Article 5 (6). However, it is not easy to establish the precise extent of that priority.

In legal disputes arising from internal trust relationships, the legal relations referred to in the provisions in question usually play only an incidental role, if any. The trustee requires court approval for certain acts of management. Even where the management of immovable property is concerned, any such applications to the court do not affect the proprietary rights of the trustee, but only his fiduciary obligations under the trust. Article 16 (1) does not apply. One could, however, envisage a dispute arising between two people as to which of them was trustee of certain property. If one of them instituted proceedings against the other in a German court claiming the cancellation of the entry in the land register showing the defendant as the owner of the property and the substitution of an entry showing the plaintiff as the true owner, there can be no doubt that, under Article 16 (1) or (3), the German court would have exclusive jurisdiction. However, if a declaration is sought that a particular person is a trustee of a particular trust which includes certain property, Article 16 (1) does not become applicable merely because that property includes immovable property.

III. Admiralty jurisdiction

121. The exercise of jurisdiction in maritime matters has traditionally played a far greater role in the United Kingdom than in the Continental States of the Community. The scope of the international competence of the courts, as it has been developed in the United Kingdom, has become of worldwide significance for admiralty jurisdiction. This factor is reflected not least in the Brussels Conventions of 1952 and 1957 (see paragraph 238 et seq.). It would have been inappropriate to limit the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction to the basis of jurisdiction included in the 1968 Convention in its original form. If a ship is arrested in a State because of an internationally recognized maritime claim, it would be unreasonable to expect the creditor to seek a decision on his claim before the courts of the shipowner's domicile. For this reason, the Working Party gave lengthy consideration to the possible inclusion of a special section on admiralty jurisdiction in Title II. Article 36 of the Accession Convention is derived from an earlier draft prepared for that purpose (see paragraph 131). Parallel negotiations on Article 57 of the 1968 Convention did, however, lead to a generally acceptable interpretation which will enable States party to a Convention on maritime law to assume jurisdiction on any particular matter dealt with in that Convention, even in respect of persons domiciled in a Community State which is not a party to that Convention (see paragraph 236 et seq.). Furthermore, all delegations are in support of a Joint Declaration urging the Community States to accede to the most important of all the Conventions on maritime law, namely the Brussels Convention of 10 May 1952 (see paragraph 238). The Working Party, confident that this Joint Declaration will be adopted and implemented, finally dropped its plans for a section dealing with admiralty jurisdiction. This would also avoid interfering with the general principles of the 1968 Convention, and maintain a clear dividing line between its scope and that of other Conventions.

Two issues remain outstanding, however, since they are not fully covered by the Brussels Conventions of 1952 and 1957: jurisdiction in the event of the arrest of salvaged cargo or freight (the new Article 5 (7)) (1) and actions for limitation of liability in maritime matters (the new Article 6a) (2). Moreover, until Denmark and Ireland accede to the Brussels Arrest Convention of 10 May 1952, transitional provisions had also to be introduced (3). Finally, a particularity affecting only Denmark and Ireland (4) still remained to be settled.

1. Jurisdiction in connection with the arrest of salvaged cargo or freight

122. (a) The Brussels Convention of 1952 allows a claimant, inter alia, to invoke the jurisdiction of a State in which a ship has been arrested on account of a salvage claim (Article 7 (1) (b)). Implicit in this provision is a rule of substantive law. A claim to remuneration for salvage entitles the salvage firm to a maritime lien on the ship. A similar lien in favour of a salvage firm can also exist on the cargo; this can be of some economic importance, if it is the cargo rather than the ship which was salvaged, or if the salvaged ship is so badly damaged that its value is less than the cost of the salvage operation. The value of the cargo of a modern supertanker can amount to a considerable sum. Finally, prior rights can also arise in regard to freight. If freight is payable solely in the event of the safe arrival of the cargo at the place of destination, it is appropriate that the salvage firm should have a prior right to be satisfied out of the claim to freight which was preserved due to the salvage of the cargo.

Accordingly United Kingdom law provides that a salvage firm may apply for the arrest of the salvaged cargo or the freight claim preserved due to its intervention and may also apply to the court concerned for a final decision on its claims to remuneration for salvage. Jurisdiction of this kind is similar in scope to the provisions of Article 7 of the Brussels Convention of 1952. As there is no other Convention on the arrest of salvaged cargo and freight which would remain applicable under Article 57, the United Kingdom would, on acceding to the 1968 Convention, have suffered an unacceptable loss of jurisdiction if a special provision had not been introduced.

123. (b) The proposed solution applies the underlying principle of Article 7 of the Brussels Convention of 1952 to jurisdiction after the arrest of salvaged cargo or freight claims.

Under Article 24 of the 1968 Convention, there is no limitation on national laws with regard to the granting of provisional legal safeguards including arrest. However, they could not provide that arrest, whether authorized or effected, should suffice to found jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter. The exception introduced in Article 5 (7) (a) is confined to arrest to safeguard a salvage claim.

Article 5 (7) (b) introduces an extension of jurisdiction not expressly modelled on the Brussels Convention of 1952. It is a result of practical experience. After salvage operations — whether involving a ship, cargo or freight — arrest is sometimes ordered, but not actually carried into effect, because bail or other security has been provided. This must be sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the arresting court to decide also on the substance of the matter.

The object of the provision is to confer jurisdiction only with regard to those claims which are secured by a maritime lien. If the owner of a ship in difficulties has concluded a contract for its salvage, as his contract with the cargo owner frequently obliges him to do, any disputes arising from the former contract will not be governed by this provision.

2. Jurisdiction to order a limitation of liability

124. It is not easy to say precisely how the application of Article 57 of the 1968 Convention links up with that of the International Convention of 10 October 1957 relating to the limitation of the liability of owners of seagoing ships ([34]) (see end of paragraph 128) and with relevant national laws. The latter Convention contains no express provisions directly affecting international jurisdiction or the enforcement of judgments. The Working Party did not consider that it was its task to deal systematically with the issues raised by that Convention and to devise proposals for solving them. It would, however, be particularly unfortunate in certain respects if the jurisdictional lacunae of the 1957 Convention on the limitation of liability were carried over into the 1968 Convention and were supplemented in accordance with the general provisions on jurisdiction of that Convention.

A distinction needs to be drawn between three differing aspects arising in connection with the limitation of liability in matters of maritime law. First, a procedure exists for setting up and allocating the liability fund. Secondly, the entitlement to damages against the shipowner must be judicially determined. Finally, and distinct from both, there is the assessment of limitation of liability regarding a given claim.

The procedural details giving effect to these three aspects vary in the different legal systems of the Community.

125. Under one system, which is followed in particular in the United Kingdom, limitation of liability necessitates an action against one of the claimants — either by way of originating proceedings or, if an action has already been brought against the shipowner, as a counterclaim. The liability fund is set up at the court dealing with the limitation of liability issue, and other claimants must also lodge their claims with the same court.

126. Under the system obtaining in Germany, for example, proceedings for the limitation of liability are started not by means of an action brought against a claimant, but by a simple application which is not directed 'against' any person, and which leads to the setting up of the fund.

If the application is successful, all claimants must lodge their claims with that court. If any disputes arise about the validity of any of the claims lodged, they have to be dealt with by special proceedings taking the form of an action by the claimant against the fund administrator, creditor or shipowner contesting the claim. Under this system an independent action by the shipowner against the claimant in connection with limitation of liability is also possible. Such an action leads not to the setting up of a liability fund or to an immediately effective limitation of liability, but merely establishes whether liability is subject to potential limitation, in case of future proceedings to assess the extent of such liability.

127. The new Article 6a does not apply to an action by a claimant against the shipowner, fund administrator or other competing claimants, nor to the collective proceedings for creating and allocating the liability fund, but only to the independent action brought by a shipowner against a claimant (a). Otherwise the present provisions of the 1968 Convention which are relevant to limitation of maritime liability apply (b).

128. (a) The actual or potential limitation of the liability of a shipowner can, however, in all legal systems of the Community be used otherwise than as a defence. If a shipowner anticipates a liability claim, it may be in his interest to take the initiative by asking for a declaration that he has only limited or potentially limited liability for the claim. In that case he can choose from one of the jurisdictions which are competent by virtue of Articles 2 to 6. According to these provisions, he cannot bring an action in the courts of his domicile. Since, however, he could be sued in those courts, it would be desirable also to allow him to have recourse to this jurisdiction. It is the purpose of Article 6a to provide for this. Moreover, apart from the Brussels Convention of 1952, this is the only jurisdiction where the shipowner could reasonably concentrate all actions affecting limitation of his liability. The result for English law (see paragraph 125) is that the fund can be set up and allocated by that same court. In addition, Article 6a makes it clear that proceedings for limitation of liability can also be brought by the shipowner in any other court which has jurisdiction over the claim. It also enables national legislations to give jurisdiction to a court within their territory other than the court which would normally have jurisdiction.

129. (b) For proceedings concerning the validity as such of a claim against a shipowner, Articles 2 to 6 are exclusively applicable.

In addition, Article 22 is always applicable. If proceedings to limit liability have been brought in one State, a court in another State which has before it an application to establish or to limit liability may stay the proceedings or even decline jurisdiction.

130. (c) A clear distinction must be drawn between the question of jurisdiction and the question which substantive law on limitation of liability is to be applied. This need not be the law of the State whose courts have jurisdiction for assessing the limitation of liability. The law applicable for the limitation of liability also defines more precisely the type of case in which limitation of liability can be claimed at all.

131. 3. Transitional provisions

All the delegations hope that Denmark and Ireland will accede to the Brussels Convention of 10 May 1952 (see paragraph 121). This will, however, naturally take some time, and it is reasonable to allow a transitional period of three years after the entry into force of the Accession Convention. It would be harsh if, within that period, in the two States concerned jurisdiction in maritime matters were to be limited to what is authorized under the terms of Articles 2 to 6a. Article 36 of the Accession Convention therefore contains transitional provisions in favour of those States. These provisions correspond, apart from variations in the drafting, to the provisions which the Working Party originally proposed to recommend for the special section on maritime law as general rules of jurisdiction regarding the arrest of seagoing ships. In preparing these provisions the Working Party drew heavily, in fact almost exclusively, on the rules of the 1952 Brussels Convention relating to the arrest of seagoing ships (see paragraph 121).

Since they are temporary, the transitional provisions do not merit detailed comments on how they differ from the text of that Convention.

132. 4. Disputes between a shipmaster and crew members

The new Article Vb of the Protocol annexed to the 1968 Convention is based on a request by Denmark founded on Danish tradition. This has become part of the Danish Seamen's Law No 420 of 18 June 1973 which states that disputes between a crew member and a shipmaster of a Danish vessel may not be brought before foreign courts. The same principle is also embodied in some consular conventions between Denmark and other States. Following a specific request from the Irish delegation, the scope of this provision has also been extended to Irish ships.

IV. Other special matters

133. 1. Jurisdiction based on the place of performance

In the course of the negotiations it emerged that the French and Dutch texts of Article 5 (1) were less specific than the German and Italian texts on the question of the designation of the obligation. The former could be misinterpreted as including other contractual obligations than those which were the subject of the legal proceedings in question. The revised versions of the French and Dutch texts should clear up this misunderstanding ([35]).

134. 2. Jurisdiction in matters relating to tort

Article 5 (3) deals with the special tort jurisdiction. It presupposes that the wrongful act has already been committed and refers to the place where the harmful event has occurred. The legal systems of some States provide for preventive injunctions in matters relating to tort. This applies, for example, in cases where it is desired to prevent the publication of a libel or the sale of goods which have been manufactured or put on the market in breach of the law on patents or industrial property rights. In particular the laws of the United Kingdom and Germany provide for measures of this nature. No doubt Article 24 is applicable when courts have an application for provisional protective measures before them, even if their decision has, in practice, final effect. There is much to be said for the proposition that the courts specified in Article 5 (3) should also have jurisdiction in proceedings whose main object is to prevent the imminent commission of a tort.

135. 3. Third party proceedings and claims for redress

In Article 6 (2), the term 'third party proceedings' relates to a legal institution which is common to the legal systems of all the original Member States, with the exception of Germany. However, a jurisdictional basis which rests solely on the capacity of a third party to be joined as such in the proceedings cannot exist by itself. It must necessarily be supplemented by legal criteria which determine which parties may in which capacity and for what purpose be joined in legal proceedings. Thus the provisions already existing in, or which may in future be introduced into, the legal systems of the new Member States with reference to the joining of third parties in legal proceedings, remain unaffected by the 1968 Convention.

Jurisdiction in insurance matters

136. The accession of the United Kingdom introduced a totally new dimension to the insurance business as it had been practised hitherto within the European Community. Lloyds of London has a substantial share of the market in the international insurance of large risks ([36]).

In view of this situation the United Kingdom requested a number of adjustments. Its main argument was that the protection afforded by Articles 7 to 12 was unnecessary for policy-holders domiciled outside the Community (I) or of great economic importance (II). The United Kingdom expressed concern that, without an adjustment of the 1968 Convention, insurers within the Community might be forced to demand higher premiums than their competitors in other States.

There were additional reasons for each particular request for an adjustment. As regards contracts of insurance with policy-holders domiciled outside the Community the United Kingdom sought the unrestricted admissibility of agreements conferring jurisdiction to be vouchsafed so that appropriate steps could be taken with regard to the binding provisions contained in the national laws of many policy-holders insuring with English insurers (I). Requests for adjustments also referred, in conjunction with the other requests for adjustments, to the scope of Articles 9 and 10 which seemed to require clarification (III). Finally there were requests for a few minor adjustments (IV).

The original request of the United Kingdom in respect of the first two problems, namely that the insurance matters in question should be excluded from the scope of Articles 7 to 12 was too far-reaching in view of the general objectives of the 1968 Convention. In particular a number of features of the mandatory rules of jurisdiction, which differ for the various types of insurance, had to be retained (see paragraphs 138, 139 and 143). However, the special structure of the British insurance market had to be taken into account — not least so that it would not be driven to resort systematically to arbitration. Although the 1968 Convention does not restrict the possibility of settling disputes by arbitration (see paragraph 63), national law should be careful not to encourage arbitration simply by making proceedings before national courts too complicated and uncertain for the parties. The Working Party therefore endeavoured to extend the possibilities of conferring jurisdiction by consent. For the form of such agreements see paragraph 176.

I. Insurance contracts taken out by policy-holders domiciled outside the Community

137. As already indicated earlier (see note 36), insurance contracts with policy-holders domiciled outside the Community account for a very large part of the British insurance business. The 1968 Convention does not expressly stipulate to what extent such contracts may provide for jurisdiction by consent. Article 4 applies only to the comparatively rare case where the policy-holder is the defendant in subsequent proceedings. In so far as the jurisdiction of courts outside the Community can be determined by agreement, the general question arises as to what restrictions should be imposed on such agreements having regard to the exclusive jurisdictions provided for by the 1968 Convention (see paragraphs 148, 162 et seq.). The main problem in this connection was the jurisdiction under Articles 9 and 10 which, it was thought, could not be excluded. However, this difficulty did not affect insurance contracts only with policy-holders domiciled outside the Community. It also affects, more generally, agreements on jurisdiction which are authorized by Article 12.

In view of the great importance for the United Kingdom of the question of agreements on jurisdiction with policy-holders domiciled outside the Community, it was necessary to incorporate the admissibility in principle of such agreements on jurisdiction expressly in the 1968 Convention. If, therefore, a policy-holder domiciled outside the Community insures a risk in England, exclusive jurisdiction may be conferred by agreement on English courts as well as on the courts of the policy-holder's domicile or others.

This basic rule had however to be limited again in two ways in the new paragraph (4) of Article 12.

138. 1. Compulsory insurance

Where a statutory obligation exists to take out insurance no departure from the provisions of Articles 8 to 11 on compulsory insurance can be permitted, even if the policy-holder is domiciled outside the Community. If a person domiciled in Switzerland owns a motor car which is normally based in Germany, then the car must, under German law, be insured against liability. Such an insurance contract may not contain provisions for jurisdiction by consent concerning accidents occurring in Germany.

The possibility of invoking the jurisdiction of German courts (Article 8) cannot be contractually excluded. This is so even although the relevant German law of 5 April 1965 on compulsory insurance (Bundesgesetzblatt I, page 213) does not expressly prohibit agreements on jurisdiction. However, in practice German law prevents the conclusion of agreements on jurisdiction in the area of compulsory insurance because approval of conditions of insurance containing such a provision would be withheld.

Compulsory insurance exists in the following Member States of the Community for the following articles, installations, activities and occupations, although this list does not claim to be complete:

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY (37)

1. Federal

Liability insurance compulsory for owners of motor vehicles, airline companies, hunters, owners of nuclear installations and handling of nuclear combustible materials and other radioactive materials, road haulage, accountants and tax advisers, security firms, those responsible for schools for nursing, infant and child care and midwifery, automobile experts, notaries' professional organizations, those responsible for development aid, exhibitors, pharamaceutical firms;

2. Länder

There is no uniformity as between the Länder of the Federal Republic of Germany, but there is in particular compulsory fire insurance for buildings, compulsory pension funds for agricultural workers, the liberal professions (doctors, chemists, architects, notaries) and (in Bavaria, for example) members of the Honourable Company of Chimney Sweeps and, for example, a supplementary pension fund for workers in the Free and Hanseatic City of Bremen. In Bavaria there is compulsory insurance for livestock intended for slaughter.

Employers' liability in respect of accidents at work;

Insurance of nuclear installations;

Insurance of British registered ships against oil pollution;

Compulsory insurance scheme for a number of professions, e. g. solicitors and insurance brokers.

139. 2. Insurance of immovable property

The second exception referred to at the end of paragraph 137 is particularly designed to ensure that Article 9 continues to apply even when the policy-holder is domiciled outside the Community. However, this exception has further implications. It prohibits jurisdiction agreements conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the courts mentioned in Article 9. This applies even where the national law of the State in which the immovable property is situated allows agreements conferring jurisdiction in such circumstances.

II. Insurance of large risks, in particular marine and aviation insurance

140. The United Kingdom's request for special rules for the insurance of large risks was probably the most difficult problem for the Working Party. The request was based on the realization that the concept of social protection underlying a restriction on the admissibility of provisions conferring jurisdiction in insurance matters is no longer justified where the policy-holders are powerful undertakings. The problem was one of finding a suitable demarcation line. Discussions on the second Directive on insurance had already revealed the impossibility of taking as criteria abstract, general factors like company capital or turnover. The only solution was to examine which types of insurance contracts were in general concluded only by policy-holders who did not require social protection. On this basis, special treatment could not be conceded to industrial insurance as a whole.

Accordingly, the Working Party directed its attention to the various classes of insurance connected with the transport industry. In this area there is an additional justification for special treatment for agreements on jurisdiction: the risks insured are highly mobile and insurance policies tend to change hands several times in quick succession. This leads to uncertainty as to which courts will have jurisdiction and the difficulties in calculating risks are thereby greatly increased. On the other hand, there are here, too, certain areas requiring social protection. Particular complications were caused by the fact that there is a well integrated insurance market for the transport industry. The various types of risk for different means of transport are usually covered under one single policy. The British insurance industry in particular has developed standard policies which only require for their completion a notification by the insured that the means of transport (which can be of many different types) have set off.

The result of a consideration of all these matters is the solution which figures in the new paragraph (5) of Article 12, as supplemented by Article 12a: agreements on jurisdiction are in principle to be given special treatment in marine insurance and in some sectors of aviation insurance. In the case of insurance of transport by land alone no exceptional rules of any kind appeared justified.

In order to avoid difficulties and differences of interpretation, a list had to be drawn up of the types of policy for which the admissibility of agreements on jurisdiction was to be extended. The idea of referring for this purpose to the list of classes of insurance appearing in the Annex to the First Council Directive of 24 July 1973 (73/239/EEC) proved inadequate. The classification used there took account of the requirements of State administration of insurance, and was not directed towards a fair balancing of private insurance interests. There was thus no alternative but to draw up a separate list for the purposes of the 1968 Convention. The following comments apply to the list and the classes of insurance not included in it.

141. 1. Article 12 a (1) (a)

This provision applies only to hull insurance and not to liability insurance. The term 'seagoing ships' means all vessels intended to travel on the sea. This includes not only ships in the traditional sense of the word but also hovercraft, hydrofoils, barges and lighters used at sea. It also covers floating apparatus which cannot move under its own power, e.g. oil exploration and extraction installations which are moved about on water. Installations firmly moored or to be moored on the seabed are in any event expressly included in the text of the provision. The provision also covers ships in the course of construction, but only in so far as the damage is the result of a maritime risk. This is damage caused by the fact that the ship is on the water and not therefore, damage which occurs in dry-dock or in the workshops of shipyards.

142. 2. Article 12a (1) (b)

In the same way as (1) (a) covers the value of the hull of a ship or of an aeroplane, (1) (b) covers the value of goods destroyed or lost in transit, but not liability insurance for any loss or damage caused by those goods. The most important single decision taken on the provision was the addition of the words 'consists of or includes'. The reason for this is that goods in transit are frequently not conveyed by the same means of transport right to their final destination. There may be a sequence of journeys by land, sea and air. There would be unwarranted complications for the insurance industry in drafting policies and settling claims, if a fine distinction had always to be drawn as to the section of transit in which loss or damage had occurred. Moreover it is often impossible to ascertain this. One has only to think of container transport to realize how easily a loss may be discovered only at the destination. Practical considerations therefore required that agreements on jurisdiction be permitted, even where goods are carried by sea or by air for only part of their journey. Even if it can be proved that the loss occurred in the course of transport on land, agreements on jurisdiction permitted by the new paragraph (5) of Article 12 remain effective. The provision applies even if the shipment does not cross any national border.

143. The exception in respect of injury to passengers and loss of or damage to their baggage, which is repeated in Article 12a (2) (a) and (b), is justified by the fact that such persons as a group tend to have a weaker economic position and less bargaining power.

144. 3. Article 12a (2) (a)

Whether these provisions also cover all liability arising in connection with the construction, modification and repair of a ship; whether therefore the provision includes all liability which the shipyard incurs towards third parties and which was caused by the ship; or whether the expression 'use or operation' has to be construed more narrowly as applying only to liability arising in the course of a trial voyage — all these are questions of interpretation which still await an answer. The exception for compulsory aircraft insurance is intended to leave the Member States free to provide for such protection as they consider necessary for the policy-holder and for the victim.

145. 4. Article 12a (2) (b)

As there is no reason to treat combined transport any differently for liability insurance than for hull insurance, it is equally irrelevant during which section of the transport the circumstances causing the liability occurred (see paragraphs 142 and 143).

146. 5. Article 12a (3)

The most important application of this provision is stated in the text itself. In the absence of a provision to the contrary in the charter party, an air crash would cause the carrier to lose his entitlement to freight and the owner his charter-fee from the charterer. Another example might be loss caused by the late arrival of a ship. For the rest the notion is the same as that used in Directive 73/239/EEC.

147. 6. Article 12a (4)

Insurance against ancillary risks is a familiar practice, especially in United Kingdom insurance contracts. An example would be 'shipowner's disbursements' consisting of exceptional operational costs, e.g. harbour dues accruing whilst a ship remains disabled. Another example is insurance against 'increased value', providing protection against loss arising from the fact that a destroyed or damaged cargo had increased in value during transit.

The provision does not require an ancillary risk to be insured under the same policy as the main risk to which it relates. The Working Party therefore deliberately opted for a somewhat different wording from that in Directive 73/239/EEC for the 'ancillary risks' referred to in that Directive. The definition in that Directive could not be used since it is concerned with a different subject, the authorization of insurance undertakings.

148. III. The remaining scope of Articles 9 and 10

The revised text of Article 12, like the original text, does not expressly deal with the effect of agreements on jurisdiction or the special jurisdictions for insurance matters set out in Section 3. Nevertheless, the legal position is clear from the systematic construction of Section 3 of the 1968 Convention, as amended. Agreements on jurisdiction cover all legal proceedings between insurer and policy-holder, even where the latter wishes, pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 10, to join the insurer in the court in which he himself is sued by the injured party. However, jurisdiction clauses in insurance contracts cannot be binding upon third parties. The provisions of the second paragraph of Article 10 concerning a direct action by the injured party are thus not affected by such jurisdiction clauses. The same is true of the third paragraph of Article 10.

IV. Other problems of adjustment and clarification in insurance law

149. 1. Co-insurance

The substantive amendment in the first paragraph of Article 8 covers jurisdiction where several co-insurers are parties to a contract of insurance. What usually happens is that one insurer acts as leader for the other co-insurers and each of them underwrites a part of the risk, possibly a very small part. In such cases, however, there is no justification for permitting all the insurers, including the leader, to be sued in the courts of each State in which any one of the many co-insurers is domiciled. The only additional international jurisdiction which can be justified would be one which relates to the circumstances of the leading insurer. The Working Party considered at length whether to refer to the leading insurer's domicile, but the effect of this would have been that the remaining co-insurers could be sued there even if the leader was sued elsewhere. An additional jurisdiction based on the leading insurer's circumstances is justifiable only if it leads to a concentration of actions arising out of an insured event. The new version of the first paragraph of Article 8 therefore refers to the court where proceedings are brought against the leading insurer. Co-insurers can thus be sued for their share of the insurance in that court, at the same time as the leading insurer or subsequently. However, the provision does not impose an obligation for proceedings to be concentrated in one court; there is nothing to prevent a policy-holder from suing the various co-insurers in different courts. If the leading insurer has settled the claim out of court, the policy-holder must bring any action against the other co-insurers in one of the courts having jurisdiction under points (1) or (2) of the new version of the first paragraph of Article 8.

The remaining amendments to the first paragraph of Article 8 merely rephrase it for the sake of greater clarity.

150. 2. Insurance agents, the setting up of branches

There was discussion on the present text of the second paragraph of Article 8 of the 1968 Convention because its wording might give rise to the misunderstanding that jurisdiction could be founded not only on the intervention of an agent of the insurer, but also on that of an independent insurance broker of the type common in the United Kingdom. The discussion revealed that this provision was unnecessary in view of Article 5 (5). The Working Party therefore changed the present paragraph three into paragraph two. The addition of the words 'or other establishment' is intended merely to ensure consistency between Article 5 (5) and the third paragraph of the new Article 13. The latter provision is necessary in addition to the former in order to prevent Article 4 being applicable.

151. 3. Reinsurance

Reinsurance contracts cannot be equated with insurance contracts. Accordingly, Articles 7 to 12 do not apply to reinsurance contracts.

152. 4. The term 'policy-holder'

The previous authentic texts of the 1968 Convention use the term 'preneur d'assurance' and the equivalent in German, Italian and Dutch; the nearest English equivalent of the term proved to be 'the policy-holder'. However, this should not give rise to the misunderstanding that the problems arising from a transfer of legal rights are now any different from those existing before the accession of the new Member States to the Convention. The rightful possessor of the policy document is not always the 'preneur d'assurance'. It is of course conceivable that the whole legal status of the other party to the contract with the insurer might pass to another person by inheritance or some other means, in which case the new party to the contract would become the 'preneur d'assurance'. However, this case must be clearly distinguished from the transfer of individual rights arising out of the contract of insurance, especially in the form of assignment of the sum assured to a beneficiary. Such an assignment may be made in advance and may be contingent, for instance, upon the occurrence of a claim. In this event it is conceivable that the insurance policy might be passed on to the beneficiary at the same time as the assignment of the right to the sum assured so that he can claim his entitlement from the insurer, if the case arises. The beneficiary would not thereby become the 'preneur d'assurance'. Hence, where a court's jurisdiction is dependent on individual characteristics of the 'preneur d'assurance', the situation remains unchanged as a result of prior assignment of any claim to the sum assured which might arise, even if the policy document is transferred at the same time.

152. (a) 5. Agreements on jurisdiction between parties to a contract from the same State

For the amendment to Article 12 (3) ('at the time of conclusion of the contract'), see paragraph 161 (a).

Section 4

Jurisdiction over consumer contracts

153. I. Principles

Leaving aside insurance matters, the 1968 Convention pays heed to consumer protection considerations only in one small section, that dealing with instalment sales and loans. This was consistent with the law as it then stood in the original Member States of the Community since it was in fact at first only in the field of instalment sales and loans that awareness of the need to protect the consumer against unfairly worded contracts became widespread. Since that time legislation in the Member States of the Community has become concerned with much broader-based consumer protection. In particular there has been a general move in consumer protection legislation to ensure appropriate jurisdictions for the consumer. Intolerable tensions would be bound to develop between national legislation and the 1968 Convention in the long run if the Convention did not afford the consumer much the same protection in the case of transfrontier contracts as he received under national legislation. The Working Party therefore decided to propose that the previous Section 4 of Title II be extended into a section on jurisdiction over consumer contracts, establishing at the same time for future purposes that only final consumers acting in a private capacity should be given special protection and not those contracting in the course of their business to pay by instalments for goods and services used. The Working Party was influenced on this last point by the proceedings in the Court of Justice of the European Communities in response to a reference from the French Cour de cassation concerning the interpretation of 'instalment sales and loans', proceedings which centred on the question of whether the existing Section 4 of Title II covered instalment sales contracts concluded by businessmen (Case 150/77: Société Bertrand v. Paul Ott KG).

The basic principle underlying the provisions of the new section is to draw upon ideas emerging from European Community law as it has evolved and is currently evolving. Consequently, most of the existing provisions on instalment sales and loans have been incorporated in the new section, which also draws on Article 5 of the preliminary draft Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations. On points of drafting detail, however, improvements were made on the wording of the preliminary draft Convention. One substantive change was necessary, since to accord with the general structure of the 1968 Convention reference had to be made to the place where the parties are domiciled, rather than habitually resident. Details are as follows:

154. II. The scope of the new Section

Using the device of an introductory provision defining the scope of the Section, the proposal follows the practice previously adopted at the beginning of Sections 3 and 4 of Title II.

1. Persons covered

155. The only new point of principle is a provision governing the persons covered by the section, including in particular the legal definition of the section's central term, the 'consumer'. The substances of the definition is taken from Article 5 of the preliminary draft Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations the most recent version of which was used by the Working Party. The amendments made were only drafting improvements.

2. Subject matter covered

156. As regards the subject matter covered by the new section, a clear distinction is drawn between instalment sales, including the financing of such sales, and other consumer contracts. The consequent effect on the precedence of the provisions of Sections 3 and 4 is as follows: Section 3 is a more specific provision than Section 4 and hence takes precedence over it. A contract of insurance is not a contract for the supply of services within the meaning of the 1968 Convention. Within Section 4, the provisions on instalment sales are more specific than the general reference to consumer sales in the first paragraph of Article 13.

157. (a) As in the past, instalment sales are subject to the special provisions without any further preconditions. The sole change lies in the stipulation that the special provisions apply only where the purchaser is a private consumer. The rules governing instalment sales also apply automatically to the legal institution of hire purchase, which has developed into the commonest legal form for transacting instalment sales in the United Kingdom and Ireland. For reasons which are not material for jurisdiction purposes, instalment sales in those countries usually take the form in law of a contract of hire with an option to purchase for the hirer. In form the instalments represent the hire fee, whereas in substance they form the purchase price. At the end of the prescribed 'hire' period, once all the prescribed instalments of the 'hire fee' have been paid, the 'hirer' is entitled to purchase the article for a nominal price. As the term 'instalment sale' under the continental legal systems by no means implies that ownership of the article must necessarily pass to the purchaser at the same time as physical possession, hire purchase is in practice tantamount to an instalment sale.

Contracts to finance instalment sales to private consumers are also subject to the special provisions without any further preconditions. Contrary to the legal position obtaining hitherto, the Working Party has made actions arising out of a loan contract to finance the purchase of movable property subject to the special provision, even if the loan itself is not repayable by instalments or if the article is purchased with a single payment (normally with the funds lent). Credit contracts are not, moreover, contracts for the supply of services, so that, apart from point (2) of the first paragraph of Article 13, the whole of Section 4 does not apply to such contracts. Contracts of sale not falling under point (1) of the first paragraph of Article 13 do not, for instance, come under point (2) of that paragraph, although Section 4 may be applicable to them subject to the further conditions contained in point (3) (see paragraph 158).

158. (b) On the other hand, consumer contracts other than those referred to in paragraph 157 are subject to the special provisions only if there is a sufficiently strong connection with the place where the consumer is domiciled. In this, the new provisions once again follow the preliminary draft Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations. Both the conditions referred to in point (3) of the first paragraph of Article 13—an offer or advertising in the State of the consumer's domicile, and steps necessary for the conclusion of the contract taken by the consumer in that State—must be satisfied. The introductory phrase should, moreover, ensure that Articles 4 and 5 (5) will apply to all consumer contracts, as has until now been the case only for instalment sales and for loans repayable by instalments. One particular consequence of this is that, subject to the second paragraph of Article 13, Section 4 does not apply where the defendant is not domiciled in the EEC.

For further details of what is meant by 'a specific invitation' or 'advertising' in the State of the consumer's domicile and by 'the steps necessary for the conclusion of the contract', see the report currently being drawn up by Professor Giuliano on the Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations.

3. Only a branch, agency or other establishment within the Community

159. The exclusion from the scope of Section 4 of contracts between consumers and firms domiciled outside the EEC would not be reasonable where such firms have a branch, agency or other establishment within the EEC. Under the national laws upon which jurisdiction is to be founded in such cases pursuant to Article 4, it would often be impossible for the consumer to sue in the courts which would be guaranteed to have jurisdiction for his purposes in the case of contracts with parties domiciled within the EEC. Insurers with branches, agencies or other establishments in the EEC are treated as regards jurisdiction in like manner to those domiciled within the Community (Article 8) and for the same reasons the other parties to contracts with consumers must also be deemed to be domiciled within the EEC if they have a branch, agency of other establishment in the Community. It is, however, only logical that it should not be possible to invoke exorbitant jurisdictions against such parties simply because their head office lies outside the EEC.

4. Contracts of transport

160. The last paragraph of Article 13 is again taken from Article 5 of the preliminary draft Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations. The reason for leaving contracts of transport out of the scope of the special consumer protection provisions in the 1968 Convention is that such contracts are subject under international agreements to special sets of rules with very considerable ramifications, and the inclusion of those contracts in the 1968 Convention purely for jurisdictional purposes would merely complicate the legal position. Moreover, the total exclusion of contracts of transport from the scope of Section 4 means that Sections 1 and 2 and hence in particular Article 5 (1) remain applicable.

161. III. The substance of the provisions of Section 4

There are only a few points requiring a brief explanation of the substance of the new provisions.

1. Subsequent change of domicile by the consumer

In substance, the new Article 14 closely follows the existing Article 14, while extending it to actions arising from all consumer contracts. The rearrangement of the text is merely a rewording due to the availability of a convenient description for one party to the contract, the 'consumer', which was better placed at the beginning of the text so as to make it more easily comprehensible. The Working Party's decision means in substance that, as in the case with the existing Article 14, the consumer may sue in the courts of his new State of domicile if he moves to another Community State after concluding the contract out of which an action subsequently arises. This only becomes practical, however, in the case of the instalment sales and credit contracts referred to in points (1) and (2) of the first paragraph of Article 13. For actions arising out of other consumer contracts the new Section 4 will in virtually all cases cease to be applicable if the consumer transfers his domicile to another State after conclusion of the contract. This is because the steps necessary for the conclusion of the contract will almost always not have been taken in the new State of domicile. The cross-frontier advertising requirement also ensures that the special provisions will in practice not be applicable to contracts between two persons neither of whom is acting in a professional or trading capacity.

2. Agreements on jurisdiction

161a. The new version of Article 15, too, is in substance based on the existing version relating to instalment sales and loans. The only addition is intended to make it clear that it is at the time of conclusion of the contract, and not when proceedings are subsequently instituted, that the parties must be domiciled in the same State. It was then necessary to align and clarify Article 12 (3) in the same way.

Although Article 13 is not expressed to be subject to Article 17, the Working Party was unanimously of the opinion that agreements on jurisdiction must, in so far as they are permitted at all, comply with the formal requirements of Article 17. Since the form of such agreements is not governed by Section 4, it must be governed by Article 17.

Exclusive jurisdiction

162. The only amendment proposed by the Working Party to the cases of exclusive jurisdiction provided for in Article 16 is a technical amendment in Article Vd of the Protocol annexed to the 1968 Convention, to clarify Article 16 (4). The Working Party did, however, spend some time discussing paragraphs (1) and (2) of that Article. Details of the information supplied to the new Member States regarding exclusive jurisdiction in actions relating to the validity of the constitution of companies or to their dissolution have already been given elsewhere (see paragraph 56 et seq.). It is only necessary to add that a company may have more than one seat. Where under a legal system it is possible for a company to have two seats, and it is that system which, pursuant to Article 53 of the 1968 Convention, is to determine the seat of the company, the existence of two seats has to be accepted. It is then open to the plaintiff to choose which of the two seats he will use to base the jurisdiction of the court for his action. Finally, it should be pointed out that Article 16 (2) also applies to partnerships established under United Kingdom and Irish law (see paragraph 55).

Thus essentially the only exclusive jurisdiction left to be dealt with more fully here is that in respect of actions relating to rights in rem in, or tenancies of, immovable property. There were five problems with regard to which the new Member States had requested explanations.

163. There was no difficulty in clarifying that actions for damages based on infringement of rights in rem or in damage to property in which rights in rem exist do not fall within the scope of Article 16 (1). In that context the existence and content of such rights in rem, usually rights of ownership, are only of marginal significance.

164. The Working Party was unable to agree whether actions concerned only with rent, i.e. dealing simply with the recovery of a debt, are excluded from the scope of Article 16 (1) as, according to the Jenard report, was the opinion of the Committee which drafted the 1968 Convention ([38]). However, the underlying principle of the provision quite clearly does not require its application to short-term agreements for use and occupation such as, for example, holiday accommodation.

165. Two of the three remaining problems which the Working Party examined relate to the differences between the law of immovable property on the continent and the corresponding law in the United Kingdom and Ireland; they require therefore somewhat more detailed comments. There is, first, the question what are rights in rem (1) within the meaning of Article 16 (1), and, secondly, the problem of disputes arising in connection with the transfer of immovable property (2). Certain other problems emerged as a result of developments which have taken place in the meantime in international patent law (3).

1. Rights 'in rem' in immovable property in the Member States of the Community

166. (a) The concept of a right in rem — as distinct from a right in personam — is common to the legal systems of the original Member States of the EEC, even though the distinction does not appear everywhere with the same clarity.

A right in personam can only be claimed against a particular person; thus only the purchaser is obliged to pay the purchase price and only the lessor of an article is obliged to permit its use.

A right in rem, on the other hand, is available against the whole world. The most important legal consequence flowing from the nature of a right in rem is that its owner is entitled to demand that the thing in which it exists be given up by anyone not enjoying a prior right.

In the legal systems of all the original Member States of the EEC without exception, there are only a restricted number of rights in rem, even though they do not rigidly apply the principle. Some rights in rem are defined only in outline, with freedom for the parties to agree the details. The typical rights in rem are listed under easily identifiable heads of the civil law, which in all six countries is codified ([39]). In addition, a few rights in rem are included in some special laws, the most important of which are those on the co-ownership of real property. Apart from ownership as the most comprehensive right in rem, a distinction can be made between certain rights of enjoyment and certain priority rights to secure liabilities. All the legal systems know the concept of usufruct, which confers extensive rights to enjoyment of a property. More restricted rights of enjoyment can also exist in these legal systems in various ways.

167. (b) At first glance there appears to be in United Kingdom and Irish law too a small, strictly circumscribed group of statutory rights corresponding to the Continental rights in rem. However, the position is more complicated, because these legal systems distinguish between law and equity.

In this connection it has always to be borne in mind that equity also constitutes law and not something merely akin to fairness lying outside the concept of law. As a consequence of these special concepts of law and equity in the United Kingdom and in Ireland, equitable interests can exist in immovable property in addition to the legal rights.

In the United Kingdom the system of legal rights has its origin in the idea that all land belongs to the Crown and that the citizen can only have limited rights in immovable property. This is the reason why the term 'ownership' does not appear in the law of immovable property. However, the estate in fee simple absolute in possession is equivalent to full ownership under the Continental legal systems. In addition the Law of property Act 1925 provides for full ownership for a limited period of time ('term of years absolute'). The same Act limits restricted rights in immovable property ('interests or charges in or over land') to five. All the others are equitable interests, whose number and content are not limited by the Act. Equitable interests are not, however, merely the equivalent of personal rights on the Continent. Some can be registered and then, like legal rights, have universal effect, even against purchasers in good faith. Even if not registered they operate in principle against all the world; only purchasers in good faith who had no knowledge of them are protected in such a case ([40]). If the owner of an estate in fee simple absolute in possession grants another person a right of way over his property for the period of that person's life, this cannot amount to a legal right. It can only be an equitable interest, though capable of registration ([41]). Equitable interests can thus fulfil the same functions as rights in rem under the Continental legal systems, in which case they must be treated as such under Article 16 (1). There is no limit to the number of such interests. The granting of equitable interests is on the contrary the method used for achieving any number of subdivisions of proprietary rights ([42]).

168. (c) If an action relating to immovable property is brought in a particular State and the question whether the action is concerned with a right in rem within the meaning of Article 16 (1) arises, the answer can hardly be derived from any law other than that of the situs.

2. Actions in connection with obligations to transfer immovable property

169. The legal systems of the original and the new Member States of the Community also differ as regards the manner in which ownership of immovable property is transferred on sale. Admittedly the legal position even within the original Member States differs in this respect.

170. (a) German law distinguishes most clearly between the transfer itself and the contract of sale (or other contract designed to bring about a transfer). The legal position in the case of immovable property is no different from that obtaining in the case of movable property. The transfer is a special type of legal transaction which in the case of immovable property is called 'Auflassung' (conveyance) and which even between the parties becomes effective only on entry in the land register. Where a purchaser of German immovable property brings proceedings on the basis of a contract for sale of immovable property which is governed by German law, the subject matter of such proceedings is never a right in rem in the property. The only matter in issue is the defendant's personal obligation to carry out all acts necessary to transfer and hand over the property. If one of the parties fails to fulfil its obligations under a contract for sale of immovable property, the remedy in German law is not a court order for rescission, but a claim for damages and the right to rescind the contract.

Admittedly it is possible with the vendor's consent to protect the contractual claim for a transfer of ownership by means of a caution in the land register. In that case the claim has, as against third parties, effects which normally only attach to a right in rem. The consequence for German domestic law is that nowadays rights secured by such a caution may be claimed against third parties in the jurisdiction competent to deal with the property concerned ([43]). However, any proceedings for a transfer of ownership against the vendor himself would remain an action based on a personal obligation.

171. (b) Under French, Belgian and Luxembourg law, which is largely followed by Italian law, the ownership, at any rate as between the parties, passes to the purchaser as soon as the contract of sale is concluded, just as it does in the case of movable property, unless the parties have agreed a later date (see e.g. Article 711 and 1583 of the French Civil Code and Article 1376 of the Italian Civil Code). The purchaser need only enter the transfer of ownership in the land register ('transcription') to acquire a legal title which is also effective against third parties. For the purchaser to bring proceedings for performance of the contract is therefore normally equivalent to a claim that the property be handed over him. Admittedly this claim is based not only on the obligation which the vendor undertook by the contract of sale, but also on ownership which at that point has already passed to the purchaser. This means that the claim for handing over the property has as its basis both a personal obligation and a right in rem. The system of remedies which is available in the event of one party to a contract not complying with its obligations is fully in accordance with this. Accordingly, French domestic law has treated such actions as a 'matière mixte' and given the plaintiff the right to choose between the jurisdiction applicable to the right in rem and the jurisdiction applicable to the personal obligation arising from the contract, i.e. the law of the defendant's domicile or of the place of performance of the contract ([44]).

The 1968 Convention does not deal with this problem. It would seem that the personal aspect of such claims predominates and Article 16 (1) is inapplicable.

172. (c) In the United Kingdom ownership passes on the conclusion of a contract of sale only in the case of movable property. In the case of a sale of immovable property the transfer of ownership follows the conclusion of the contract of sale and is effected by means of a separate document, the conveyance. If necessary, the purchaser has to bring an action for all necessary acts to be performed by the vendor. However, except in Scotland, in contrast with German law, the purchaser's rights prior to the transfer of ownership are not limited to a personal claim against the vendor. In fact the purchaser has an equitable interest (see paragraph 167) in the property which, provided the contract is protected by a notice on the Land Register, is also effective against third parties. Admittedly the new paragraph (6) of Article 5 does not apply (see paragraph 114 et seq.), because a contract of sale does not create a trust within the meaning of Article 5 (6), even if it is in writing. It is only in one respect that a purchaser's equitable interest does not place him in as strong a position as the French owner of immovable property prior to 'transcription' (see paragraph 171): the vendor's cooperation is still required to make the new owner's legal title fully effective.

This legal position would justify application of the exclusive jurisdiction referred to in Article 16 (1) even less than the corresponding position under French law. The common law has developed the concept of equitable interests so as to confer on parties to an agreement which originally gave them nothing more than merely personal rights a certain protection as against third parties not acting in good faith. As against the other party to the contract the claim remains purely a personal one, as does a claim, under German law, to transfer of ownership (see paragraph 170) secured by a caution in the Land Register. In Scotland contracts in favour of a third party are enforceable by that party (jus quaesitum tertii).

Actions based on contracts for the transfer of ownership or other rights in rem affecting immovable property do not therefore have as their object rights in rem. Accordingly they may also be brought before courts outside the United Kingdom. Admittedly, care will have to be exercised in that case to ensure that the plaintiff clearly specifies the acts to be done by the defendant so that the transfer of ownership (governed by United Kingdom law) does indeed become effective.

173. 3. Jurisdiction in connection with patent disputes

Since the 1968 Convention entered into force, two Conventions on patents have been signed which are of the greatest international importance. The Munich Convention on the grant of European patents was signed on 5 October 1973 and the Luxembourg Convention for the European patent for the common market was signed on 15 December 1975. The purpose of the Munich Convention is to introduce a common patent application procedure for the Contracting States, though the patent subsequently granted is national in scale. It is valid for one or more States, its substance in each case being basically that of a corresponding patent granted nationally. The aim of the Luxembourg Convention is to institute in addition a patent granted ab initio for all States of the Community in a standard manner and with the same substance, based on Community law; such a patent necessarily remains valid or expires uniformly throughout the EEC.

Both instruments contain specific provisions on jurisdiction which take precedence over the 1968 Convention. However, the special jurisdiction provisions relate only to specific matters, such as applications for the revocation of patents pursuant to the Luxembourg Convention. Article 16 (4) of the 1968 Convention remains relevant for actions for which no specific provision is made. In the case of European patents under the Munich Convention it is conceivable that this provision might be construed as meaning that actions must be brought in the State in which the patent was applied for and not in the State for which it is valid and in which it is challenged. The new Article Vd of the Protocol annexed to the 1968 Convention is designed to prevent this interpretation and ensure that only the courts of the State in which the patent is valid have jurisdiction, unless the Munich Convention itself lays down special provisions.

Clearly, such a provision cannot cover a Community patent under the Luxembourg Convention, since the governing principle is that the patent is granted, not for a given State, but for all the Member States of the EEC. Hence the exception at the end of the new provision. However, even in the area covered by the Luxembourg Convention patents valid for one or more, but not all, States of the Community are possible. Article 86 of that Convention allows this for a transitional period to which no term has yet been set. Where the applicant for a patent takes up the option available to him under this provision and applies for a patent for one or more, but not all, States of the EEC, the patent is not a Community patent even though it comes under some of the provisions of the Luxembourg Convention but merely a patent granted for one or more States. Accordingly, the courts of that State have exclusive jurisdiction under Article Vd of the Protocol annexed to the 1968 Convention. The same is true for any case in which a national patent is granted in response to an international application, e.g. under the Patent cooperation Treaty opened for signature at Washington on 19 June 1970.

It only remains to be made clear that Article 16 (4) of the 1968 Convention and the new Article Vd of the Protocol annexed to the Convention also cover actions which national legislation allows to be brought at the patent application stage, so as to reduce the risk of a patent being granted, and the correctness of the grant being subsequently challenged.

Jurisdiction by consent [45]

174. Article 17, applying as it does only if the transaction in question is international in character (see paragraph 21), which the mere fact of choosing a court in a particular State is by no means sufficient to establish, presented the Working Party with four problems. First, account had to be taken of the practice of courts in the United Kingdom (excluding Scotland) and Ireland of deducing from the choice of law to govern the main issue an agreement as to the courts having jurisdiction. Secondly, there was the problem, previously ignored by the 1968 Convention, of agreements conferring jurisdiction upon a court outside the Community or agreements conferring jurisdiction upon courts within the Community by two parties both domiciled outside the Community. Thirdly, special rules had to be made for provisions in trusts. And finally, the Working Party had to consider whether it was reasonable to let Article 17 stand in view of the interpretation which had been placed upon it by the Court of Justice of the European Communites. It should be repeated (see paragraph 22) that the existence of an agreement conferring jurisdiction on a court other than the court seised of the proceedings is one of the points to be taken into account by the court of its own motion.

1. Choice-of-law clause and international jurisdiction

175. Nowhere in the 1968 Convention is there recognition of a connection between the law applicable to a particular issue and the international jurisdiction of the courts over that issue. However, persons who, relying on the practice of United Kingdom or Irish courts, have agreed on choice-of-law clauses before the entry into force of the Accession Convention, are entitled to expect protection. This explains the transitional provision contained in Article 35 of the proposed Accession Convention. The term 'entry into force' within the meaning of this provision refers to the date on which the Accession Convention comes into effect in the State in question. For the various systems of law applying in the United Kingdom, see paragraph 11.

2. Agreements conferring jurisdiction on courts outside the Community

176. (a) In cases where parties agree to bring their disputes before the courts of a State which is not a party to the 1968 Convention there is obviously nothing in the 1968 Convention to prevent such courts from declaring themselves competent, if their law recognizes the validity of such an agreement. The only question is whether and, if so, in what form such agreements are capable of depriving Community courts of jurisdiction which is stated by the 1968 Convention to be exclusive or concurrent. There is nothing in the 1968 Convention to support the conclusion that such agreements must be inadmissible in principle ([46]). However, the 1968 Convention does not contain any rules as to their validity either. If a court within the Community is applied to despite such an agreement, its decision on the validity of the agreement depriving it of jurisdiction must be taken in accordance with its own lex fori. In so far as the local rules of conflict of laws support the authority of provisions of foreign law, the latter will apply. If, when these tests are applied, the agreement is found to be invalid, then the jurisdictional provisions of the 1968 Convention become applicable.

177. (b) On the other hand, proceedings can be brought before a court within the Community by parties who, although both domiciled outside the Community, have agreed that that court should have jurisdiction. There is no reason for the Convention to include rules on the conditions under which the court stipulated by such parties must accept jurisdiction. It is however important for the Community to ensure, by means of more detailed conditons, that the effect of such an agreement on jurisdiction is recognized throughout the EEC. The new third sentence of the first paragraph of Article 17 is designed to cater for this. It covers the situation where, despite the fact that both parties are domiciled outside the Community, a court in a Community State ('X') would, were it not for a jurisdiction agreement, have jurisdiction, e.g. on the ground that the place of performance lies within that State. If in such a case the parties agree that the courts of another Community State are to have exclusive jurisdiction, that agreement must be observed by the courts of State X, provided the agreement meets the formal requirements of Article 17. Strictly speaking, it is true, this is not a necessary adjustment. Such situations were possible before, in relations between the original Member States of the Community. However, owing to the frequency with which jurisdiction is conferred upon United Kingdom courts in international trade, the problem takes on considerably greater importance with the United Kingdom's accession to the Convention than hitherto.

3. Jurisdiction clauses in trusts

178. A trust (see paragraph 111) need not be established by contract. A unilateral legal instrument is sufficient. As the previous version of Article 17 dealt only with 'agreements' on jurisdiction, it needed to be expanded.

4. The form of agreements on jurisdiction in international trade

179. Some of the first judgments given by the Court of Justice of the European Communities since it was empowered to interpret the 1968 Convention were concerned with the form of jurisdiction clauses incorporated in standardized general conditions of trade ([47]). The Court of Justice's interpretation of Article 17 of the 1968 Convention does protect the other party to a contract with anyone using such general conditions of trade from the danger of inadvertently finding himself bound by standard forms of agreement containing jurisdiction clauses without realizing it. However, the Court's interpretation of that Article, which many national courts have also shown a tendency to follow ([45]), does not cater adequately for the customs and requirements of international trade. In particular, the requirement that the other party to a contract with anyone employing general conditions of trade has to give written confirmation of their inclusion in the contract before any jurisdiction clause in those conditions can be effective is unacceptable in international trade. International trade is heavily dependent on standard conditions which incorporate jurisdiction clauses. Nor are those conditions in many cases unilaterally dictated by one set of interests in the market; they have frequently been negotiated by representatives of the various interests. Owing to the need for calculations based on constantly fluctuating market prices, it has to be possible to conclude contracts swiftly by means of a confirmation of order incorporating sets of conditions. These are the factors behind the relaxation of the formal provisions for international trade in the amended version of Article 17. This is however, as should be clearly emphasized, only a relaxation of the formal requirements. It must be proved that a consensus existed on the inclusion in the contract of the general conditions of trade and the particular provisions, though this is not the place to pass comment on whether questions of consensus other than the matter of form should be decided according to the national laws applicable or to unified EEC principles. Dealing with the form of jurisdiction agreements in a separate second sentence in the first paragraph of Article 17, rather than in passing in the first sentence as hitherto, is designed merely to obviate rather cumbersome wording.

Section 7

Examination of own motion

Adjustments and further clarification were not necessary.

Section 8

'Lis pendens' and related actions ([48])

180. As regards lis pendens, there are two structural differences between the laws of the United Kingdom and Ireland, on the one hand, and the Continental legal systems on the other. However, neither of them necessitated a technical amendment of the 1968 Convention.

1. Discretion of the court

181. The rules governing lis pendens in England and Wales, and to some extent in Scotland, are more flexible than those on the Continent. Basically, it is a question for the court's discretion whether a stay should be granted. The doctrine of lis pendens is therefore less fully developed there than in the Continental States. The practice is in a sense an application of the doctrine of forum conveniens (see paragraph 77 et seq.). Generally a court will in fact grant an application for a stay of proceedings, where the matter in dispute is already pending before another court. Where proceedings are pending abroad, the courts in England and Wales exercise great caution, and if they grant a stay of proceedings at all, they will do so only if the plaintiff in England or Wales is also the plaintiff in the proceedings abroad. Scottish courts take into account to a considerable extent any conflicting proceedings which a Scottish defendant may have instituted abroad, or which are pending against him abroad.

After the United Kingdom has acceded to the 1968 Convention, it will no longer be possible for this practice to be maintained in relation to the other Member States of the Community. United Kingdom courts will have to acknowledge the existence of proceedings instituted in the other Member States, and even to take notice of them of their own motion (see paragraph 22).

2. Moment at which proceedings become pending

182. The fact that the moment at which proceedings become pending is determined differently in the United Kingdom and Ireland from the way it is determined on the Continent is due to peculiarities of procedural law in those States. In the original Member States of the Community a claim becomes pending when the document instituting the proceedings is served ([49]). Filing with the court is sometimes sufficient. In the United Kingdom, except Scotland, and in Ireland, proceedings become pending as soon as the originating document has been issued. In Scotland, however, proceedings become pending only when service of the summons has been effected on the defender. The moment at which proceedings become pending under the national procedural law concerned is the deciding factor for the application of Article 21 of the 1968 Convention. The addition to the text of Article 20 does not concern this point. It is justified by the fact that in the United Kingdom and in Ireland foreigners who are abroad do not receive the original writ but only notification of the order of the court authorizing service.

Provisional measures

183. No particular adjustments had to be made to the provisions of the 1968 Convention concerning provisional measures. The change in emphasis which the accession of further Member States introduced into the 1968 Convention consists in this field entirely in the wide variety of provisional measures available in the law of Ireland and of the United Kingdom. This will involve certain difficulties where provisional judgments given in these States have to be given effect by the enforcement procedures of the original Member States of the Community. However, this problem does not affect only provisional measures. The integration of judgments on the main issue into the respective national enforcement procedures also involves difficulties in the relationship between Ireland and the United Kingdom on the one hand and the original Member States of the Community on the other (see paragraph 221 et seq.).

CHAPTER 5

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

GENERAL REMARKS — INTERLOCUTORY COURT DECISIONS

184. Article 25 emphasizes in terms which could hardly be clearer that every type of judgment given by a court in a Contracting State must be recognized and enforced throughout the rest of the Community. The provision is not limited to a judgment terminating the proceedings before the court, but also applies to provisional court orders. Nor does the wording of the provision indicate that interlocutory court decisions should be excluded from its scope where they do not provisionally regulate the legal relationships between the parties, but are for instance concerned only with the taking of evidence. What is more, the legal systems of the original Member States of the Community describe such interlocutory decisions in a way which corresponds to the terms given, by way of example, in Article 25. Thus, in France court decisions which order the taking of evidence are also called 'jugements (d'avant dire droit)'. In Germany they are termed '(Beweis) beschlüsse' of the court. Nevertheless, the provisions of the 1968 Convention governing recognition and enforcement are in general designed to cover only court judgments which either determine or regulate the legal relationships of the parties. An answer to the question whether, and if so which, interlocutory decisions intended to be of procedural assistance fall within the scope of the 1968 Convention cannot be given without further consideration.

1. RELATIONSHIP OF THE CONTINENTAL STATES WITH EACH OTHER

185. This matter is of no great significance as between the original Member States of the EEC, or as between the latter and Denmark. All seven States are parties to the 1954 Hague Convention relating to civil procedure. The latter governs the question of judicial assistance, particularly in the case of evidence to be taken abroad, and its provisions take precedence over the 1968 Convention by virtue of Article 57. In any case, it is always advisable in practice to make use of the machinery of the Hague Convention, which is particularly suited to the processes required for obtaining judicial assistance. See paragraph 238, and note 59 (7) on the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the service abroad of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters and on the Hague Convention of 18 March 1970 on the taking of evidence abroad in civil or commercial matters.

2. RELATIONSHIP OF THE UNITED KINGDOM AND IRELAND WITH THE OTHER MEMBER STATES

186. It is only with the accession of the United Kingdom and Ireland to the 1968 Convention that the problem assumes any degree of importance. Ireland has concluded no convention judicial assistance of any kind with the other States of the European Community. Agreements on judicial assistance do, however, exist between the United Kingdom and the following States: the Federal Republic of Germany (Agreement of 20 March 1928), the Netherlands (Agreement of 17 November 1967). The United Kingdom is also party to the Hague Conventions of 1965 and 1970 referred to in paragraph 185. It has concluded no other agreements with Member States of the Community.

3. PRECISE SCOPE OF TITLE III OF THE 1968 CONVENTION

187. If it were desired that interlocutory decisions by courts on the further conduct of the proceedings, and particularly on the taking of evidence, should be covered by Article 25 of the 1968 Convention, this would also affect decisions with which the parties would be totally unable to comply without the court's cooperation, and the enforcement of which would concern third parties, particularly witnesses. It would therefore be impossible to 'enforce' such decisions under the 1968 Convention. It can only be concluded from the foregoing that interlocutory decisions which are not intended to govern the legal relationships of the parties, but to arrange the further conduct of the proceedings, should be excluded from the scope of Title III of the 1968 Convention.

COMMENTS ON THE INDIVIDUAL SECTIONS

Recognition

188. With two exceptions (4), no formal amendments were required to Articles 26 to 30. The Working Party did, however, answer some questions raised by the new Member States regarding the interpretation of these provisions. Basically, these concerned problems arising in connection with the application of the public policy reservation in Article 27 (1) — (2), the right to a hearing — Article 27 (2) — (3), and the nature of the obligation to confer recognition, as distict from enforceability (1). The fact that Article 28 makes no reference to the provisions of Section 6 of Title II on jurisdiction agreements is intentional and deserves mention. When considering such agreements it must be borne in mind that the court seised of the proceedings in the State of origin must of its own motion take note of any agreement to the contrary (see paragraphs 22 and 174).

1. Article 26

189. Article 26, second paragraph, introduces a special simplified procedure for seeking recognition, modelled on the provisions governing the issue of orders for enforcement. However, this is not the only way in which recognition may be sought. Every court and public authority must take account of judgments which qualify for recognition, and must decide whether the conditions for recognition exist in a particular case, unless this question has already been determined under Article 26, second paragraph. In particular, every court must itself decide whether there is an obligation to grant recognition, if the principal issue in a foreign judgment concerns a question which in the fresh proceedings emerges as a preliminary issue. Each of these two recognition procedures involves a problem which the Working Party discussed.

190. (a) If proceedings are conducted in accordance with Article 26, second paragraph, the court may of its own motion take into account grounds for refusing recognition if they appear from the judgment or are known to the court. It may not, however, make enquiries to establish whether such grounds exist, as this would not be compatible with the summary nature of the proceedings. Only if further proceedings are instituted by way of an appeal lodged pursuant to Article 36 can the court examine whether the requirements for recognition have been satisfied.

191. (b) The effects of a court decision are not altogether uniform under the legal systems obtaining in the Member States of the Community. A judgment delivered in one State as a decision on a procedural issue may, in another State, be treated as a decision on an issue of substance. The same type of judgment may be of varying scope and effect in different countries. In France, a judgment against the principal debtor is also effective against the surety, whereas in the Netherlands and Germany it is not (50).

The Working Party did not consider it to be its task to find a general solution to the problems arising from these differences in the national legal systems. However, one fact seemed obvious.

Judgments dismissing an action as unfounded must be recognized. If a German court declares that it has no jurisdiction, an English court cannot disclaim its own jurisdiction on the ground that the German court was in fact competent. Clearly, however, German decisions on procedural matters are not binding, as to the substance, in England. An English court may at any time allow (or, for substantive reasons, disallow) an action, if proceedings are started in England after such a decision has been given by a German court.

2. Article 27 (1) — public policy

192. (a) The 1968 Convention does not state in terms whether recognition may be refused pursuant to Article 27 (1) on the ground that the judgment has been obtained by fraud. Not even in the legal systems of the original Contracting States to the 1968 Convention is it expressly stated that fraud in obtaining a judgment constitutes a ground for refusing recognition. Such conduct is, however, generally considered as an instance for applying the doctrine of public policy ([51]). The legal situation in the United Kingdom and Ireland is different inasmuch as fraud constitutes a special ground for refusing recognition in addition to the principle of public policy. In the conventions on enforcement which the United Kingdom concluded with Community States, a middle course was adopted by expressly referring to fraudulent conduct, but treating it as a special case of public policy ([52]).

As a result there is no doubt that to obtain a judgment by fraud can in principle constitute an offence against the public policy of the State addressed. However, the legal systems of all Member States provide special means of redress by which it can be contended, even after the expiry of the normal period for an appeal, that the judgment was the result of a fraud (see paragraph 197 et seq.). A court in the State addressed must always, therefore, ask itself, whether a breach of its public policy still exists in view of the fact that proceedings for redress can be, or could have been, lodged in the courts of the State of origin against the judgment allegedly obtained by fraud.

193. (b) Article 41 (3) of the Irish Constitution prohibits divorce and also provides, as regards marriages dissolved abroad:

> 'No person whose marriage has been dissolved under the civil law of any other State but is a subsisting valid marriage under the law for the time being in force within the jurisdiction of the Government and Parliament established by this Constitution shall be capable of contracting a valid marriage within that jurisdiction during the lifetime of the other party to the marriage so dissolved.'

In so far as the jurisdiction of the 1968 Convention is concerned, this Article of the Constitution is of importance for maintenance orders made upon a divorce. The Irish courts have not yet settled whether the recognition of such maintenance orders would, in view of the constitutional provisions cited, be contrary to Irish public policy.

3. The right to a hearing (Article 27 (2))

194. Article 27 (2) is amended for the same reason as Article 20 (see paragraph 182). The object of the addition to Article 20 was to specify the moment when proceedings became pending before the Irish or British courts; in Article 27 (2) it is intended to indicate which documents must have been served for the right to a hearing to be respected.

4. Ordinary and extraordinary appeals

195. The 1968 Convention makes a distinction in Articles 30 and 38 between ordinary and extraordinary appeals. No equivalent for this could be found in the Irish and United Kingdom legal systems. Before discussing the reason for this and explaining the implications of the solutions proposed by the Working Party (b), something should be said about the distinction between ordinary and extraordinary appeals in the Continental Member States of the EEC, since judges in the United Kingdom and Ireland will have to come to terms with these concepts which to them are unfamiliar (a).

196. (a) A clearly defined distinction between ordinary and extraordinary appeals is nowhere to be found.

Legal literature and case law ([53]) have pointed out two criteria. In the first place neither an appeal ('Berufung') nor an objection to a default judgment ('Einspruch') has to be based on specific grounds; a party may challenge a judgment by alleging any kind of defect. Secondly execution is postponed during the period allowed for an appeal or objection, or after an appeal or objection has been lodged, unless the court otherwise directs or unless, exceptionally, different legal provisions apply.

Some legal systems contain a list of ordinary appeal procedures.

197. Part 1, Book 4 of the French Code de procédure civile of 1806, which still applies in Luxembourg, referred to extraordinary forms of appeal by which a judgment could be contested. It did not say, however, what was meant by ordinary appeals. Book 3 referred merely to 'courts of appeal'. However, in legal literature and case law appeals ('appel') and objections to default judgments ('opposition') have consistently been classified as ordinary appeals. The new French Code de procédure civile of 1975 now expressly clarifies the position. In future only objections (Article 76) and appeals (Article 85) are to be classified as ordinary appeals.

198. The Belgian Code judiciaire of 1967 has retained the French system which previously applied in Belgium. Only appeals and objections are considered as ordinary appeals (Article 21).

199. There is no distinction in Netherlands law between ordinary and extraordinary appeals. Academic writers classify the forms of appeal as follows: objections ('Verzet' — where a judgment is given in default), appeals ('Hoger beroep'), appeals in cassation ('Beroep in cassatie') and appeals on a point of law ('Revisie') are classed as ordinary appeals. 'Revisie' is a special form of appeal which lies only against certain judgments of the Hoge Raad sitting as a court of first instance.

200. The Italian text of Articles 30 and 38 refers to 'impugnazione' without distinguishing between ordinary and extraordinary appeals. However, Italian legal literature distinguishes very clearly between ordinary and extraordinary appeals. Article 324 of the Codice di procedura civile states that a judgment does not become binding as between the parties until the periods within which the following forms of appeal may be lodged have expired: appeals on grounds of jurisdiction ('regolamento di competenza'), appeals ('appello'), appeals in cassation ('ricorso per cassazione'), or petitions for review ('revocazione'), where these are based on one of the grounds provided for in Article 395 (4) and (5). These forms of appeal are classified as ordinary.

201. In Denmark, too, the distinction between ordinary and extraordinary appeals is recognized only in legal literature. The deciding factor mentioned there is whether a form of appeal may be lodged within a given period without having to be based on particular grounds, or whether its admissibility depends on special consent by a court or ministry. Accordingly, appeals ('Anke') and objections to default judgments ('Genoptagelse af sager, i hvilke der er afsagt udeblivelsesdom') are classified as ordinary appeals.

202. Book 3 of the German Code of Civil Procedure ('Zivilprozeßordnung') is headed 'Rechtsmittel' ('means of redress') and it governs 'Berufung' (appeals) 'Beschwerde' (complaints) and 'Revision' (appeals on a point of law). These are frequently said to have in common the fact that the decision appealed against does not become binding ('rechtskräftig') until the period within which these means of redress may be lodged has expired. However Article 705 of the Code defines 'Rechtskraft' as the stage when these means of redress are no longer available. The material difference between the means of redress and other forms of appeal is that the former need not be based on particular grounds of appeal, that they are addressed to a higher court and that, as long as the decision has not become binding, enforcement is also postponed pursuant to Article 704 unless the court, as is almost invariably the case, allows provisional enforcement. If the expression 'ordinary appeal' is used at all, a reference to 'Rechtsmittel' (means of redress) is intended.

German legal writers, in accordance with the phraseology used by the law, do not classify objections to default judgments as a means of redress ('Rechtsmittel') ([54]). It does not involve the competence of a higher court. However, it has the effect of suspending execution and is not tied to specific grounds of appeal, just like an objection in the other original Member States of the Community. It must, therefore, be included under 'ordinary appeals' within the meaning of Articles 30 and 38 of the 1968 Convention.

203. In its judgment of 22 November 1977 ([55]) the European Court held that the concept of an 'ordinary appeal' was to be uniformly determined in the original Member States according to whether there was a specific period of time for appealing, which started to run 'by virtue of' the judgment.

204. (b) In Ireland and the United Kingdom nothing which would enable a distinction to be drawn between ordinary and extraordinary appeals can be found in either statutes, cases or systematic treaties on procedural law. The basic method of redress is the appeal. Not only is this term used where review of a judgment can be sought within a certain period, without being subject to special grounds for appeal; it is also the name given to other means of redress. Some have special names such as; for default judgments, 'reponing' (in Scotland) or 'application to set the judgment aside' (in England, Wales and Ireland); or again 'motion' (in Scotland) or 'application' (in England, Wales and Ireland) 'for a new trial', which correspond roughly to a petition for review in Continental legal systems. They are the only forms of redress against a verdict by a jury. A further distinctive feature of the appeal system in these States is the fact that the enforceability of a judgment is not automatically affected by the appeal period or even by the lodging of an appeal. However, the appellate court will usually grant a temporary stay of execution, if security is given. Finally there do exist in the United Kingdom legal procedures whose function corresponds to the ordinary legal procedures of Continental legal systems, but which are not subject to time limits. The judge exercises his discretion in deciding on the admissibility of each particular case. This is the case, for example, with default judgments. The case law of the European Court could therefore not be applied to the new Member States.

The Working Party therefore made prolonged efforts to work out an equivalent for the United Kingdom and Ireland of the Continental distinction between ordinary and extraordinary appeals, but reached no satisfactory result. This failure was due in particular to the fact that the term 'appeal' is so many-sided and cannot be regarded, like similar terms in Continental law, as a basis for 'ordinary appeals'. The Working Party therefore noted that the legal consequences resulting from the distinction drawn in Articles 30 and 38 between ordinary and extraordinary appeals do not have to be applied rigidly, but merely confer a discretion on the court. Accordingly, in the interests of practicality and clarity, a broad definition of appeal seemed justified in connection with judgments of Irish and United Kingdom courts. Continental courts will have to use their discretion in such a way that an equal balance in the application of Articles 30 and 38 in all Contracting States will be preserved. To this effect they will have to make only cautious use of their discretionary power to stay proceedings, if the appeal is one which is available in Ireland or the United Kingdom only against special defects in a judgment or which may still be lodged after a long period. A further argument in favour of this pragmatic solution was that, in accordance with Article 38, a judgment is in any event no longer enforceable if it was subject to appeal in the State of origin and the appellate court suspended execution or granted a temporary stay of execution.

5. Conflicts with judgments given in non-contracting States which qualify for recognition

205. In one respect the provisions of the 1968 Convention governing recognition required formal amendment. A certain lack of clarity in some of these provisions can be accepted since the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction to interpret them. However, Member States cannot be expected to accept lack of clarity where this might give rise to diplomatic complications with non-contracting States. The new Article 27 (5) is designed to avoid such complications.

This may be explained by way of an example. A decision dismissing an action against a person domiciled in the Community is given in non-contracting State A. A Community State, B, is obliged to recognize the judgment under a bilateral convention. The plaintiff brings fresh proceedings in another Community State, C, which is not obliged to recognize the judgment given in the non-contracting State. If he is successful, the existing text of the 1968 Convention leaves it open to doubt whether the judgment has to be recognized in State B.

In future, it is certain that this is not the case. In order to avoid unnecessary discrepancies, the text of the new provision is based on Article 5 of the Hague Convention of 1 February 1971 on the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments in civil and commercial matters. Its wording is slightly wider in scope than would have been required to avoid diplomatic complications. A judgment given in a non-contracting State takes priority even where it has to be recognized, not by virtue of an international convention but merely under national law. For obligations under conventions not to recognize certain judgments, see paragraph 249 et seq.

Enforcement

1. Preliminary remarks

206. The Working Party's efforts were almost entirely confined to deciding which courts in the new Member States should have jurisdiction in enforcement proceedings, and what appeal procedures should be provided in this context. In this connection four peculiarities of United Kingdom and, to a certain extent, Irish law had to be considered.

The Working Party took no decision on amendments to deal with the costs of the enforcement procedure. On this point, however, reference should be made to the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Communites of 30 November 1976 (Case 42/76). According to that decision, Article 31 prohibits a successful plaintiff from bringing fresh proceedings in the State in which enforcement is sought. But the Contracting States are obliged to adopt rules on costs which take into account the desire to simplify the enforcement procedure.

207. The Working Party also abandoned attempts to draft provisions in the Convention on seizure for international claims, although it was clear that problems would occur to a certain extent if debtors and third party debtors were domiciled in different States. If, in one State, the court of the debtor's domicile has jurisdiction over seizure for such claims, then the State of domicile of the third party debtor may regard the making of the order for seizure applicable to the latter as a violation of its sovereignty, and refuse to enforce it. In such a situation the creditor can seek assistance by obtaining a declaration that the judgment is enforceable in the State of domicile of the third party debtor, and enforcing the debtor's claim against the third party in that State, provided that this State assumes international jurisdiction over such a measure.

208. (a) United Kingdom and Irish law does not have the exequatur system for foreign judgments. In these countries an action on the basis of the foreign judgment is necessary unless, as in the United Kingdom, a system of registration applies to the judgments of certain States (including the six original Member States with the exception of Luxembourg) (see paragraph 6). In that case the foreign judgments, if they are to be enforced, must be registered with a court in the United Kingdom. They then have the same force as judgments of the registering court itself. The application has to be lodged by the creditor in person or by a solicitor on his behalf. Personal appearance is essential; lodging by post will not suffice. If the application is granted, an order to that effect will be entered in the register kept at the court.

Except in Scotland, however, the United Kingdom has no independent enforcement officer like the French 'huissier' or the German 'Gerichtsvollzieher' (see paragraph 221). Only the court which gave the judgment or where the judgment was registered can direct enforcement measures. Since this system of registration affords the same protection to a foreign judgment creditor as does the exequatur system on the Continent, the United Kingdom registration system could also be accepted for applying the provisions of the 1968 Convention.

209. (b) A special feature of the constitution of the United Kingdom has already been mentioned in the introductory remarks (see paragraph 11): England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are independent judicial areas. A new paragraph had to be added to Article 31 to cover this. Similarly the appeal possibilities provided for in Articles 37 and 40 apply separately to each registration. If a judgment has been validly registered with the High Court in London, another appeal is again possible against a subsequent registration with the Court of Session in Edinburgh.

210. (c) As far as the enforcement of foreign judgments is concerned the United Kingdom traditionally concedes special treatment to maintenance orders (see paragraph 7). Until now they have been enforced only in respect of a few Commonwealth countries and Ireland, and their enforcement is entrusted to courts different from those responsible for enforcing other judgments. Since the 1968 Convention contains no provisions precluding different recognition procedures for different types of judgment, there is no reason why maintenance orders cannot be covered by a special arrangement within the scope of the 1968 Convention. This will permit the creation of a uniform system for the recognition of maintenance orders from the Community and the Commonwealth and, in view of the type of court having jurisdiction, the setting up of a central agency to receive applications for enforcement (see paragraph 218). For agreements concerning maintenance see paragraph 226.

211. (d) Finally there were still problems in connection with judgments ordering performance other than the payment of money. Judgments directing a person to do a particular act are not generally enforceable under United Kingdom and Irish law, but only in pursuance of special legal provisions. These provisions cover judgments ordering the delivery of movable property or the transfer of ownership or possession of immovable property, and injunctions by which the court may in its discretion order an individual to do or refrain from doing a certain act. Enforcement is possible either by the sheriff's officer using direct compulsion or indirectly by means of fines or imprisonment for contempt of court. In Scotland, in addition to judgments for the transfer of possession or ownership of immovable property and preventative injunctions, there are also 'decrees ad factum prestandum by means of which the defendant can be ordered to perform certain acts, particularly to hand back movable property.

212. (aa) If an application is made in the Federal Republic of Germany for the enforcement of such a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, the court must apply the same means of compulsion as would be applicable in the case of a corresponding German judgment, i. e. a fine or imprisonment. In the reverse situation, the United Kingdom and Irish courts may have to impose penalties for contempt of court in the same way as when their own orders are disregarded.

213. (bb) The system for enforcing orders requiring the performance of a specific act is fundamentally different in other States of the Community, e.g. Belgium, France and Luxembourg. The defendant is ordered to perform the act and at the same time to pay a sum of money to the plaintiff to cover a possible non-compliance with the order. In France he is initially only threatened with a fine ('astreinte'). In case of non-compliance, a separate judgment is required and is hardly ever as high as the fine originally threatened. In Belgium the amount of the fine is already fixed in the judgment ordering the act to be performed ([56]). With a view to overcoming the difficulties which this could cause for the inter-State enforcement of judgments ordering specific acts. Article 43 provides that, if the sanction takes the form of a fine ('astreinte'), the original court should itself fix the amount. Enforcement abroad is then limited to the 'astreinte'. French, Belgian, Dutch and Luxembourg judgments can be enforced without difficulty in Germany, the United Kingdom and Italy if the original court has proceeded on that basis.

However, the 1968 Convention leaves open the question whether such a fine for disregarding a court order can also be enforced when it accrues not to the judgment creditor but to the State. Since this is not a new problem arising out of the accession of the new Member States, the Working Party did not express a view on the matter.

2. Formal adjustments as regards courts having jurisdiction and authorized appeals

214. Apart from the inclusion of a term equivalent in the Irish and United Kingdom legal systems to ordinary appeal (see paragraph 195), and apart from Article 44 which deals with legal aid (see paragraph 223), the formal adjustments to Articles 32 to 45 relate exclusively to the courts having jurisdiction and the possible types of appeal against their decisions. (See paragraph 108 for adjustments relating to maintenance.)

215. (a) For applications for a declaration of enforceability (see paragraph 208) of judgments other than maintenance orders only one court has been given jurisdiction in each of Ireland, England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. This is due to the peculiarities of the court systems in these countries (see paragraphs 11, 208 and 209).

216. If the judgment debtor wishes to argue against the authorization of enforcement, he must lodge his application to set the registration aside not with a higher court, as in Germany, France and Italy, but, as in Belgium and the Netherlands, with the court which registered the judgment. The proceedings will take the form of an ordinary contentious civil action.

A corresponding position applies regarding the appeal which the applicant may lodge if his application is refused, although in such a case it is a higher court which has jurisdiction in all seven Continental Member States of the Community.

217. The adjustment of the second paragraph of Article 37 and of Article 41 gave rise to difficulties with regard to the solution adopted for Articles 32 and 40.

In the original Member States of the Community an appeal against judgments of courts on which jurisdiction is conferred by Articles 37 and 40 could only be lodged on a point of law and with the highest court in the State. It was therefore sufficient to make the same provision apply to the appeals provided for in the 1968 Convention and, in the case of Belgium, simply to bypass the Cour d'appel. The purpose of this arrangement is to limit the number of appeals, in the interests of rapid enforcement, to a single appeal which may involve a full review of the facts and a second one limited to points of law. It would therefore not have been enough to stipulate for the new Member States that only one further appeal would be permitted against the judgment of the court which had ruled on an appeal made by either the debtor or the creditor. Instead, the second appeal had to be limited to points of law.

Ireland and the United Kingdom will have to adapt their appeal system to the requirements of the 1968 Convention. In the case of Ireland, which has only a two-tier superior court system, the Supreme Court is the only possibility. Implementing legislation in the United Kingdom will have to determine whether the further appeals should go direct to the House of Lords or, depending on the judicial area concerned (see paragraph 11), to the Court of Appeal in England and Wales, to the court of the same name in Northern Ireland or to the Inner House of the Court of Session in Scotland. The concept of 'appeal on a point of law' is the nearest equivalent as far as United Kingdom law is concerned to the 'Rechtsbeschwerde' of German law and the appeal in cassation in the legal systems of the other original Member States of the Community, the common feature of which is a restriction of the grounds of appeal to an incorrect application of the law (as opposed to an incorrect assessment of the facts). Even in relation to appeals in cassation and 'Rechtsbeschwerde' the distinction between points of law and matters of fact is not identical; for the United Kingdom and Ireland, too, this will remain a matter for its own legislation and case law to clarify.

Traditionally the leave of the Minister for Justice is required for an appeal to the highest Danish court at third instance. The Working Party was initially doubtful whether it should accept this in the context of the 1968 Convention. It emerged, however, that the Convention does not guarantee a third instance in all circumstances. In order to relieve the burden on their highest courts, Member States may limit the admissibility of the appeals provided for in Article 41. The Danish solution is only one manifestation of this idea. There was also no need in the case of Denmark to stipulate that the appeal to the highest court should be limited to a point of law. When granting leave the Ministry of Justice can ensure that the appeal concerns only questions of law requiring further elucidation. Denmark has given an assurance that leave will always be granted, if the court of second instance has not made use of its discretion to refer a matter to the European Court of Justice or if enforcement of a foreign judgment has been refused on legal grounds.

218. (b) In Ireland the proposed arrangement also applies to maintenance orders. In the United Kingdom, however, maintenance orders are subject to a special arrangement (see paragraph 210). In England and Wales and in Northern Ireland registration is a matter for the Magistrates' Courts, and in Scotland for the Sheriff Courts. These courts also have jurisdiction in respect of other maintenance matters including the enforcement of foreign maintenance orders. Foreign maintenance creditors cannot, however, have recourse to any of the above courts directly, but must apply to the Secretary of State ([57]), who will transmit the order to the appropriate court. This arrangement was made in the interest of the foreign maintenance creditors, because Magistrates' Courts and Sheriff Courts have lay justices and no administrative machinery.

As regards jurisdiction in respect of appeals which may be brought by either the creditor or the debtor under the 1968 Convention, the usual system will continue to apply, i.e. the appeal is decided by the court which registered the order or refused such registration. It is impossible for a maintenance order to be amended during registration proceedings, even if it is claimed that the circumstances have changed (see paragraph 104 et seq.).

The special situation regarding maintenance orders in the United Kingdom offers a series of advantages to the maintenance creditor. After forwarding the order to the Secretary of State, he has virtually no further need to concern himself with the progress of the proceedings or with their enforcement. The rest will be done free of charge. The Secretary of State transmits the order to the appropriate court and, unless the maintenance creditor otherwise requests, the clerk of that court will be regarded as the representative ad litem within the meaning of Article 33, second paragraph, second sentence. In England and Wales and in Northern Ireland the clerk in question will also be responsible for taking the necessary enforcement measures and for ensuring that the creditor receives the proceeds obtained. Only in Scotland need the creditor under the order seek the services of a solicitor when applying for enforcement following registration of an order. The Law Society of Scotland undertakes to provide solicitors whose fees are, if necessary, paid in accordance with the principles of legal aid. Should the maintenance debtor move to another judicial area in the United Kingdom (see paragraph 11), a maintenance order will, unlike other judgments, be automatically registered with the court which then has jurisdiction. For agreements concerning maintenance, see paragraph 226.

3. Other adjustment problems

219. (a) The United Kingdom asked whether Article 34 excludes the possibility of notifying the debtor that an application for registration of a foreign judgment has been lodged. One of the aims of Article 34 is to secure the element of surprise, which is essential if measures of enforcement are to be effective. Therefore, although this provision does not expressly forbid notifying the debtor in the proceedings of the application for the grant of an enforcement order, such notification should be confined to very exceptional cases. An example might be an application for registration made a long time after the original judgment was given. In any case, the court may not consider submissions from the debtor, whether or not he was notified in advance.

220. (b) The appeal provided for in Article 36 can be based, inter alia, on the grounds that the judgment does not come within the scope of the 1968 Convention, that it is not yet enforceable, or that the obligation imposed by the judgment has already been complied with. However, the substance of the judgment to be enforced or the procedure by which it came into existence can be reviewed only within the limits of Articles 27 and 28. For the adjustment of maintenance orders, see paragraph 108.

221. (c) The Working Party discussed Article 39 at length. The provision in question is modelled on the French legal system and legal systems related to it, to which the institution of 'huissier' is familiar. Under these systems, measures of enforcement in respect of movable property or contractual claims belonging to the debtor can be taken, without involving the court, by instructing a 'huissier' to deal with their execution. It is for the creditor to choose between the available methods of enforcement. The enforcing agency has no discretion whatsoever in the matter. The legal postion obtaining in the United Kingdom (especially in England and Wales and also in Scotland) and Ireland is quite different. In the United Kingdom it is the court which has given or registered the judgment which has jurisdiction over measures of enforcement. In Ireland it is the court which has given or enforced the judgment. The court also has some discretion as to which enforcement measures it will sanction. Protective measures confined to securing enforcement of a claim do not yet exist.

This position will have to be altered by the implementing legislation of these States, which will have to introduce protective measures, in so far as this consequence does not arise as an automatic result of the entry into force of the 1968 Convention for one of these States (see paragraph 256).

The 1968 Convention does not guarantee specific measures of enforcement to the creditor. Neither is it in any way incompatible with the 1968 Convention to leave the measures of enforcement entirely to the court. The 1968 Convention contains no express provision obliging the Member States to employ an institution similar to the French 'huissier'. Even within its original scope, creditors have to apply directly to the court in the case of certain measures of enforcement; in Germany, for example, they would be required to do so in the case of enforcement against immovable property. It is certain however that in the German text the phrase 'in das Vermögen des Schuldners' ('against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought') does not mean that measures of enforcement are permissible as against third parties. The words quoted above could be omitted without changing the meaning of the provision. The question under what conditions measures of enforcement are possible against persons other than the judgment debtor is to be answered solely on the basis of national law. But the qualifications contained in Article 39 must also be observed.

The court enforcing the judgment need not be the one which grants the order of enforcement or registers the foreign judgment. Therefore, for the purposes of enforcement under the 1968 Convention, Denmark can retain its present system, by which execution is entrusted to a special enforcement judge.

222. (d) For the problems presented by the system of 'astreintes', which applies in some Member States, see paragraph 213.

223. (e) In its present form, Article 44 does not provide for the case of a party who had been granted only partial legal aid in the State in which the judgment was given. Although this did not involve an adjustment problem specifically due to the accession of the new Member States, the Working Party decided to propose an amendment. The Working Party's discussions revealed that if the text were to remain in force in its present form, it could result in some undesirable complications. The Working Party's proposal was largely based on the formulation of Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 2 October 1973 on the recognition and enforcement of decisions relating to maintenance obligations which has now come into force. This provision opts for a generous solution: even if only partial legal aid was granted in the State of origin, full aid is to be granted in the enforcement proceedings.

This has a number of further advantages:

As the main application of Article 44 as amended relates to maintenance claims, the amended version contributes to the harmonization of provisions in international conventions.

Moreover, it leads to a general simplification of applications.

Since the rules concerning the granting of partial legal aid are not the same in all the Contracting States, the amended version also ensures a uniform application of the legal aid provisions.

Lastly, it secures the suprise effect of enforcement measures abroad, by avoiding procedural delays caused by difficult calculations concerning the applicant's share in the costs.

The first paragraph of Article 44 does not, however, oblige States which do not at present have a system of legal aid in civil matters to introduce such a system.

224. (f) The reason for the new second paragraph of Article 44 relates to the jurisdiction of the Danish administrative authorities (see paragraph 67) whose services are free. No question of legal aid therefore arises. The new provision is designed to ensure that the enforcement of Danish maintenance orders is not, for this reason, at a disadvantage in the other EEC countries by comparison with maintenance orders from EEC countries other than Denmark.

Common provisions

225. The discussion of Articles 46 to 49 centred on whether the new Member States, in accordance with their legal tradition, could require an affidavit, in particular to the effect that none of the grounds for refusing recognition, specified in Articles 27 and 28, obtain. Affidavit evidence is certainly admissible in appellate proceedings, where the debtor appeals against registration or against a declaration of enforceability, or the creditor against a refusal to register. However, all the other means of giving evidence which are normally admissible must also be available in those proceedings.

The addition to Article 46 (2) is proposed for the reasons given in paragraphs 182 and 194.

CHAPTER 6

AUTHENTIC INSTRUMENTS AND COURT SETTLEMENTS

226. In England and Ireland there is no equivalent of enforceable instruments. In Scotland, instruments establishing a clearly defined obligation to perform a contract can be entered in a public register. An extract from the public register can then serve as a basis for enforcement in the same way as a court judgment. Such extracts are covered by Article 50.

In the United Kingdom, the courts having jurisdiction for recognition and enforcement of maintenance orders are different from those concerned with other kinds of judgment (see paragraphs 210 and 218). It is for the internal law of the United Kingdom to determine whether foreign court settlements concerning maintenance should be treated as maintenance orders or as other judgments.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

227. The outcome of the discussion of Articles 52 and 53 has already been recorded elsewhere (see paragraphs 73 et seq., and 119).

CHAPTER 8

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

228. Article 54 continues to apply to the relationships between the original Member States. For their relationships with the new Member States, and the relationships of the new Member States with each other, an appropriate transitional provision is included in Article 34 of the proposed Accession Convention. It is closely modelled on Article 54 of the 1968 Convention, but takes into account the fact that the latter has already been in force in its present form between the original Member States since 1 February 1973, and also the fact that some amendments are to be made to it. Finally, the Interpretation Protocol of 3 June 1971 also had to be taken into account in the transitional rules. The detailed provisions are as follows ([58]):

I. JURISDICTION

229. 1. The provisions on jurisdiction in the 1968 Convention apply in the new Member States only in their amended version and only to proceedings instituted after the Accession Convention has come into force, and hence after the 1968 Convention has come into force, in the State in question (Article 34 (1)).

230. 2. The amended version also applies to proceedings instituted in the original Member States after that date. Jurisdiction in respect of proceedings instituted in the original Member States before that date but after 1 February 1973 will continue to be determined in accordance with the original text of the 1968 Convention (Article 34 (1)). It is to be noted, as regards the relationships of the old Member States with each other, that under Article 39 of the Accession Convention the amended version can only come into force simultaneously for all six of them.

II. RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

1. END OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD

231. The recognition and enforcement of judgments are in all respects governed by the Convention as amended, provided the transitional period had already ended at the time of institution of the proceedings. For this purpose, the Accession Convention must have come into force by that time both in the State of origin and in the State subsequently addressed (Article 34 (1)). It is not sufficient for the Accession Convention to be in force in the former State only, since rules of exorbitant jurisdiction may still be invoked under Article 4 of the 1968 Convention against domiciliaries of the State subsequently addressed if that State was not also a party to the Accession Convention at the time of institution of the proceedings. This would render an obligation to recognize and enforce a judgment in that State without any preliminary review unacceptable.

If we assume that the Accession Convention comes into force for the original Member States of the Community and Denmark on 1 January 1981 and an action is brought in Germany against a person domiciled in Denmark on 3 January 1981, then a judgment on 1 July 1981 finding in favour of the plaintiff would be enforceable irrespective of transitional provisions, even if, say, the United Kingdom did not become a party to the Convention until 1 December 1981. However, if in this example the action was brought and judgment given against a person domiciled in the United Kingdom, Article 34 (1) would not govern recognition and enforcement in the United Kingdom. That would be a true transitional case.

Paragraphs (2) and (3) of Article 34 deal with judgments during the transitional period, i.e. judgments given after the Accession Convention has come into force in the State addressed, but in proceedings which were instituted at a time when, either in the State of origin or in the State addressed, the Accession Convention was not yet in force. In Article 34 (2) and (3) a distinction is drawn between cases involving only the original Member States of the Community and those involving new Member States as well.

2. Among the original Member States of the Community

232. Article 34 (2) makes the recognition and enforcement of judgments among the original Member States of the Community subject without any restriction to the 1968 Convention as amended, even if the actions were started before the entry into force of the Accession Convention, which will necessarily be simultaneous in those States (see the end of paragraph 230). This amounts indirectly to a statement that the situation as regards the recognition and enforcement of judgments among those States remains that in Article 54 of the 1968 Convention in the case of judgments given before the entry into force of the Accession Convention. The most important implication of Article 34 (2) is that in proceedings for the recognition of judgments among the original Member States of the Community there is to be no consideration of whether the court giving the judgment whose recognition is sought would have had jurisdiction after the entry into force of the Accession Convention. If the action was started after 1 February 1973 then the jurisdiction of the court giving the judgment whose recognition is sought may no longer be examined. The point is of note since that court's jurisdiction could still have been founded on exorbitant jurisdictional rules where domiciliaries of the new Member States are concerned.

To illustrate the point with an example, if a Frenchman were in 1978 to bring an action in the French courts pursuant to Article 14 of the Civil Code against a person domiciled in Ireland, which would be possible under Article 4 of the 1968 Convention, and judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff in 1982; then, assuming the Accession Convention came into force for the original Member States of the Community and Ireland in 1981, the judgment would have to be recognized and enforced in Germany, but not in Ireland.

3. Where new Member States are involved

233. The arrangements obtaining under Article 34 (3) for the recognition and enforcement of judgments between the original Member States and the new Member States, or as between the new Member States, differ somewhat from those applying among the original Member States. Article 34 (3) is concerned with the possibility of recognition and enforcement being sought in one of the new Contracting States of a judgment from an original Contracting State or from another new Contracting State. Apart from the cases referred to in paragraph 231, this is possible after the end of the transitional period, subject to three requirements being met.

234. (a) The judgment must have been given after the Accession Convention came into force in both States.

235. (b) In addition, the proceedings must have been instituted, in the words of the Convention, before 'the date of entry into force of this Convention, between the State of origin and the State addressed'. The purport of this is that, at the time when the proceedings were instituted, the Accession Convention may have come into force either in the State of the court giving the judgment for which recognition is sought, or in the State in which recognition and enforcement are subsequently sought, but not in both of these States.

236. (c) Finally, the jurisdiction of the court giving the judgment for which recognition is sought must satisfy certain criteria which the court in the State addressed must check. These criteria exactly match what Article 54 of the 1968 Convention laid down regarding transitional cases which were pending when that Convention came into force between the six original Member States. In proceedings for recognition, the jurisdiction of the court which gave judgment is to be accepted as having been valid, provided one of two requirements is met:

(aa) The judgment must be recognized where the court in the State of origin would have had jurisdiction if the Accession Convention had already been in force as between the two States at the time when the proceedings were instituted.

(bb) The judgment must also be recognized where the court's jusrisdiction was covered at the time when the proceedings were instituted by another international convention which was in force between the two States.

Reverting to the example in paragraph 232, the position would be as follows: the French judgment would indeed have been given after the Accession Convention had come into force in Ireland and France. The proceedings would have been instituted at a time when the Accession Convention was not yet in force in France (or in Ireland). Had this Convention already been in force as between France and Ireland at that time, the French courts would no longer have been able to found their jurisdiction on Article 14 of the Civil Code and hence, it must further be assumed, would have been unable to assume jurisdiction. Lastly, there is no bilateral convention between France and Ireland concerning the direct or indirect jurisdiction of the courts. Consequently, the judgment would not have had to be recognized in Ireland.

If one changes the example so that it now concerns France and the United Kingdom, one has to take into consideration the Convention between those two States of 18 January 1934 providing for the reciprocal enforcement of judgments. However, jurisdiction deriving from Article 14 of the Civil Code is not admitted under that Convention; thus the judgment would not have to be recognized in the United Kingdom either.

If the example concerned Germany and the United Kingdom, and the defendant resident in the United Kingdom had agreed orally before the commencement of the proceedings that the German courts should have jurisdiction, then under the 1968 Convention the judgment would have to be recognized and enforced in the United Kingdom. Under Article IV (1) (a) of the Convention between the United Kingdom and Germany of 14 July 1960, oral agreement is sufficient to give grounds for jurisdiction for the purposes of recognition ('indirect' jurisdiction). However, the German court would have had to be a 'Landgericht', since 'Amtsgericht' judgments are not required to be recognized under that Convention (Article I (2)). In the event of a written agreement on jurisdiction, even the judgment of an 'Amtsgericht' would have to be recognized, under Article 34 (3) of the Accession Convention, as the 'Amtsgericht' would in that case have assumed jurisdiction under circumstances in which jurisdiction would also have had to be assumed if the Accession Convention had been in force between Germany and the United Kingdom.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER CONVENTIONS

I. ARTICLES 55 AND 56

237. The Working Party included in Article 55 the bilateral conventions between the United Kingdom and other Member States of the Community. No such conventions have been concluded by Ireland and Denmark.

II. ARTICLE 57 (59)

1. THE BASIC STRUCTURE OF THE PROPOSED PROVISION

238. Great difficulties arose when an attempt was made to explain to the new Member States the exact scope of Article 57, the main reason being the statement that the Convention 'shall not affect' any conventions in relation to particular matters, without stating how the provisions in such conventions could be reconciled with those of the 1968 Convention where they covered only part of the matters governed by the latter, which is usually the case. Special conventions can be divided into three groups. Many of them contain only provisions on direct jurisdiction, as in the case with the Warsaw Convention of 12 October 1929 for the unification of certain rules relating to international carriage by air and the Additional Protocols thereto (*), and the Brussels Convention relating to the arrest of seagoing ships which is of great importance for maritime law (Article 7) (see paragraph 121). Most conventions govern only the recognition and enforcement of judgments, and merely refer indirectly to jurisdiction in so far as it constitutes a precondition for recognition. This is the case with the Hague Convention of 15 April 1958 on the recognition and enforcement of decisions relating to maintenance obligations towards children. Finally, there are also Conventions which contain provisions directly regulating jurisdiction as well as recognition and enforcement, as for example the Berne Convention on carriage by rail and the Mannheim Convention for the navigation of the Rhine. It is irrelevant for present purposes whether the conventions contain additional provisions on the applicable law or rules of substantive law.

239. (a) It is clear beyond argument that where a special convention contains no provisions directly governing jurisdiction, the jurisdiction provisions of the 1968 Convention apply. It is equally clear that where all the Contracting States are parties to a special convention containing provisions on jurisdiction, those provisions prevail. But for situations between these two extremes the solution provided by Article 57 is a great deal less clear. This is particularly the case for a number of questions, which arise where only the State of origin and the State addressed are parties to the special convention. The problems become acute where only one of these two States is a party. If both States are parties to a special convention which governs only direct jurisdiction, will the provisions of the 1968 Convention regarding examination of jurisdiction by the court of its own motion (Article 20), lis pendens (Article 21) and enforcement apply? Do the provisions of the 1968 Convention on the procedure for recognition and enforcement apply, if a special convention on the recognition and enforcement of judgments does not deal with procedure? Can a person domiciled in a Contracting State which is not a party to a special convention be sued in the courts of another Contracting State on the basis of jurisdiction provisions in the special conventions, or can the State of domicile which is not a party to the special convention claim that the jurisdiction rules of the 1968 Convention must be observed? Must a judgment given in a court which has jurisdiction only under a special convention be recognized and enforced even in a Contracting State which is not a party to that particular special convention? And, finally, what is the position where the special convention does not claim to be exclusive?

240. (b) Tentative and conflicting views were expressed within the Working Party as to how these problems were to be solved in interpreting Article 57 in its original form. It become clear that it would not be practicable to provide a precise solution to all of them, particularly since it is impossible to predict the form of future conventions. It was however appropriate, in the interests of clarifying the obligations about to be assumed by the new Member States, to include in the Accession Convention an authentic interpretation which concerns some problems which are of especial importance. The opportunity was taken to make a drafting improvement to the present Article 57 of the 1968 Convention — the new paragraph 1 of this Article — which will speak of recognition or enforcement. By reason of the purely drafting nature of the amendment to the text, the provision laying down the authentic interpretation of the new Article 57 (1) also applies to the present version.

The solution arrived at is based on the following principles. The 1968 Convention contains the rules generally applicable in all Member States; provisions in special conventions are special rules which every State may make prevail over the 1968 Convention by becoming a party to such a convention. In so far as a special convention does not contain rules covering a particular matter the 1968 Convention applies. This is also the case where the special convention includes rules of jurisdiction which do not altogether fit the inter-connecting provisions of the various parts of the 1968 Convention, especially those governing the relationship between jurisdiction and enforcement. The overriding considerations are simplicity and clarity of the legal position.

The most important consequence of this is that provisions on jurisdiction contained in special conventions are to be regarded as if they were provisions of the 1968 Convention itself, even if only one Member State is a Contracting Party to such a special convention. Even Member States which are not Contracting Parties to the special convention must therefore recognize and enforce decisions given by courts which have jurisdiction only under the special convention. Furthermore, in the context of two States which are parties to a special convention, a person who wishes to obtain the recognition or enforcement of a judgment may rely upon the procedural provisions of the 1968 Convention on recognition and enforcement.

At the same time, the Working Party did not wish to reach a final conclusion on the question whether the general principle outlined above could be consistently applied in all its ramifications. To take a critical example, it was left open whether exclusive jurisdiction under the provisions of a special convention must invariably be applied. The same applies to the question whether a case of lis pendens arising from a special convention is covered by Article 21 of the 1968 Convention. The Working Party therefore preferred to provide expressly for the application of Article 20 and to leave the solution of the outstanding problems to legal literature and case law. For the implications of an authentic interpretation of Article 57 for maritime jurisdiction, see paragraph 121.

2. EXAMPLES

241. A river boatman domiciled in the Netherlands is liable for damages arising from an accident which occurred on the upper Rhine. It is however no longer possible to determine whether the harmful event occurred on German or French territory or from where the damage emanated.

242. It is not possible in such a case for either German or French courts to assume jurisdiction under Article 5 (3) or any other provision of the 1968 Convention. According to Article 34 (2) (c) and Article 35a of the revised Rhine navigation Convention of 17 October 1868 in the version of the Protocol of 25 October 1972 ([60]), jurisdiction in such cases belongs to the court of the State which was the first or only one seised of the matter. That court must, however, take into account Article 20 of the 1968 Convention, even though no equivalent of this Article exists in the Rhine navigation Convention. For example, if the defendant fails to enter an appearance, the court must of its own motion (see paragraph 22) ascertain whether all means have been exhausted of determining exactly where the accident occurred, for only if this cannot be determined does the court have jurisdiction under the abovementioned provisions of the Rhine navigation Convention.

243. If the court first seised of the matter was French, then any judgment of that court must be recognized in Germany. The Rhine navigation Convention is even stricter than the 1968 Convention in forbidding any re-examination of the original judgment in the State addressed. According to the correct interpretation of Article 57 of the 1968 Convention the judgment creditor has the choice of availing himself of the enforcement procedure provided by the Rhine navigation Convention or by the 1968 Convention. However, if he proceeds under the 1968 Convention the court may not refuse recognition on any of the grounds given in Article 27 or Article 28 of the 1968 Convention. Unlike the enforcement procedure itself, the conditions for recognition and enforcement are exclusively governed by the special conventions — in this example, the Rhine navigation Convention.

244. If, however, a judgment has been given in the court with jurisdiction at the place of destination pursuant to Article 28 (1) of the Warsaw Convention of 12 October 1929 for the unification of certain rules relating to international carriage by air, the 1968 Convention applies fully to both recognition and enforcement, because the Warsaw Convention contains no provisions at all on these matters. The same applies where in maritime law the jurisdiction of the court of origin was based on the provisions governing arrest contained in the 1952 Brussels Convention (see paragraph 121).

245. If the boatman in the above example on Rhine navigation had been domiciled in Luxembourg, which is not a party to the Rhine navigation Convention, the position would be as follows: any jurisdiction assumed in France or Germany pursuant to the Rhine navigation Convention can no longer be regarded in Luxembourg as an infringement of the 1968 Convention. Under the provisions and procedure of the 1968 Convention, Luxembourg is obliged to recognize and enforce a judgment given by the German or French Rhine navigation courts. If, conversely, the boatman is sued in the court of his Luxembourg domicile, which is also permissible, under the 1968 Convention, Germany and France would have to accept this, even though they are parties to the Rhine navigation Convention which does not recognize jurisdiction based on domicile.

3. UNDERTAKINGS IN CONVENTIONS BETWEEN STATES NOT TO RECOGNIZE JUDGMENTS

246. Whether Article 57 also covers conventions under which one Member State of the Community undertakes not to recognize judgments given in another Member State remains an open question. It could be argued that the admissible scope of such conventions was governed exclusively by Article 59.

International obligations of this sort can result from a special convention which provides for the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of one of the Contracting Parties. Such an obligation can however also result indirectly from the fact that the exercise of jurisdiction under the special convention is linked to a special regime of liability. For example, the Paris Convention of 1960 on third party liability in the field of nuclear energy, apart from laying down rules of jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement:

1. places the sole liability for damage on the operator of a nuclear installation;

2. makes his liability an absolute one;

3. sets maximum limits to his liability;

4. requires him to insure against his liability;

5. allows a Contracting State to provide additional compensation from public funds.

The recognition and enforcement of a judgment which is given in a State not party to such a special convention and which is based on legal principles quite different from those outlined above could seriously undermine the operation of that special convention.

The 1968 Convention should always be interpreted in such a way that no limitations of liability contained in international conventions are infringed. The question however remains open whether this result is to be achieved by applying the public policy provision of Article 27 (1), by analogy with the new paragraph (5) of Article 27, or by a broad interpretation of Article 57.

For conventions limiting liability in maritime law, see paragraph 124 et seq.

4. PRECEDENCE OF SECONDARY COMMUNITY LAW

247. Within the Working Party opinion was divided as to whether secondary Community law, or national laws adopted pursuant to secondary Community law, prevail over international agreements concluded between the Member States, in particular in the case of a convention provided for in Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome. There was, however, agreement that national and Community law referred to above should prevail over the 1968 Convention. This decision is embodied in Article 57; the provision is based on Article 25 of the preliminary draft Convention on the law applicable to contractual and non-contractual obligations.

5. CONSULTATIONS BEFORE THE FUTURE ACCESSION BY MEMBER STATES OF THE COMMUNITY TO FURTHER AGREEMENTS

248. By their accession to the Convention, the new Member States are also bound by the Joint Declaration made by the Contracting States at the time of the signing of the 1968 Convention. In the Declaration the States declare that they will arrange for regular periodic contacts between their representatives. The Working Party was unanimously of the opinion that consultations should also take place when a Member State intended to accede to a convention which would prevail over the 1968 Convention by virtue of Article 57.

III. ARTICLE 59

249. This provision refers only to judgments given against persons domiciled or habitually resident outside the Community. Such persons may also be sued on the basis of jurisdictional provisions which could not be invoked in the case of persons domiciled within the Community, and which are classed as exorbitant and disallowed pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 3. Nevertheless, any judgment which may have been given is to be recognized and enforced in accordance with the 1968 Convention. As the Jenard report explains, it is intended that the Contracting States should remain free to conclude conventions with third States excluding the recognition and enforcement of judgments based on exorbitant jurisdictions — even though the 1968 Convention permits this in exceptional cases. The aim of the proposed amendment to Article 59 is further to limit the possibility of recognition and enforcement.

250. The way this will work may be illustrated by an example. If a creditor has a claim to be satisfied in France against a debtor domiciled in that country, then Danish courts have no jurisdiction under any circumstances to decide this issue, even if the debtor has property in Denmark and even if the claim is secured on immovable property there. Supposing the debtor is domiciled in Norway, then if Danish national law so allows Danish courts may very well claim jurisdiction, e.g. on the basis of the presence in Denmark of property owned by the debtor. Normally, the judgment given in such a case would also be enforceable in the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom could however undertake in a convention with Norway an obligation to refuse recognition and enforcement of such a judgment. This kind of treaty obligation may not however extend to a case where the jurisdiction of the Danish courts is based on the ground that immovable property in Denmark constitutes security for the debt. In such circumstances, the judgment would be enforceable even in the United Kingdom.

FINAL PROVISIONS

1. IRELAND

251. Ireland has no territorial possessions outside the integral parts of its territory.

2. UNITED KINGDOM

252. The term 'United Kingdom' does not include the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, Gibraltar or the Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus. There is no obligation on the United Kingdom to extend the scope of the 1968 Convention to include these territories, even though it is responsible for their external relations. It might, however, be useful if the United Kingdom were to extend the 1968 Convention and it should be authorized to do so. It would have to undertake the necessary 'adjustments' itself, and there was no need to provide for them in the Accession Convention. The following adjustments would be required: indication of any exorbitant jurisdictions in the second paragraph of Article 3; a declaration as to whether in the newly included territories every appeal should be regarded as an ordinary appeal for the purposes of Articles 30 and 38; a declaration as to whether registration in any such territory in accordance with the second paragraph of Article 31 is effective only within its area; establishing which courts are competent under Articles 32, 37 and 40, the form in which the application should be made, and whether the adjustments in respect of the United Kingdom contained in the second paragraph of Article 37 as amended and in Article 41 as amended should also apply in the newly included territories. If any international conventions should apply to any one of the territories in question, appropriate adjustments would also have to be made to Article 55.

The penultimate paragraph of the proposed addition to Article 60 relates to the fact that judgments of courts in these territories which do not belong to the United Kingdom can be challenged in the last instance before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. It would be illogical to bring Privy Council decisions within the scope of the 1968 Convention if they related to disputes arising in territories to which the 1968 Convention does not apply.

3. DENMARK

253. For the purposes of EEC law, Greenland is included in the European territory of Denmark. The special constitutional positions of the Faroe Islands led to a solution corresponding closely to that proposed for the territories for whose foreign relations the United Kingdom is responsible. This had to allow for the fact that both appellate and first instance proceedings which relate to the Faroes and are therefore conducted under the Code of Civil Procedure specially enacted for these islands can be brought in Copenhagen.

4. CHANGES IN A STATE'S TERRITORY

254. The Working Party was unanimous that any territory which becomes independent of the mother country thereby ceases to be a member of the European Community and, consequently, can no longer be a party to the 1968 Convention. It was unnecessary to provide for this expressly and, in any case, to have drafted such a provision would have gone beyond the Working Party's terms of reference.

CHAPTER 11

ADJUSTMENTS TO THE PROTOCOL OF 3 JUNE 1971 ON THE INTERPRETATION BY THE COURT OF JUSTICE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES OF THE 1968 CONVENTION

1. FORMAL ADJUSTMENTS

255. Formal adjustments to the Interpretation Protocol were few and fairly obvious. It became necessary to make only one short addition to its provisions: the courts in the new Member States which, in accordance with Article 2 (1) and Article 3, are required to request the Court of Justice to give preliminary rulings on questions of interpretation, had to be designated ([61]). In the United Kingdom, unlike the other Member States, not only the highest court within the country has been included, as it is more difficult to refer a matter to the House of Lords than it is to have recourse to the highest courts on the continent. Therefore, at least the appellate proceedings provided for in the second paragraph of Article 37 and in Article 41 of the 1968 Convention should in the United Kingdom also terminate in a court which is obliged to request a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice. The expression 'appellate capacity' in Article 2 (2) should not be construed in a narrow technical sense, but in the sense of any challenge before a higher jurisdiction, so that it might be taken also to include the French 'contredit'.

The remaining formal adjustments concerned merely the scope (Article 1) and territorial application of the Protocol. Article 6, which deals with the latter point, is wholly based on Article 60 of the 1968 Convention (see paragraphs 251 to 254). Which authorities are to be designated as competent within the meaning of the third paragraph of Article 4 is a question to be decided entirely by the new Member States.

2. THE SPECIAL NATURE OF IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION IN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND IRELAND

256. The extension of the Interpretation Protocol to the United Kingdom and Ireland will, however, in all probability also present a procedural problem. A long-standing legal tradition in these States does not allow provisions of international treaties to become directly applicable as national law. In the United Kingdom legislation has to be passed transforming such provisions into national law. In many cases the legislative enactment does not follow precisely the wording of the treaty. The usual form of legislation in this State often calls for a more detailed phraseology than that used in a treaty. The treaty and the corresponding national law are, therefore, to be carefully distinguished.

If the implementing legislation in the United Kingdom follows the usual pattern, courts in that country would only rarely be concerned with the interpretation of the 1968 Convention, but mostly with interpretation of the national implementing legislation. Only when the latter is not clear would it be open to a court, under the existing rules of construction in that country, to refer to the treaty on which the legislation is based, and only when the court is then faced with a problem of interpretation of the treaty may it turn to the European Court of Justice. If the provisions of implementing legislation are clear in themselves, the courts in the United Kingdom may as a rule refer neither to the text of the treaty nor to any decision by an international court on its interpretation.

This would undoubtedly lead to a certain disparity in the application of the Interpretation Protocol of 3 June 1971. The Working Party was of the opinion that this disparity could best be redressed if the United Kingdom could in some way ensure in its implementing legislation that the 1968 Convention will there too be endowed with the status of a source of law, or may at any rate be referred to directly when applying the national implementing legislation.

In the event of a judgment of the European Court of Justice being inconsistent with a provision of the United Kingdom implementing legislation, the latter would have to be amended.

It is also the case in Ireland that international agreements to which that State is a party are not directly applicable as national law. Lately, however, a number of Acts putting international agreements into force in national law have taken the form of an incorporation of the text of the agreement into national law. If the Act putting into force the 1968 Convention as amended by the Accession Convention were to take this form, the problems described above in relation to the United Kingdom would not arise in the case of Ireland.

1. In the interpretation of the concept 'civil and commercial matters' for the purposes of the application of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, in particular Title III thereof, reference must not be made to the law of one of the States concerned but, first, to the objectives and scheme of the Convention and, secondly, to the general principles which stem from the corpus of the national legal systems;
2. A judgment given in an action between a public authority and a person governed by private law, in which the public authority has acted in the exercise of its powers, is excluded from the area of application of the Convention.

(19) Decree No 75—1123 of 5 December 1975, (JO) 1975, 1251.

(20) The adjustment proposed for Article 57 admittedly has certain repercussions on the scope of Article 20 (see paragraph 240).

(21) The following cases may be mentioned with regard to difficulties of interpretation which have arisen hitherto in judicial practice in connection with the application of Articles 5 and 6: Corte Cassazione Italiana of 4 June 1974, 'Giur. it.' 1974, 18 (with regard to the concept of place of performance); Corte Cassazione Italiana No 3397 of 20 October 1975 (place of performance in the case of deliveries via a forwarding agent who has an obligation to instal); Tribunal de Grande Instance Paris D 1975, 638 with commentary by Droz (place where the harmful event occurred in cases of illegal publication in the press); Court of Justice of the European Communities, 6 October 1976, Case No 12/76 [1976] ECR 1473.

(22) In the judgments referred to the formal parts of the judgments read as follows:

The 'place of performance of the obligation in question' within the meaning of Article 5 (1) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters is to be determined in accordance with the law which governs the obligation in question according to the rules of conflict of laws of the court before which the matter is brought (Case No 12/76).

In disputes in which the grantee of an exclusive sales concession is charging the grantor with having infringed the exclusive concession, the word 'obligation' contained in Article 5 (1) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters refers to the contractual obligation forming the basis of the legal proceedings, namely the obligation of the grantor which corresponds to the contractual right relied upon by the grantee in support of the application (Case No 14/76 [1976] ECR 1497).

In disputes concerning the consequences of the infringement by the grantor of a contract conferring an exclusive concession, such as the payment of damages or the dissolution of the contract, the obligation to which reference must be made for the purposes of applying Article 5 (1) of the Convention is that which the contract imposes on the grantor and the non-performance of which is relied upon by the grantee in support of the application for damages or for the dissolution of the contract (Case No 14/76).

In the case of actions for payment of compensation by way of damages, it is for the national court to ascertain whether, under the law applicable to the contract, an independent contractual obligation or an obligation replacing the unperformed contractual obligation is involved (Case No 14/76).

When the grantee of an exclusive sales concession is not subject either to the control or to the direction of the grantor, he cannot be regarded as being at the head of a branch, agency or other establishment of the grantor within the meaning of Article 5 (5) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 (Case No 14/76).

Where the place of the happening of the event which may give rise to liability in tort, delict or quasi-delict and the place where that event results in damage are not identical, the expression 'place where the harmful event occurred' in Article 5 (3) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters must be understood as being intended to cover both the place where the damage occurred and the place of the event giving rise to it (Case No 21/76 [1976] ECR 1735).

The result is that the defendant may be sued, at the option of the plaintiff, either in the courts for the place where the damage occurred or in the courts for the place of the event which gives rise to and is at the origin of that damage (Case No 21/76).

(47) In the case of an orally concluded contract, the requirements of the first paragraph of Article 17 of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters as to form are satisfied only if the vendor's confirmation in writing accompanied by notification of the general conditions of sale has been accepted in writing by the purchaser (Case No 25/76, [1976] ECR 1851.

The fact that the purchaser does not raise any objections against a confirmation issued unilaterally by the other party does not amount to acceptance on his part of the clause conferring jurisdiction unless the oral agreement comes within the framework of a continuing trading relationship between the parties which is based on the general conditions of one of them, and those conditions contain a clause conferring jurisdiction (Case No 25/76).

Where a clause conferring jurisdiction is included among the general conditions of sale of one of the parties, printed on the back of a contract, the requirement of a writing under the first paragraph of Article 17 of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters is fulfilled only if the contract signed by both parties contains an express reference to those general conditions (Case No 24/76 [1976] ECR 1831).

In the case of a contract concluded by reference to earlier offers, which were themselves made with reference to the general conditions of one of the parties including a clause conferring jurisdiction, the requirement of a writing under the first paragraph of Article 17 of the Convention is satisfied only if the reference is express and can therefore be checked by a party exercising reasonable care (Case No 24/76).

Report

on the accession of the Hellenic Republic to the Community Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

(86/C 298/01)

FOREWORD

This report is the last work to flow from the pen of Professor Demetrios I. Evrigenis, who, as always, was the moving spirit and a principal actor in its creation. It was almost complete when he died, in the prime of life, in Strasbourg on 27 January 1986 when about to return to Thessaloniki to discuss some final matters with me, his co-author. His sudden death obliged me to settle them alone, few in number and little of consequence as they were. The problems of international jurisdiction and the enforcement of the judgments of foreign courts, which absorbed his energies so productively throughout his academic life, have thus become the theme of his parting words at its inexorable end. This work is dedicated to his memory with gratitude and respect.

K. D. KERAMEUS

CONTENTS

I. BACKGROUND TO AND STRUCTURE OF THE CONVENTION

1. On 25 October 1982, representatives of the ten Member States of the European Communities at that time signed the Convention on the accession of the Hellenic Republic to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice with the amendments made to them by the Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The conclusion of this Convention was provided for in Article 3 (2) of the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Hellenic Republic and the adjustments to the Treaties annexed to the Treaty of 28 May 1979 concerning the accession of the Hellenic Republic to the European Economic Community and to the European Atomic Energy Community. In accordance with that provision 'the Hellenic Republic undertakes to accede to the conventions provided for in Article 220 of the EEC Treaty and to the protocols on the interpretation of those conventions by the Court of Justice, signed by the Member States of the Community as originally or at present constituted, and to this end it undertakes to enter into negotiations with the present Member States in order to make the necessary adjustments thereto'. To date, the only existing convention based on Article 220 of the EEC Treaty is the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters.

2. In preparation for the negotiations for accession to this Convention, the Hellenic Republic drew up a memorandum with proposed adjustments which was forwarded in October 1981 to the other Member States via the Council. The Permanent Representatives Committee convened an ad hoc Working Party composed of experts from the Member States and Commission representatives which met on two occasions in Brussels, on 14 December 1981 and 5 April 1982. From these meetings there emerged a draft Convention on the accession of the Hellenic Republic, which was approved by the Permanent Representatives Committee on 11 June 1982 and was signed on 25 October 1982 by representatives of the Member States at a conference of the Ministers for Justice of the Member States in Luxembourg.

3. Before presenting and commenting on the Convention on Greece's accession, it will be useful to list all the individual texts making up the current version of the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. These texts are as follows:

3.1.1. Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (hereinafter referred to as the '1968 Convention').

3.1.2. Protocol (hereinafter referred to as the '1968 Protocol').

3.1.3. Joint Declaration (hereinafter referred to as the '1968 Joint Declaration').

The texts referred to in points 3.1.1 to 3.1.3 were signed in Brussels on 27 September 1968 and entered into force on 1 February 1972. The Greek versions were published in Official Journal of the European Communities No L 388 of 31 December 1982, page 7.

3.2.1. Protocol on the interpretation by the Court of Justice of the European Communities of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (hereinafter referred to as the '1971 Protocol').

3.2.2. Joint Declaration (hereinafter referred to as the '1971 Joint Declaration').

The texts referred to in points 3.2.1 and 3.2.2 were signed in Luxembourg on 3 June 1971 and entered into force on 1 September 1975. The Greek versions were published in Official Journal of the European Communities No L 388 of 31 December 1982, page 20.

3.3.1. Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, and the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice of the European Communities (hereinafter referred to as the '1978 Accession Convention').

The texts referred to in points 3.3.1 and 3.3.2 were signed in Luxembourg on 9 October 1978 (*). The Greek versions were published in Official Journal of the European Communities No L 388 of 31 December 1982, page 24.

3.4.1. Convention on the accession of the Hellenic Republic to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice with the amendments made to them by the Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (hereinafter referred to as the '1982 Accession Convention').

This Convention was signed in Luxembourg on 25 October 1982 and published in Official Journal of the European Communities No L 388 of 31 December 1982, pages 1 to 6.

All the above texts were published in an unofficial consolidated version prepared by the General Secretariat of the Council, in Official Journal of the European Communities No C 97 of 11 April 1983, pages 2 to 29. For the publication of the above texts in the other Community languages, see the table given on page 1 of Official Journal of the European Communities No C 97 of 11 April 1983.

4. Explanatory reports were drawn up on the texts referred to in points 3.1.1. to 3.3.2. The report on the 1968 Convention, Protocol and Joint Declaration and the report on the 1971 Protocol and Joint Declaration were drawn up by Mr P. Jenard, Director in the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and External Trade (1). The report on the 1978 Accession Convention and Joint Declaration was drawn up by Mr P. Schlosser, Professor at the University of Munich (2). A Greek translation of these reports appears in the present edition of the Official Journal. The reports in question contain the background to the preparation of the texts and explain and elucidate the provisions of the texts in relation to the autonomous law of the Contracting Parties. They are of considerable assistance in interpreting the Convention.

5. Technical legal aspects of accession to the Convention

As in the case of the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom, in the case of the accession of Greece the Contracting Parties preferred to draft a Convention incorporating adjustments supplementing the existing 1968, 1971 and 1978 texts instead of directly revising them. This solution has clear advantages. It relieves the Contracting Parties of the obligation to ratify once more those parts of the existing Convention which have not been amended through the new accession and, at the same time, permits a clear distinction to be made between the successive stages in the development of the Convention. There are, however, disadvantages, as the result is a gradual accumulation of texts effecting repeated indirect changes to the original Convention. The number of such independent texts is bound to increase with each new enlargement of the Community and, consequently, with each further accession to the Convention. This multiplicity of sources will, of course, create further problems of interpretation in determining the law applicable in a particular case. Of assistance on this point are the consolidations of the texts of the Convention into a single corpus which are usually prepared after each new accession by the Council General Secretariat (3). Anyone seeking to interpret the Convention must not forget, however, that these consolidations are unofficial and therefore do not have binding force.

6. Brief description of the 1982 Convention

In contrast to the 1978 Accession Convention, the 1982 Accession Convention did not involve any substantial changes to the text either of the 1968 Convention or the 1971 Protocol, as already amended by the 1978 Accession Convention. The adjustments made to those texts by the 1982 Convention are purely technical and are restricted to additions required as a result of the accession of the new Contracting Party. Greece, as shown by the memorandum which it submitted for the negotiations for its accession to the Convention (4), felt that it could accept the Convention in its entirety, as already amended by the 1978 texts. Two points which might have led to substantial amendments were finally dealt with in the minutes of the ad hoc Committee. These points are dealt with below (5).

7. Structure of the 1968/1978/1982 Convention

The Convention governs, on the one hand, the international jurisdiction of the courts, and, on the other, the recognition and enforcement of judgments, authentic instruments and court settlements. Given its content, it may be classified as a 'double' convention. In other words, in addition to provisions governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments, it contains direct rules on jurisdiction defining the court competent to deal with a dispute, in contrast to 'single' conventions which deal with jurisdiction only indirectly as a pre-condition for the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments. The Convention is divided into eight Titles and deals successively with the scope of the Convention itself (Title I, Article 1), jurisdiction (Title II, Articles 2 to 24), recognition and enforcement (Title III, Articles 25 to 49), authentic instruments and court settlements (Title IV, Articles 50 to 51). Title V (Articles 52 to 53) contains general provisions and Title VI (Article 54) transitional provisions to which must be added the provisions of Articles 34 to 36 of the 1978 Convention and of Article 12 of the 1982 Convention. Title VII (Articles 55 to 59) governs the relationship of the Convention to other conventions while Title VIII (Articles 60 to 68) contains the final provisions, to which must be added the corresponding provisions of the 1978 Convention (Articles 37 to 41) and the 1982 Convention (Articles 13 to 17). The 1968 Protocol contains a set of specific provisions.

For the 1971 Protocol on the interpretation of the Convention by the Court of Justice and the amendments thereto in the 1978 and 1982 texts, see Section III. D below, points 91 to 99.

II. THE GREEK SYSTEM OF INTERNATIONAL JURISDICTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENTS OF FOREIGN COURTS

8. After the foundation of the modern Greek State (1830) positive legislation in respect of international jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of the judgments of foreign courts went through two major phases. These two phases are quite distinct as regards international jurisdiction ([6]) and less so as regards the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments ([7]). The following brief account concludes with a description of the international convention provisions governing these matters in force in Greece ([8]).

9. The civil procedure of 1834, which was drawn up by the Bavarian jurist G. L. von Maurer and which applied from 25 January 1835 until 15 September 1968 followed French legal thinking (Articles 14 and 15 of the French Civil Code) in providing for the nationality of the litigants to be the main criterion of international jurisdiction. Thus, under Article 28 of the 1834 civil procedure, Greek courts possessed jurisdiction where either the plaintiff or the defendant were Greek. As a result, a Greek national could sue a foreign national, and vice versa, before the Greek courts irrespective of the geographical location of the dispute or of any other connecting factor providing a link with the Greek State. In addition, however, pursuant to Article 27 of the civil procedure, the international jurisdiction of the Greek civil courts also extended to actions between foreign nationals if they had agreed to submit their dispute to the Greek courts, or if certain, very few, special jurisdictions applied, or if considerations of public policy were involved ([9]).

10. The basis of the system was changed by the introduction of the Civil Code (23 February 1946). Under Article 7 (1) of the law introducing the Code, Articles 27 and 28 of the civil procedure were repealed; Article 126 of the law stipulated that foreign nationals were subject to the jurisdiction of Greek courts and could sue or be sued in the same manner as Greek nationals in accordance with the provisions governing jurisdiction. Thus, at least in the case of foreign nationals, jurisdiction was dissociated from the nationality of the litigants and became a function of place: in litigation between foreign nationals or where only the defendant was a foreign national the Greek civil courts had jurisdiction in every case, provided that any one such court had territorial competence for the dispute in question.

11. However, opinions differed regarding disputes under private international law where the defendant was a Greek national. According to the 'resultant' theory ([10]), the purpose of the legislator in drafting Article 126 of the law introducing the Civil Code was fully to equate foreign and Greek nationals as regards jurisdiction. Consequently, just as, under Article 126, international jurisdiction with regard to foreign nationals was nothing more nor less than the sum total, or the resultant of various particular jurisdictions, so in the case of Greek nationals international jurisdiction could not be exercised by the Greek State unless such nationals were also linked by some general or special jurisdiction to the area of jurisdiction of a Greek civil court, their Greek nationality being insufficient for this purpose. On the other hand, the 'distinction' theory ([11]), which finally prevailed in jurisprudence in the period up to 1968, distinguished between foreign and Greek defendants, requiring only in the case of the former that some form of jurisdiction should exist and in the case of the latter merely that they possess Greek nationality. This conception of jurisdiction as a function of nationality proved in practice to be an unfortunate privilege for Greeks in that it allowed them to be sued in Greek courts without there being any other connecting factor than their nationality, whereas possession of Greek nationality was not sufficient for a plaintiff to be able to bring proceedings against a foreign national in Greek courts ([12]).

12. The introduction of the new Code of Civil Procedure (on 16 September 1968) marked the final break with the French system and led to the predominance of the 'resultant' theory. Under Article 53 of the law introducing the Code, Article 126 of the Civil Code was repealed and Article 3 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure laid down that Greek and foreign nationals were subject to the jurisdiction of the civil courts in so far as a Greek court was competent. The fact that Greek and foreign nationals were referred to on the same basis and on the same level and that Article 3 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure was stated to be the prime source of international jurisdiction under Greek law resulted, to use the expression frequently encountered in jurisprudence, in Greek law switching from the principle of nationality to the principle of territoriality. Since that time, and irrespective of the nationality of any of the litigants, the pre-requisite for international jurisdiction to lie with the Greek State has been, as a rule, that the dispute must be subject to the general or special jurisdiction of a Greek civil court ([13]). Only by way of exception, namely in matrimonial disputes and disputes between parents and children, will the Greek nationality of any of the litigants of itself constitute a basis of jurisdiction on the part of the Greek courts (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 612 and 622).

13. The various individual jurisdictions which thus together make up international jurisdiction under modern Greek law do not diverge all that much from general practice under the laws of the other Community countries ([14]). General jurisdiction is based on the domicile or seat, and secondarily on the residence, of the defendant (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 22 to 26 and 32). General jurisdiction is automatically set aside when any of the six special exclusive jurisdictions under the Code of Civil Procedure applies: jurisdiction of the court for the place where the property is situated in the case of disputes concerning rights in rem or similar rights in, or tenancies of, immovable property (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 29); jurisdiction in matters relating to succession, vested in the court for the last place of domicile of the testator (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 30, see also Article 810); jurisdiction based on related actions, where the court hearing the main action has jurisdiction in respect of ancillary proceedings (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 31); jurisdiction in respect of company disputes, covering disputes between a company and its members and between the members themselves, in so far as they arise out of the company relationship, vested in the court for the place where the company has its seat (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 27); jurisdiction in respect of management under a court order, vested in the local court which made the order (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 28); jurisdiction in respect of counter-claims (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 34), although it should be noted that under Greek law the filing of a counter-claim is not obligatory, nor is any substantive connection required between the defendant's counter-claim and the claim brought by the plaintiff.

The general section of the Code of Civil Procedure also lays down six concurrent special jurisdictions with the plaintiff being able to choose between them and general jurisdiction (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 41): jurisdiction in respect of legal acts, with either the place where the act was drawn up or the place of performance being taken as connecting factors (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 33); jurisdiction in respect of criminal offences, which in the case of civil disputes arising from acts giving rise to criminal proceedings lies either with the court for the place where the offence was committed or with the court for the place where the consequences of the offence occurred (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 35, Criminal Code, Article 16); jurisdiction in respect of management other than under a court order, which lies with the court for the place of management (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 36); jurisdiction where identical law is applicable, which, mainly in case of jointly defended proceedings, allows the defendants to be sued in a court which has jurisdiction for any one of them (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 37); jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes, which vests in the court for the last place of joint residence of the spouses (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 39); jurisdiction in respect of claims relating to property, where proceedings may be instituted both before the court for the place where the defendant has resided for a reasonable length of time (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 38), and, mainly where proceedings involve a defendant not domiciled in Greece, before the court for the place where property belonging to the defendant or the object in litigation is situated (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 40). With regard to special procedures (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 591 to 681) Articles 616, 664 and 678 provide for additional forms of concurrent special jurisdiction which in principle favour the plaintiff.

14. The possibility of basing jurisdiction on an agreement between the litigants is very widely recognized in disputes concerning property (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 3, paragraphs 1, 42 to 44). The agreement may in principle be informal, an agreement in writing being required only where it relates to a potential future dispute. An informal agreement may in principle also be tacit, and be inferred from a defendant's failure to challenge the jurisdiction of the court when entering an appearance at the first hearing of the case. An express agreement is required only where special exclusive jurisdiction is to be set aside. There is a legal presumption that a court on which jurisdiction is conferred has exclusive jurisdiction. In addition, no substantive connecting factor is required between the dispute to which the conferral of jurisdiction relates and the Greek State. The only bar lies in the prohibition against submitting to Greek jurisdiction disputes concerning immovable property situated outside Greece (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 4, first subparagraph, in fine). Lastly, just as jurisdiction may be conferred, it may also be removed with the submission of a dispute to a foreign court; such agreements are not considered as infringements of Greek sovereignty or as contrary to public policy; recourse to foreign courts merely has to be possible so that there is no international denial of justice.

15. Jurisdiction of the Greek State with regard to the substance of a dispute is not a pre-condition for provisional measures to be taken. Of course, such measures may be ordered by the court before which the principal case is pending (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 684 and 683 (2)). However, they can also be ordered by the court with competence ratione materiae nearest to the place where they are to be implemented (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 683 (3)). Hence, the fact that the principal action is pending before a foreign court or, even where not so pending, is subject to the international jurisdiction of a State other than Greece does not prevent provisional measures being taken in Greece.

16. Lack of jurisdiction is in general examined by the court of its own motion. However, since jurisdiction can in principle also be based on a defendant's failure to challenge when entering an appearance ([15]), the question of lack of jurisdiction is only examined by the court of its own motion where the defendant does not enter an appearance at the first hearing or where he appears and does not challenge but his silence cannot constitute a basis for implied jurisdiction because the dispute relates to immovable property situated outside Greece (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 4, first subparagraph), or because the object of the dispute is not property, or because the law provides for exclusive jurisdiction (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 4, first subparagraph, Article 42 (1), first and second subparagraphs, Article 46, first subparagraph, Article 263 (a)).

Where jurisdiction is found to be lacking, the action will be dismissed as inadmissible (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 4, second subparagraph) and there will be no referral to a foreign court. However, if despite lack of jurisdiction a judgment is given in the case, it may be challenged in law but will not be void unless it infringes the rules of extraterritoriality (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 313 (1) (e)).

17. Under the old civil procedure of 1834 (Articles 858 to 860) a distinction was made in the enforcement in Greece of judgments of foreign courts according to the nationality of the party against whom enforcement was sought ([16]). If that party was a foreigner, enforcement was authorized by the presiding judge of a court of first instance and three conditions had to be satisfied:

(a) the foreign instrument had to be enforceable in the State of origin;

(b) that State must have possessed jurisdiction (which was assessed according to Greek law);

(c) the instrument must not be contrary to Greek public policy.

On the other hand, if the party against whom enforcement was sought was Greek, jurisdiction to authorize enforcement was vested in the three member courts of first instance and two further conditions had to be satisfied:

(d) the judgment could not be in contradiction with proven fact, a requirement which led to a limited review of the foreign judgment as to its substance, and

(e) no events must have occurred to invalidate the claim included in the foreign instrument. These conditions, which were required by law for enforcement to be authorized, were also extended by judicial practice to the simple recognition of the res judicata status of foreign judgments ([17]).

18. Here, too ([18]), the new Code of Civil Procedure eliminated all distinction between Greek and foreign nationals ([19]). Irrespective of the nationality of the party against whom enforcement is sought, the following conditions must now be satisfied for the enforcement of a foreign judgment to be authorized in Greece (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 905 (2) (3), 323, points 2 to 5):

(a) it must be enforceable under the law of the place where it was delivered;

(b) the dispute must have been subject in accordance with Greek law to the jurisdiction of the State in which the judgment originates;

(c) the party against whom the judgment has been given must not have been deprived of the right of defence, or the right of participation in general in the proceedings;

(d) the foreign judgment must not conflict with a judgment which has become res judicata delivered by a Greek court in proceedings between the same parties and in the same dispute;

(e) the foreign judgment must not conflict with public morality or public policy. Apart fro these conditions, there is no requirement as to reciprocity or application of the substantive law defined as applicable under Greek private international law, nor may the procedural legality or the correctness as to substance of the foreign judgment be verified ([20]). Lastly, as regards the enforcement of other foreign instruments, these need merely be enforceable under the law of the place where they were issued and must not be contrary to public morality or public policy (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 905 (2)).

19. The distinction between Greek and foreign nationals has also been abolished as regards both jurisdiction ([21]) to authorize enforcement and the relevant procedure. In every case, jurisdiction is vested in the single-member court of first instance in the area of jurisdiction in which the debtor is domiciled or, where this is inapplicable, is resident; where neither connecting factor applies jurisdiction is vested in the single-member court of first instance in Athens. The procedure followed is that applicable in non-contentious proceedings (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 905 (1)), and an enforcement order may be challenged by means of an ordinary appeal, reasoned appeal against a default judgment, judicial review and appeal in cassation (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 905 (1), second subparagraph, Article 760 to 772), none of which have suspensive effect under the law (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 763, 770, 771 and 774). A foreign instrument, the enforcement of which has been authorized, is enforced in accordance with the enforcement procedure and measures provided for under Greek law ([22]).

20. Recognition of the res judicata status of foreign judgments is basically subject to the same conditions. The only difference is that instead of the judgment having to be enforceable under the law of the place where it was delivered ([23]), it must have res judicata status under Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 323, point 1). Recognition of res judicata status is not subject to any special procedure (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 323 pr.) and such status may be recognized as an incidental matter by any judicial or administrative authority ([24]). Only in the case of the recognition of the res judicata force of foreign judgments concerning the status of persons, in particular with respect to divorce, must the same procedure be followed as for authorization of enforcement (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 905 (4)).

21. Greece is not a contracting party to any bilateral international conventions which directly govern jurisdiction ([25]). Any clauses in agreements placing foreign nationals on the same legal footing as Greek nationals are no longer relevant ([26]), from the point of view of jurisdiction, since such assimilation is now a rule of Greek internal law further to Article 126 of the law introducing the Civil Code and Article 3 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure ([27]).

22. Greece is a contracting party to eight 'single' ([28]) bilateral conventions concerning recognition and the enforcement of judgments of foreign courts; these are with Czechoslovakia (1927, Law 3617/1928), Yugoslavia (1959, Decree 4007/1959), the Federal Republic of Germany (1961, Law 4305/1963), Romania (1972, Decree 429/1974), Hungary (1979, Law 1149/1981, Articles 24 to 31), Poland (1979, Law 1184/1981, Articles 21 to 31), Syria (1981, Law 1450/1984, Articles 21 to 29) and Cyprus (1984, Law 1548/1985, Articles 21 to 28). As regards their content, these conventions do not differ substantially from Greek internal law in the Code of Civil Procedure, and they apply irrespective of the nationality of the litigants. They do not permit review as to substance, and they do not make recognition dependent on the substantive law applied in the foreign judgment except in questions concerning the status of persons. The most detailed of these conventions, that between Greece and Germany ([29]), covers the enforcement not only of court judgments but also of court settlements and authentic instruments (Articles 13 to 16); it also covers non-contentious proceedings (Article 1 (1), subparagraph 1) and interim orders (Article 6) and allows recognition to be refused on grounds of lack of jurisdiction solely where the courts of the country in which recognition is sought have exclusive jurisdiction, or where the court which gave the judgment heard the case exclusively on the basis of jurisdiction in respect of matters relating to property (Article 3 (3) (4)).

23. Multilateral conventions ([30]) which apply in Greece include the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961 (Decree 503/1970) and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 (Law 90/1975), which deal in detail with extra-territoriality. Other conventions applicable include those of 7 February 1970 on the International Carriage of Goods (CIM), Passengers and Luggage (CIV) by Rail (Emergency Law 365/1968), which contain provisions governing jurisdiction (Article 44) and the enforcement of judgments of foreign courts (Article 56). The New York Multilateral Convention of 20 June 1956 on the Recovery abroad of Maintenance, which applies in Greece (Decree 4421/1964), also contains provisions on the enforcement of foreign judgments (Articles 5 and 6). In the area of maritime law there are the Brussels Conventions of 10 May 1952 on Certain Rules concerning Civil Jurisdiction in matters of Collision (Law 4407/1964) and on the Unification of Certain Rules relating to the Arrest of Sea-going Ships (Decree 4570/1966, in particular Article 7 on international jurisdiction). As regards air law there is the Warsaw Convention on the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air (Emergency Law 596/1937, in particular Article 28 (1) and Article 32 on jurisdiction). In the area of arbitration law there is the New York Convention of 10 June 1958 on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (Decree 4220/1961). However, Greece has not signed the International Conventions of The Hague of 1 February 1971 on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, and of 2 October 1973 on the Recognition and Enforcement of Decisions relating to Maintenance Obligations; it has signed (but not yet ratified) the earlier Hague Convention of 15 April 1958 concerning the Recognition and Enforcement of Decisions relating to Maintenance Obligations towards Children. It has also signed, but not yet ratified, the Luxembourg European Convention of 20 May 1980 (within the framework of the Council of Europe) on the Recognition and Enforcement of Decisions concerning Custody of Children and on Restoration of Custody of Children.

III. THE COMMUNITY CONVENTION ON JURISDICTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENTS IN CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL MATTERS

A. SCOPE OF THE CONVENTION

24. The Convention concerns issues of international points of contact. In so far as it governs the international jurisdiction of the courts the Convention obviously concerns international issues or, to use the normal definition, issues which contain a foreign element. This characteristic, which is inherent in the very nature of the Convention, is stressed in the third paragraph of the preamble; this refers in French to determining the 'compétence de (...) juridictions dans l'ordre international' (jurisdiction of the courts at international level), which the Greek version of the Convention renders as 'international jurisdiction'. Furthermore, both in the title and in the text of the Convention the term 'jurisdiction'(French: 'compétence judiciaire') is translated in Greek as 'international jurisdiction' in line with normal Greek terminology which distinguishes between international jurisdiction and internal competence.

25. The Convention also governs the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments, i.e. judgments delivered in one Contracting State recognition or enforcement of which is sought in another Contracting State; the same applies as regards authentic instruments and court settlements.

26. The Convention relates to civil and commercial matters. The meaning of the expression 'civil and commercial matters' (Article 1, first paragraph) is not defined in the Convention.

However, Article 1 specifies that civil or commercial matters are to be classified as such irrespective of the nature of the court before which they are heard or which gave judgment and of whether the proceedings are contentious or non-contentious. Hence the criterion which applies is substantive rather than procedural. According to the Court of Justice of the European Communities (31), it is essentially determined by the legal relationships between the parties to the action or the subject-matter of the action.

27. Although the drafters of the Convention did not attempt to define or to give clear guidance as to the meaning of the expression 'civil and commercial matters', there can be no doubt that it is to be determined on the basis of the Convention. The concept is therefore independent and is not determined by reference to any specific national legal order. Its meaning should accordingly not be sought in the law of the Contracting State of the court seised or even in the law of the State, whether a Contracting State or not, governing the substance of the action. The Court of Justice of the European Communities confirmed this principle of interpretation in its Judgment of 14 October 1976 (32) when it emphasized the independent nature of the concept and stated that it should be interpreted by reference, on the one hand, to the objectives and scheme of the Convention and, on the other, to the general principles which stem from the corpus of the national legal systems. This in the Court's view makes it necessary to ensure, as far as possible, that the rights and obligations which derive from the Convention for the Contracting States and the persons to whom it applies are equal and uniform. The same approach as regards interpretation can be found in more recent judgments of the Court (33).

28. Civil and commercial matters must be distinguished from disputes of public law, which do not come within the scope of the Convention. In the view of the Court of Justice, it would appear that these two categories can be distinguished on the basis of a traditional feature of public law in continental jurisprudence, namely the exercise of sovereign powers (34). The problem assumed a new dimension when the Convention was opened for accession by States belonging to the family of Anglo-Saxon law which do not in principle recognize the distinction between private law and public law. The existence side-by-side in the Community of divergent approaches of this kind naturally creates difficulties in seeking an independent, generally applicable definition. The Court will be impeded in performing its interpretative function in the absence of general principles common to all the legal systems of the Contracting Parties from which a single criterion can be deduced for distinguishing matters which can be classified as coming under public law. A partial solution to the problem was attempted with the addition made by the 1978 Convention (Article 3) to the original text of the first paragraph of Article 1 of the Convention; the addition specifies that the Convention does not extend 'in particular, to revenue, customs or administrative matters'. This distinction, which may have been self-evident in the case of the majority of the Contracting Parties (including Greece), was necessary in the case of those States — Ireland and the United Kingdom — where the distinction between private and public law is not as firmly and extensively established in positive law or in current jurisprudence.

29. Civil and commercial matters also include relationships arising from contracts of employment. This approach, which is in line with prevailing Greek legal thinking, has been confirmed by the Court of Justice of the European Communities (35).

30. Exclusions

The second paragraph of Article 1 specifies a series of matters which are excluded from the scope of the Convention. Most represent a genuine limitation of the civil and commercial matters covered, with their exclusion being necessitated for different reasons in every instance. This is the case as regards the relationships listed in point 1 (status or legal capacity of natural persons, rights and property arising out of a matrimonial relationship and succession), point 2 (bankruptcy, proceedings relating to the winding up of insolvent companies or other legal persons, judicial arrangements, compositions and analogous proceedings), and point 4 (arbitration). The exclusion contained in point 3 (social security) is justified both by the fact that social security comes under public law in some countries whilst it falls in the borderline area between private law and public law in others, and because social security matters are increasingly governed by secondary Community legislation.

31. Point 1 of the second paragraph of Article 1 refers to the status or legal capacity of natural persons, rights and property arising out of a matrimonial relationship and succession. The exclusion of these matters from the scope of the Convention was necessitated by their specific characteristics, which are reflected in the great variety of ways they are dealt with at national level in both substantive law and private international law. Their inclusion in the Convention would have meant either that these specific characteristics would have had to be levelled out or, alternatively, that such matters would have been dealt with in a rather inconsistent manner from the point of view of international jurisdiction, although consistency is one of the main aims of the Convention. Faced with this dilemma, the drafters of the Convention preferred to exclude these relationships from its scope.

32. Interpreting these exclusions, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has ruled that the enforcement of a judicial decision on the placing under seal or the freezing of the assets of the spouse as a provisional measure in the course of proceedings for divorce does not fall within the scope of the Convention ([36]). The Court took the same view in the case of an application on the part of the wife for the Court to order the husband, as a provisional protective measure, to deliver up a document in order to prevent its use as evidence in a dispute concerning a husband's management of his wife's property, because the management was closely connected with the proprietary relationship resulting directly from the marriage bond ([37]).

33. Matters relating to maintenance, however, come within the scope of the Convention, as is apparent from Article 5, point 2, which governs jurisdiction with regard to maintenance obligations. As was perhaps to be expected, problems have arisen from the common practice of linking maintenance claims with proceedings relating to the status of persons, and, in particular, with divorce proceedings. The Court of Justice of the European Communities has ruled that the Convention is applicable to an interim maintenance award under a divorce judgment ([38]). This point is expressly dealt with in the 1978 amendment to Article 5, point 2, of the Convention.

34. Point 2 of the second paragraph of Article 1 excludes from the scope of the Convention bankruptcies, proceedings relating to the winding up of insolvent companies or other legal persons, judicial arrangements, composition and analogous proceedings. These matters had to be excluded given that the Member States of the Community intended, and still intend, to draft a separate Community bankruptcy convention. In relation to Article 16, point 2, which stipulates that, in proceedings which have as their object the dissolution of companies or other legal persons or associations of natural or legal persons, the courts of the Contracting State in which the company, legal person or association has its seat have exlusive jurisdiction, this exclusion may give rise to problems where the dissolution is a consequence of bankruptcy, winding up, judicial arrangement, composition, or analogous proceedings ([39]).

35. Arbitration, a form of proceedings encountered in civil and, in particular, commercial matters, (Article 1, second paragraph, point 4) is excluded because of the existence of numerous multilateral international agreements in this area. Proceedings which are directly concerned with arbitration as the principal issue, e.g. cases where the court is instrumental in setting up the arbitration body, judicial annulment or recognition of the validity or the defectiveness of an arbitration award, are not covered by the Convention. However, the verification, as an incidental question, of the validity of an arbitration agreement which is cited by a litigant in order to contest the jurisdiction of the court before which he is being sued pursuant to the Convention, must be considered as falling within its scope.

36. Social security, which is excluded from the Convention by point 3 of the second paragraph of Article 1, is regarded in some national legal systems as a matter of public law and in others as a mixed legal category on the borderline between public law and private law. Although it could perhaps be argued that this feature alone would be enough to exclude social security from the scope of the Convention as defined in the first paragraph of Article 1, its express exclusion was nevertheless thought to be desirable. There were, however, other reasons as well for excluding social security from the scope of the Convention, such as the fact that it is governed by the Treaties and by secondary Community legislation, and the fact that there are numerous bilateral social security agreements between the Community Member States. The drafters of the Convention considered that this legal situation should not be disturbed by extending the Convention to regulate social security.

37. It should, however, be noted that this exclusion concerns relationships directly connected with the insurance aspect and, particularly, relationships between the insuring body and the insured party, his successors in title and the employer. Ancillary matters, such as direct claims of the injured party against the insuring body or subrogation of the insuring body to the claims of an injured party as against a third party responsible for the injury or damage, are in principle covered by ordinary legal rules and come within the scope of the Convention.

B. JURISDICTION

38. General state of the law

In common with Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 3, paragraph 1, 22) the Convention (Article 2, first paragraph) bases international jurisdiction on the domicile of the defendant. The fundamental provision in the first paragraph of Article 2 expressly dissociates jurisdiction from nationality and, secondly, requires proceedings against persons domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State to be brought before the courts of that State except where the Convention itself provides otherwise (specifically in Articles 5 to 18). Consequently, the domicile of a defendant in a Contracting State, irrespective of whether he is a national of such a State, also serves as the criterion for defining the application of the Convention externally. Given that the first paragraph of Article 2 excludes nationality as a factor in determining jurisdiction, the second paragraph provides for the positive assimilation of foreigners to nationals of the State concerned by making the former subject to the rules of jurisdiction applicable to the latter ([40]).

39. The Convention does not itself define domicile; instead, reference is made to the internal law of the State in the territory of which domicile is being investigated for the case in point (Article 52). However, the mere place of residence of the defendant was rejected as a basis of jurisdiction ([41]). Consequently, under the Convention, Article 38 of the Greek Code of Civil Procedure may not be invoked in order to extend the jurisdiction of the Greek courts. For the rest, however, the exclusion of residence as an independent basis of jurisdiction on a par with domicile does not affect the application of Article 23 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure: if the defendant is domiciled in a non-Contracting State but is resident in a Contracting State, Article 2 will of course not be applicable, but nor can recourse be had to Article 23 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure which consistently prefers domicile wherever it may be found to exist; if, however, a defendant has no domicile at all but has his place of residence in Greece, then, since such residence constitutes the party's closest geographical connecting factor and thus justifies the application of Article 23 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be regarded as satisfying the purpose of Article 2 and hence as constituting a basis of jurisdiction.

40. As is apparent from the first paragraph of Article 2, since the Convention governs solely international jurisdiction and not in principle territorial competence, it merely requires that the courts of the State of domicile of the defendant be responsible without stipulating that it be heard by the particular court for the place where the defendant is domiciled. The Convention, however, contains no particular provisions determining the legal domicile of certain parties because, as stated above, it generally refers that issue to the internal law of the State concerned. The third paragraph of Article 52 nevertheless stipulates the law applicable when determining the dependent domicile in question. However, the Convention does not easily accommodate national provisions which displace the material time and replace the present domicile by a previous domicile. Thus, the Convention takes precedence over Article 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which applies to Greek public servants posted abroad without extraterritorial status (e.g. teachers at Greek schools or works supervisors for Greek workers in another Contracting State) and makes them subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of their place of domicile before being sent abroad. Accordingly, if a Greek teacher previously domiciled in Athens is posted to the Greek school in Munich and becomes domiciled there, general jurisdiction will henceforth be vested exclusively in the Munich courts, and no longer in the Athens courts.

41. The Convention treats the seat of companies and other legal persons as their domicile (Article 53, first paragraph, first sentence). The seat is determined in accordance with the rules of private international law of the court seised (Article 53, first paragraph, second sentence). The basic rule is the same as that in Article 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as regards including associations of natural persons who pursue a common aim without legal personality, since it was the intention when framing the Convention ([42]) that they should be covered by the 'company'.

42. Special bases

Article 3 enunciates the general principle of the Convention, that persons domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued in the courts of another Contracting State only to the extent permitted under the special jurisdictions stipulated in Articles 5 to 18 of the Convention ([43]). Hence, as regards matters within its scope, the Convention does not allow of the existence of special jurisdictions other than those it itself specifies. However, the restriction applies only to matters within its scope ([44]). In disputes involving no foreign element, it will therefore still be possible, after the Convention's entry into force, for persons domiciled in Greece to be sued in Greek courts other than the court of their place of domicile by virtue of special jurisdictions under the Greek courts other than the court of their place of domicile by virtue of special jurisdictions under the Greek Code of Civil Procedure, even where such jurisdictions are not provided for in the Convention. The exhaustive nature of the special jurisdictions which, according to the Convention, provide the basis for determining jurisdiction becomes apparent once a person is to be sued in a Contracting State other than his State of domicile. The Convention thus allows general jurisdiction of domicile as a basis for international jurisdiction to be set aside only in favour of special jurisdictions exhaustively enumerated in the Convention itself. This approach is not unknown in Greek internal law. Under Article 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a person may be sued before a court other than that of his place of domicile only where the law so provides, i.e. where special jurisdiction is stipulated.

43. In this connection, the Convention gives a specific, but only indicative, list of bases of jurisdiction provided for under national procedural rules but considered under the Convention to be exorbitant (règles de compétence exorbitantes). These include rules which base jurisdiction on the fact that either the plaintiff or the defendant is a national of the State in question (Belgium, France, Luxembourg, Netherlands), on the service of a writ of summons on national territory on a defendant who is temporarily present there (Ireland, United Kingdom), on the seizure of property situated on national territory (United Kingdom), on the presence on national territory of property belonging to the defendant (Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, United Kingdom) or on other forms of unfavourable treatment of foreign nationals (Italy). Consequently, Greek courts will in future be unable to base their jurisdiction on the special jurisdiction in respect of property under Article 40 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the defendant is domiciled in any Contracting State. The existence, in a State, of property belonging to the defendant, and even the presence there of the object in litigation, are not regarded by the Convention as constituting a sufficient connecting factor to provide a basis of jurisdiction.

44. Both the general provisions of the Convention and the exclusion of exorbitant bases of jurisdiction in the second paragraph of Article 3 relate solely to defendants domiciled in a Contracting State, irrespective of the domicile and, of course, the nationality of the plaintiff. However, where a defendant is not domiciled in a Contracting State the Convention does not contain any rules of its own but refers to the internal law of the State of the court hearing the action (Article 4, first paragraph). As against such a defendant, the Convention permits any person domiciled in a Contracting State, whatever his nationality, to avail himself of the law of that State, including, of course, the rules of exorbitant jurisdiction which are excluded under the second paragraph of Article 3 (Article 4, second paragraph). Consequently, although defendants are treated unequally according to whether or not they are domiciled in a Contracting State, plaintiffs at least enjoy equal treatment irrespective of nationality, provided they are domiciled in a Contracting State. However, the judgment handed down will, in any event, be recognized and enforced in accordance with the Convention. Apart from the possibility of prorogation of jurisdiction pursuant to Articles 17 and 18, an express exception to the principle that the application of the Convention is dependent on the defendant being domiciled in a Contracting State is constituted by the exclusive jurisdiction provided for under Article 16. In the five categories of proceedings listed in Article 16, the Convention considers that the very close link between the dispute and the territory of a Contracting State must prevail over the fact that the defendant is not domiciled in the territory of any of the Contracting States. Thus, in addition to the domicile of the defendant, the Convention also uses the situation of immovable property, the seat of legal persons, the place where entries have been made in public registers and the place where a judgment has been or is to be enforced as objective ([45]) connecting factors for defining its application.

45. The following sections 2 to 6 of Title II (Articles 5 to 18) contain special rules directly governing jurisdiction. They lay down special bases of jurisdiction, in some cases supplementing general jurisdiction based on domicile, (e.g. Article 5 dealing with certain categories of proceedings and Article 6 dealing with certain categories of persons, in particular defendants), and in others excluding such jurisdiction (Article 16). For certain categories of proceedings which, it was felt, required special procedural arrangements, such as matters relating to insurance and consumer contracts, the relevant Sections 3 (Articles 7 to 12a) and 4 (Articles 13 to 15) lay down self-contained rules on jurisdiction in the sense that, of all the other provisions of the Convention relating to jurisdiction, only Article 4 dealing with the case of defendants with no domicile in a Contracting State ([46]) and Article 5, point 5, dealing with disputes arising out of the operation of a branch, apply as well. Consequently, in the case of matters relating to insurance and in the case of consumer contracts, the domicile of the parties to the dispute is taken into account as a possible basis of jurisdiction only in so far as it is specifically referred to in the relevant section, and recourse may not be had to the general provision in Article 2.

46. Special concurrent jurisdiction

Articles 5 to 6a, which lay down a series of objective (Article 5) and subjective (Article 6) connecting factors, specify the cases in which the Convention allows a person domiciled in one Contracting State to be sued in another such State. In other words, they provide for 'special jurisdiction', which, provided that a defendant is domiciled in a Contracting State and that the bases of the special jurisdiction exist, in the case in question, in the territory of another Contracting State, assign jurisdiction to the latter State as well as to the State of domicile of the defendant. The choice is a matter for the plaintiff and is expressed when proceedings are instituted ([47]).

47. Article 5 of the original Convention contained five cases of special jurisdiction (points 1 to 5), namely matters relating to contracts, to maintenance obligations, to tort, delict or quasi-delict, to civil claims for damages in criminal courts and to disputes arising out of the operations of a branch. With the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom, the 1978 Accession Convention added two further cases, namely disputes relating to trusts and disputes relating to the payment of remuneration in respect of salvage. Article 5 is one of the most important and most frequently applied articles of the Convention.

48. Article 5, point 1, regarding matters relating to contracts establishes the jurisdiction of the court of the place of performance of the obligation in question. The place of performance is thus recognized as a connecting factor which, for the purposes of jurisdiction, can apply with respect to all matters arising out of the operation of a contract. According to the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, this special jurisdiction may be invoked even where the existence of the contract on which the claim is based is in dispute between the parties ([48]). Matters relating to a contract can also include obligations in regard to the payment of a sum of money which have their basis in the relationship existing between an association and its members, irrespective of whether the obligations in question arise simply from the act of becoming a member or from that act in conjunction with one or more decisions made by organs of the association ([49]). The definition of the courts referred to in the Article gives rise to greater difficulties than the delimitation of the matters covered. Thus, it has been held that the place of performance of an obligation is to be determined in accordance with the law which governs the obligation in question according to the rules of private international law of the court before which the matter is brought ([50]). If the national law applicable so permits, the place of performance may be specified by the parties without it being necessary for their agreement to fulfil the formal conditions required under Article 17 of the Convention for prorogation of jurisdiction ([51]). Finally, as regards the obligation the place of performance of which constitutes the basis of special jurisdiction, whereas the Court previously defined it as the contractual obligation (of any kind) forming the basis of the legal proceedings ([52]), it now appears to be limited, in the case of proceedings based on a number of obligations possibly to be performed in a number of places, to the obligation which characterizes the contract ([53]).

49. Special jurisdiction based on the place of performance of a contractual obligation differs from current Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, 33) in two respects. Firstly, it relates only to disputes concerning contracts, with unilateral legal acts not being covered by the actual wording of the provision. However, if the term 'contract' in Article 5, point 1, is interpreted specifically within the framework of the Convention, it would probably include quasi-contractual obligations within the meaning of Article 33 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, whereas it remains an open question whether disputes arising from unilateral legal acts are covered. Secondly, under Article 5 only the place of performance of the obligation is considered to be relevant and not also, as in Article 33 (1) of the Greek Code of Civil Procedure, the place where the contract was concluded. Finally, in line with current Greek legal thinking, it is clear under the Convention that the place of performance means the place where the obligation has been or is to be performed, obviously as determined by the parties or under the law applicable ([54]). It should be noted here that with regard to disputes between the master and a member of the crew of a sea-going ship registered in Denmark, in Greece or in Ireland, Article Vb of the 1968 Protocol provides for the possibility of intervention by the competent diplomatic or consular officers.

50. Article 5, point 2, basically provides that jurisdiction in respect of maintenance claims, whatever their legal origin or content ([55]), can also be exercised by the courts for the place where the maintenance creditor is domiciled or habitually resident. This affords the latter a degree of legal protection since he is thus not obliged to call upon a court some distance away from the place where he is established. The 1978 Accession Convention extended this form of special jurisdiction. It now includes maintenance proceedings which are combined, or heard jointly, with proceedings concerning the status of a person — which do not, in themselves, come within the scope of the Convention — and the jurisdiction of the court hearing the main action is thus extended to ancillary maintenance proceedings, unless such jurisdiction is based solely on the nationality of one of the parties. The dependence of the maintenance claim on the main action concerning the status of a person will therefore extend jurisdiction in every case where the latter is not construed solely on the basis of the nationality of one of the parties. Accordingly, since Greek law provides by way of exception that in matrimonial disputes, and disputes between parents and children, international jurisdiction can be based simply on the nationality of any one of the parties (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 612 and 622), the combining, or joint hearing, of such proceedings with maintenance proceedings (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 592 (2) and 614 (2)) is not an option which can be exercised under the Convention unless there is a further criterion other than nationality on which international jurisdiction can be based.

51. Article 5, point 3, provides for the special jurisdiction of the forum delicti commissi. This covers all obligations, pecuniary or otherwise, resulting from torts, delicts or quasi-delicts, and refers them to the courts for the place where the harmful event occurred. According to the Court of Justice of the European Communities ([56]), this can be either the place where the damage occurred or the place of the event giving rise to it. While this interpretation of the Convention on the subject of the relevant place is in line with current Greek law, the Convention nevertheless differs from Greek law in that, as it does not require that an act giving rise to criminal proceedings must have been committed (Code of Civil Procedure, 35), it also covers claims resulting from purely civil delicts.

52. Civil claims for damages (or restitution) based on an act giving rise to criminal proceedings are covered by Article 5, point 4. Under this provision, the possibility of bringing a civil action in the context of criminal proceedings constitutes an independent basis of jurisdiction, with the result that the criminal court, even if sitting elsewhere than 'the place where the harmful event occurred' (Article 5, point 3) ([57]), can acquire jurisdiction in respect of the civil action to the extent that its internal law so permits. While national legal systems thus remain free to determine whether civil actions in such circumstances are permissible and how criminal courts should proceed with respect to such actions, national codes of criminal procedure are directly affected by Article II of the 1968 Protocol. In particular, this Article provides (in the first paragraph) for the possibility of representation ('by persons qualified to do so') for defendants domiciled in a Contracting State who are being prosecuted in the criminal courts of another Contracting State of which they are not nationals for an offence which was not intentionally committed. According to the Court of Justice of the European Communities, this provision applies if subsequent civil proceedings have been, or may be, brought ([58]). By comparison with this provision, Greek law (Code of Criminal Procedure, 340, paragraph 2, first subparagraph) is in principle more strict, in that it permits a defendant to be represented only where he is accused of a petty offence or a minor crime carrying a financial penalty, a fine or a prison sentence of not more than three months, and not in every case of prosecution for an offence not intentionally committed. Consequently, under the Convention, Article 340, paragraph 2, first subparagraph, of the Code of Criminal Procedure will be replaced by Article II of the 1968 Protocol where it applies ([59]).

53. Jurisdiction in the case of disputes arising out of the operations of a branch, agency or other establishment (Article 5, point 5) is recognized under Greek law only in the form of jurisdiction based on partial domicile for business purposes (Civil Code, Article 51, subparagraph 3, as amended by Article 2 of Law 1329/1983; Code of Civil Procedure, Article 23, paragraph 2) and has not been commonly applied as a basis of jurisdiction. However, as regards the application of the Convention, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has delivered three judgments clarifying the meaning of the provision in question. Firstly, it did not apply the provision to the case of a sole agent who was not subject either to the control or to the direction of the principal ([60]). Secondly, it interpreted the meaning of a 'branch', stressing in particular that it must have the appearance of permanency as a place of business and as an extension of a parent body, and the meaning of disputes arising out of 'operations', which it considered as comprising contractual and non-contractual obligations concerning the management of the branch itself and undertakings entered into in the name of the parent body ([61]). Thirdly, it did not apply the provision in the case of an independent commercial agent entitled to represent several undertakings at the same time and who being free to arrange his own time and work did no more than transmit orders to the parent undertaking ([62]).

54. The provision contained in Article 5, point 6, is foreign to Greek law, which does not recognize trusts as such. This provision was added under the 1978 Accession Convention and it stipulates that the disputes to which it refers and which concern the creation or operation of a trust are subject to the jurisdiction of the Contracting State in which the trust is domiciled.

55. Article 5, point 7, introduces into the Convention as a basis of special jurisdiction the arrestment of cargo or freight in disputes concerning remuneration in respect of salvage at sea. Following the uncertainties which existed prior to the introduction of the Code of Civil Procedure, arrestment is not recognized as a basis of jurisdiction under modern Greek internal law. The latter, of course, recognizes jurisdiction based on property (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 40) in the more general sense, but precisely this jurisdiction is not allowed under the Convention (63). Article 5, point 7, of the Convention has to some extent re-introduced jurisdiction based on property, but in a very restricted form, i.e. only in the case of disputes concerning remuneration in respect of the salvage of a cargo or freight and further subject, in accordance with the traditional approach under common law (64), to the condition that the cargo or freight has been or could have been arrested.

56. The bases of special jurisdiction under Article 6 of the Convention which arise from personal connecting factors are in substance known in Greek law. The main differences between the Convention and the Greek Code of Civil Procedure relate to the following three points which correspond to the three special jurisdictions under the Convention:

(a) Jurisdiction in the case of joint proceedings is confined under the Convention to the courts for the place where any one of the defendants is domiciled. Greek law goes further and permits the institution of joint proceedings before the court which is vested with either general or some special form of jurisdiction in respect of any one of the defendants.

(b) Article 6, point 2, of the Convention limits jurisdiction based on related actions (see Code of Civil Procedure, Article 31) as a basis of international jurisdiction to third party proceedings. However, even in such instances it is not allowed as a basis of jurisdiction if it is found that the sole purpose of the third party proceedings was to distort the normal limits of international jurisdiction by removing the third party from the jurisdiction of the court which would be competent in his case. As third party proceedings are not recognized under German law, the Federal Republic of Germany preferred not to recognize this basis of jurisdiction in the case of its courts and instead to retain the requirements of notice of proceedings (German Code of Civil Procedure, 72 to 74, 1968 Protocol, Article V).

(c) Whereas jurisdiction based on a counter-claim does not, under Greek law, require that the opposing claims be related (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 34 and 268), the Convention limits this jurisdictional basis and requires that the counter-claim must arise 'from the same contract or facts on which the original claim was based'.

57. Under Article 6a, which was added by the 1978 Accession Convention, a court with jurisdiction in actions relating to liability arising from the use or operation of a ship also has jurisdiction over claims for limitation of such liability. This makes it legally easier for shipowners to limit their liability since they will be able to institute proceedings for such limitation before the courts of their place of domicile.

58. Matters relating to insurance

The whole of Section 3 (Articles 7 to 12a) which governs international jurisdiction in matters relating to insurance, is essentially concerned with the legal protection of policy-holders vis-à-vis insurers. It provides for proceedings to be brought against an insurer before the courts for the place where the policy-holder is domiciled (Article 8, point 2), or, in the case of liability insurance or insurance of immovable property, before the courts for the place where the harmful event occurred (Article 9). The same points of contact also apply in the case of actions brought by an injured party directly against the insurer, where such direct actions are permitted (Article 10, second paragraph). In addition, in so far as the law of the court permits third party proceedings, the Convention extends jurisdiction to cover the case of an insurer being joined in proceedings which an injured party has brought against the insured (Article 10, first paragraph), obviously without there being the restriction laid down by Article 6, point 2, in respect of false third party proceedings. There is also a corresponding legal requirement imposed on the insurer in cases where it is he who institutes proceedings. An insurer 'may bring proceedings only in the courts of the Contracting State in which the defendant is domiciled, irrespective of whether he is the policy-holder, the insured or a beneficiary' (Article 11, first paragraph). Lastly, Articles 12 and 12a provide limited scope for prorogation by permitting agreements between the parties provided that they are entered into after the dispute has arisen (Article 12, point 1) or that they are to the advantage of the party in dispute with the insurer (Article 12, points 2 and 3).

59. Consumer contracts

The content in Section 4 (Articles 13 to 15) dealing with jurisdiction over consumer contracts (it has been found that sale of a machine on instalment credit terms by one company to another is not a contract of this nature) (65) is in substance similar and are also unknown in Greek internal law. Thus, a seller or a lender may be sued in the courts for the place where the buyer or borrower (the consumer) is domiciled (Article 14, first paragraph), whereas a seller suing a buyer, or a lender suing a borrower, can only do so in the courts where the defendant is domiciled (Article 14, second paragraph).

Here too there is limited scope for prorogation, agreements between the parties being permitted only if they are entered into after the dispute has arisen (Article 15, point 1) or if they are to the advantage of the buyer or borrower (i.e. the consumer) (Article 15, point 2, see also point 3).

60. Special exclusive jurisdiction.

As in the case of Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 27 to 31 and Article 34), the Convention (Article 16) specifies a number of bases of exclusive jurisdiction in the sense that if the pre-conditions for any one of them are fulfilled, a plaintiff may not sue before the courts of the Contracting State in which the defendant is domiciled as in the case of the matters covered by Articles 5 and 6, and, irrespective of whether or not the defendant is domiciled in a Contracting State, may sue only before the courts of the State vested with the relevant exclusive jurisdiction. The list of bases of exclusive jurisdiction given in the Convention (Article 16) is in several respects more restrictive than under Greek internal law. Under the Convention (Article 16, point 1), 'proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in, or tenancies of, immovable property' are subject to the jurisdiction of the forum rei sitae but, unlike Article 29 (1) of the Greek Code of Civil Procedure, this does not appear to cover claims against any person in possession (actiones in rem scriptae), proceedings for compensation for expropriation ([66]) or disputes relating to the transfer of a usufructuary right in immovable property ([67]).

In contrast to the generalized jurisdiction in respect of company disputes under Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 27), which includes disputes arising out of the relationship between a company and its members and between the members themselves, the Convention (Article 16, point 2) limits the corresponding exclusive jurisdiction to proceedings concerned with validity, nullity or dissolution — albeit not only as regards companies but as regards legal persons in general — and not only as regards the existence of the legal persons as such but also as regards the validity of the decisions of their organs. Similarly, in Article 16, point 5 (enforcement of judgments), the Convention is narrower than Greek internal law, not as regards the proceedings covered but as regards the courts stated to have jurisdiction; reference is made only to the courts of the Contracting State in which the judgment has been or is to be enforced ([68]) and not also to the courts vested with general jurisdiction in respect of the third party entering the objection, which courts may be competent under Greek law pursuant to Article 933 (2) in conjunction with Article 584 of the Code of Civil Procedure in cases where an order has been granted but other enforcement measures have not (yet) been taken. Nor does this point cover, under the enforcement procedure, objections which are based on claims over which the courts of the State of enforcement have no jurisdiction ([69]). Lastly, the Convention does not recognize jurisdiction based on related actions to the extent provided in Article 31 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure: it confines such jurisdiction to third party proceedings (Article 6, point 2; but see also Article 22) ([70]) and assigns it concurrent status only. By contrast with these restrictive features, the Convention (Article 16, points 3 and 4) confers exclusive jurisdiction in proceedings which have as their object the validity of entries in public registers and proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of patents, trademarks, designs or other similar rights upon the courts of the State in which the relevant records are kept. The former category, namely entries in public registers, may be considered, at least as regards rights in rem in immovable property, as covered in Greek internal law by Articles 29 (1) and 791 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure taken together. As regards the latter category, relating to proceedings concerned with industrial property ([71]), Greek internal law provides for wider, and not exclusive, jurisdiction, with competence in respect of trademarks devolving upon the normal administrative tribunals. With particular reference to European (as opposed to Community) patents which are not valid throughout the Community, it is specified that exclusive jurisdiction rests with the courts of the particular Contracting State with respect to which the validity of the patent in the particular case is challenged (Article Vd of the 1968 Protocol) ([72]).

61. Prorogation of jurisdiction

The rules on prorogation of jurisdiction occupy a central position in the Convention and have repeatedly been the subject of interpretations by the Court of Justice of the European Communities. Exactly as in the presumption in Article 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Convention firstly recognizes the exclusive nature of agreements conferring jurisdiction (Article 17, first paragraph, first sentence in fine) and allows either a specific court or the courts in general of a Contracting State to be designated as having jurisdiction ([73]). Again in common with Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 43), the Convention allows jurisdiction to be conferred in respect of disputes which may arise in the future only where they are in connection 'with a particular legal relationship' (Article 17, first paragraph, first sentence). However, in contrast to Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 42 and 43) no distinction is made as regards the form of the agreement conferring jurisdiction according to whether it relates to present or future disputes (Article 17, first paragraph, first sentence: '... disputes which have arisen or which may arise...').

62. The Convention is more strict in its requirements as to the form an agreement conferring jurisdiction must take than Greek internal law, which does not in principle require that the agreement be in writing (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 42, see also the exception in Article 43). The Convention is basically oriented towards such agreements being formulated in writing and requires them to be in one of the following three forms:

(a) agreement in writing;

(b) oral agreement evidenced in writing;

(c) in international trade or commerce, a form which accords with practices in that trade or commerce of which the parties are or ought to have been aware.

With regard to forms (a) and (b), the Court of Justice of the European Communities has ruled that the requirement as to written form is fulfilled if the clause conferring jurisdiction is included among the general conditions printed on the back of a contract, provided that the contract contains an express reference to those general conditions ([74]); it has also ruled that in the case of an orally concluded contract, the vendor's written confirmation must have been accepted in writing by the purchaser, oral acceptance by the purchaser being sufficient only within the framework of a continuing trading relationship between the parties which is based on the general conditions of one of them, which conditions must contain a clause conferring jurisdiction ([75]). Recent judgments of the Court of Justice have become even more liberal. The Court has ruled that the second form, i.e. oral agreement evidenced in writing, can be complied with if the clause conferring jurisdiction is printed on a bill of lading which has been signed by only the carrier ([76]) and, more generally, if the clause has been confirmed in writing by one party only, provided that the document concerned has been received by the other and that the latter has raised no objection ([77]). In addition, agreements conferring jurisdiction which pre-date the entry into force of the Convention, and which would have been void under the national law in force at that time, can be regarded as valid if the proceedings were instituted after the entry into force of the Convention, the existence of jurisdiction being assessed, pursuant to Article 54, in accordance with Title II of the Convention ([78]). Finally, prorogation of jurisdiction is also rendered easier by the Court of Justice's view that agreement between the parties with regard to the place of performance, which constitutes a basis of jurisdiction pursuant to Article 5, point 1 ([79]), is clearly a substantive agreement and is not subject to the formal conditions laid down in Article 17 for prorogation of jurisdiction ([80]).

63. The Court of Justice of the European Communities has also widened the subjective and objective limits of agreements conferring jurisdiction. Thus, in the case of a contract of insurance for the benefit of a third party, it has ruled that the third party (the insured) may rely on conferral of jurisdiction even where he was not a party to the contract and did not sign the clause conferring jurisdiction provided that the consent of the insurer in that respect has been clearly manifested ([81]). The same holds true in the case of a third party holding a bill of lading vis-à-vis the carrier, provided that the national law applicable considers the third party to have succeeded to the shipper's rights and obligations ([82]). Further, as regards the objective scope of agreements conferring jurisdiction, the Court of Justice has found that the court before which a dispute has thereby been brought is not prohibited from taking into account a set-off connected with the legal relationship in dispute ([83]).

64. The effect of agreements conferring jurisdiction is limited by two factors under the Convention. The existence of exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 cannot, in the case in point, simply be circumvented, as in Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 42 (1), second paragraph), by an express agreement conferring jurisdiction, but is a bar to any form of prorogation. This is also true in the case of conflict with Articles 12 or 15 of the Convention which permit agreements conferring jurisdiction in the case of matters relating to insurance and in the case of consumer contracts, provided that they are entered into after the dispute has arisen, or that they are to the advantage of the policyholder, buyer or borrower ([84]). An agreement conferring jurisdiction is however not invalidated by the fact that it is drawn up in a language other than that prescribed by the legislation of a Contracting State ([85]). Under the Convention, the effect of agreements conferring jurisdiction also differs according to the domicile of the parties. The rules of the Convention apply in full if at least one of the parties is domiciled in a Contracting State (Article 17, first paragraph, first sentence). If none of the parties is so domiciled and the agreement confers jurisdiction on the courts of a Contracting State, its effect will be determined according to the law of that State, and the courts of other Contracting States might as a result lose any legitimate jurisdiction they might otherwise have. The third sentence of the first paragraph of Article 17 is specifically aimed at ensuring that this effect of loss of jurisdiction is dealt with in a uniform manner: it allows the courts of other Contracting States to have jurisdiction only if the courts chosen in the agreement have declined it ([86]), which means that the courts of other Contracting Parties may not examine the validity of the agreement conferring jurisdiction as an incidental issue.

65. As in the case of Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 42 (2), 3 (1)) the Convention (Article 18) also provides for tacit conferral of jurisdiction where a defendant enters an appearance before a court which lacks jurisdiction and he does not plead the court's lack of jurisdiction. The Court of Justice of the European Communities ([87]) has widened this basis of jurisdiction to cover unrelated counter-claims which, though not subject to the jurisdiction of the court, are lodged by the defendant and contested by the plaintiff in court in proceedings on the substance of the case. There can be tacit conferral even if jurisdiction has already been expressly conferred on another court pursuant to Article 17 ([88]). Furthermore, as in the case of Greek law, according to the consistent judicial practice of the Court of Justice of the European Communities ([89]), a defendant wishing to challenge a tacit conferral of jurisdiction is not obliged to confine his defence to contesting the court's jurisdiction, but may also make subsidiary submissions on the substance of the action in order not to be left without a defence in case the court finds that it has jurisdiction.

66. Examination as to jurisdiction

As in the case of Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 4, 46, first subparagraph and 263 (a)), under the Convention (Articles 19 and 20) a court must in principle examine of its own motion whether it has jurisdiction. This rule applies without exception where, by virtue of Article 16, the courts of another Contracting State have exclusive jurisdiction (Article 19) which cannot be set aside either by an express (Article 17, third paragraph) or tacit (Article 18 in fine) agreement conferring jurisdiction; the rule is indeed so strict that it requires the national court to declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction where the courts of another Contracting State have exclusive jurisdiction, even if, as in the case of ordinary appeals (Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 522, 533 (1) and 535 (1)) and further appeals (in cassation) (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 562 (4) by implication and 577 (3)), the national rules of procedure limit the court's reviewal to the grounds raised by the parties and these do not include a claim of lack of jurisdiction ([90]). However, if the defendant is domiciled in a Contracting State — the classic case to which the Convention applies ([91]) — the fact that jurisdiction may be implied where a defendant enters an appearance before a court without contesting its jurisdiction (Article 18) means that, as under Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 4, first subparagraph, see also Article 263 (a)), a court will of its own motion examine jurisdiction only where the defendant does not enter an appearance (Article 20, first paragraph). As for the subject-matter itself, the court's examination will of course be confined to the grounds from which jurisdiction may be derived pursuant to the Convention (Article 20, first paragraph in fine). The Convention adds the rule, which is new to Greek law ([92]) that before giving a judgment in default, the court must verify that the defendant has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or at least that all necessary steps have been taken to this end (Article 20, second paragraph). This transitional provision has, however, already been replaced (Article 20, third paragraph) by Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the service abroad of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil and commercial matters, which Greece has ratified ([93]). As well as this, and on a more general basis, the second paragraph of Article IV of the 1968 Protocol provides that documents for service may also be sent by the appropriate public officers of the State in which they have been drawn up directly to the appropriate public officers of the State in which the addressee is to be found, thus enabling there to be direct communication between public officers in the Contracting States ([94]).

67. Lis pendens

Article 21 of the Convention expressly regulates jurisdiction in cases of lis pendens in a way which corresponds to Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 222 (1)), but instead of obliging courts other than that first seised to stay their proceedings (as under the Code of Civil Procedure, Article 222 (2)), it requires them to dismiss the action on the grounds that they lack jurisdiction (Article 21, first paragraph, directly, and Article 21, second paragraph, by implication). Only as an exception may a court which would be required to decline jurisdiction stay its proceedings if the jurisdiction of the other court is contested (Article 21, second paragraph). However, the question of when proceedings may be regarded as having been instituted, and thus as definitively pending, in particular whether the filing of an action is enough, or whether notice must also be served, is one to be determined in accordance with the national law of each of the courts concerned ([95]).

68. Related actions

The Convention also provides for a corresponding possibility of stay of proceedings in the case of related actions (Article 22). Under the Convention, related actions do not constitute an independent basis of jurisdiction, but possible grounds for staying proceedings before any court other than that first seised where proceedings are pending before the courts of two or more Contracting States ([96]). In addition to a stay of proceedings, the Convention also allows a court other than that first seised to decline jurisdiction in respect of a related action pending before it if the following three conditions are all fulfilled:

(a) one of the parties so requests;

(b) the court first seised has jurisdiction over both actions; such jurisdiction cannot however be based on the fact that they are related except in the cases covered by Article 6, point 2 ([97]);

(c) the law of the court other than that first seised permits the consolidation of related actions pending in different courts ([98]).

This last condition is not recognized by Greek law, which allows actions to be heard jointly if they are in principle pending in the same court (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 246). Under the Convention, Greek courts would therefore be able to stay their proceedings, but not to decline jurisdiction in favour of the courts of another Contracting State. Lastly, the Convention gives a quasi-legislative definition of related actions (Article 22, third paragraph) which is vaguer and thus broader than the definition given to the concept in Greek internal law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 31(1)).

69. The rule that the court first seised takes precedence, as contained in Greek law (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 41, 221(1), point (c)) and expressed in the provisions on lis pendens and related actions in the Convention, also applies under the latter in particular in the rare instances where several courts have exclusive jurisdiction (Article 23). In such cases, exclusive jurisdiction as to the subject-matter gives way to the criterion as to time, i.e. to the rule of precedence of the court first seised of the action.

70. Provisional and protective measures

Although, in matters falling within its scope ([99]), the Convention does not prevent the court vested with international jurisdiction as to the substance from ordering provisional and protective measures, it also allows the simultaneous application of the various national laws in respect of provisional or protective measures in order not to impede the operation of interim judicial protection. Thus, Article 24 of the Convention leaves the courts of a Contracting State free to order provisional or protective measures available under the law of that State even if, under the Convention, the courts of another Contracting State have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter; this is in line with the principle that jurisdiction in respect of provisional or protective measures is separate, as expressed in Greek internal law in Articles 683 (3) and 889 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure: the limitation that a particular court has jurisdiction as to the substance of the dispute does not in principle affect the possibility of provisional or protective measures being taken by other courts.

C. RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

71. Recognition and enforcement of judgments is dealt with in Title III (Articles 25 to 49). Title IV (Articles 50 and 51) deals with the enforcement of authentic instruments and court settlements.

72. Title III begins with a definition of judgments which are to be recognized or enforced in accordance with the Convention (Article 25) and is divided into three sections, the first of which (Articles 26 to 30) covers the recognition of judgments, the second (Articles 31 to 45) the enforcement of judgments, while the third (Articles 46 to 49) contains common provisions concerning the whole Title.

73. Such judgments will be recognized and enforced as fall within the scope of the Convention, i.e. judgments in civil and commercial matters subject to the qualifications and exceptions laid down in Article 1 ([100]). Moreover, in accordance with Article 25, the judgments concerned must have been delivered by a court in a Contracting State, whatever such judgments may be called nationally (e.g. decree, order, decision or writ of execution) and irrespective of the nationality or domicile of the parties. Under the same provision, the determination of costs or expenses by an officer of the court is also deemed to be a judgment. The Court of Justice of the European Communities has, however, found that judicial decisions authorizing provisional or protective measures which have been delivered without the party against which they are directed having been summoned to appear and which are intended to be enforced in their country of issue without prior service cannot be recognized or enforced under the Convention ([101]).

74. The Convention draws a distinction between the recognition and enforcement of judgments. This distinction, which has always been known in Greek procedural law, is legally enshrined in the Code of Civil Procedure (Articles 323, 780, 905; see also Articles 903, 906).

75. Recognition

By its recognition a judgemnt generates the same legal effects in the State addressed as those conferred on it by the State in which the judgment was given. The Convention facilitates considerably the free movement of judgments in the Contracting States to a reasonable degree. As regards the recognition of judgments, this principle is expressed at two levels: firstly, at procedural level, by providing for automatic recognition, i.e. without any prior special assessment by a judicial body (Article 26, first paragraph). This solution is also known in Greek law, in respect of the recognition of the res judicata force of foreign judgments (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 323) ([102]). It should be noted that the Convention allows the recognition of foreign judgments at whatever stage in the judicial proceedings, including, therefore, decisions which have not acquired the force of res judicata. However, if an ordinary appeal has been lodged against a judgment or, in particular in the case of judgments given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, if enforcement is suspended in the State in which the judgment was given by reason of an appeal, the court of the State addressed may stay the proceedings for recognition of the judgment. Secondly, the principle applies in respect of the conditions for recognition, which are comparatively limited and are negatively framed, thereby constituting grounds for refusing recognition rather than positive conditions (Articles 27 and 28; see also Code of Civil Procedure, Article 323).

76. The automatic recognition of judgments at procedural level obviously operates in cases where there is no dispute between the interested parties as to the validity of the judgment in the State addressed. If, as often happens in commerce, the validity of the judgment is disputed, the party wishing to rely on it may seek recognition either as a principal or incidental issue. Where the application for recognition is the principal issue, the rules of Sections 1 and 2 of Title III governing the enforcement of judgments apply. If the recognition of a judgment is sought as an incidental question, the court of the Contracting State entertaining the principal proceedings will also have jurisdiction over the question of recognition (Article 26, second and third paragraphs). These rules also successfully resolve in a more general context the problems which arose in Greece from the lack of a special procedure for the recognition of foreign judgments and which led to the addition of paragraph 4 to Article 905 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

77. Articles 27 and 28 set forth a series of grounds for refusing recognition. A comparison of these grounds with the corresponding conditions in Article 323 of the Code of Civil Procedure shows similarities and differences which it is not possible to detail in this report ([103]). The point to be emphasized is that as a consequence of its character as a 'double' convention ([104]), the Convention does not in principle allow the State addressed to review the jurisdiction of the court which gave the judgment (Article 28, third paragraph), in contrast to the provisions in point 2 of Article 323 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To the list of grounds for refusing recognition of foreign judgments must be added that laid down by Article II of the 1968 Protocol.

78. This solution can be explained if two facts are taken into account: firstly, that jurisdiction both in the State in which the judgment was given and in the State addressed is dealt with in a uniform manner by the Convention and, secondly that, in as much as Article 29 (see also Article 34, third paragraph) contains the general rule that foreign judgments may not be reviewed as to their substance, the court of the State addressed does not have the power to carry out a substantive examination of the findings on which the court of the State in which the judgment was given based its jurisdiction ([105]). There is a basically irrefutable presumption that the judgment to be recognized was given by a court which had jurisdiction in accordance with the Convention. The Convention also rules out the possibility of the court in the State addressed invoking public policy as a ground for reviewing any breach of the rules on jurisdiction by the court of the State in which the judgment was given. Thus, according to the second phrase in the third paragraph of Article 28, 'the test of public policy referred to in point 1 of Article 27 may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction'.

79. To a limited degree, however, the Convention does allow the State addressed to review the jurisdiction of the Court which delivered the judgment. According to the first paragraph of Article 28, a judgment will not be recognized if it conflicts with the provisious of Sections 3, 4 and 5 of Title II, i.e. the rules on jurisdiction relating to insurance matters (Articles 7 to 12a), consumer contracts (Articles 13 to 15) and cases of exclusive jurisdiction (Article 16). The case provided for in Article 59 also requires there to be a possibility of reviewing the jurisdiction of the court which delivered the judgment and for that reason it has been included in the exceptions listed in the first paragraph of Article 28. It should nevertheless be noted that in its examination of jurisdiction in cases covered by this exhaustive list of exceptions, the court or authority in the State addressed which is called upon to recognize the judgment 'shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the State in which the judgment was given based its jurisdiction' (Article 28, second paragraph). Consequently, the examination carried out in the State addressed will concern the legal aspects of the considerations on which the court of the State in which the judgment was given based its jurisdiction.

80. As has already been pointed out, the Convention does not allow a foreign judgment to be reviewed as to its substance (Article 29). The court or authority of the State addressed which is called upon to recognize the judgment is not entitled to review the substantive or legal soundness of the conclusions of the court which gave the judgment or to refuse to recognize the judgment if it discovers a substantive or legal defect. The rule prohibiting reviews as to substance is, however, subject to certain restrictions: as was observed above, the first and second paragraphs of Article 28 permit a legal review of the judgment as regards certain bases of jurisdiction ([106]). The possibility of review must, out of logical necessity, also be accepted with respect to point 4 of Article 27, which requires in each case an examination both of the factual and legal aspects of the judgment to be recognized. Moreover, examination of the judgment to ensure that recognition is not contrary to public policy in the State addressed (Article 27, point 1) may lead to a re-assessment of its factual or legal considerations. Subject to these reservations, the rule that a judgment may not be reviewed as to its substance is one of the principles of the Convention.

81. Article 30 provides for the possibility of staying recognition proceedings if an ordinary appeal has been logded against the judgment in the State in which it was given. The meaning of the concept of 'ordinary appeal' is to be interpreted on an autonomous basis and covers any appeal which is such that it may result in the annulment or the amendment of the judgment under appeal, and the lodging of which is bound to a period which is laid down by law and which is linked to the actual judgment ([107]).

82. Enforcement

While the recognition of foreign judgments does not require a specific procedure to be followed, enforcement of such judgments is only possible if an order for enforcement has been issued in the State addressed or, in the case of the United Kingdom, if the judgments are registered for enforcement. The order for enforcement and, mutatis mutandis, registration for enforcement presuppose that a judgment has been given in a Contracting State and is enforceable in that State; the order is then issued or registration effected by the court (specifically defined in the Convention) of the State in which enforcement is sought, following an application which any interested party may submit for the enforcement of the judgment.

83. The procedure for making such applications is governed by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought. If the applicant is not domiciled within the area of jurisdiction of the court applied to, he must, in accordance with the requirements laid down by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought, either give an address for service of process or appoint a representative ad litem in that area; the choice of domicile must, as a matter of principle, be made in accordance with the procedures laid down under the law of the State in which enforcement is sought, or, failing this, at the latest on service of the enforcing judgement and the sanctions provided for under this law can in no case adversely affect the objectives of the Convention ([108]). The documents which are to accompany the application are specified in Articles 46 and 47 (Article 33).

84. The procedure for obtaining enforcement of foreign judgments is exclusive in the sense that a successful party must resort to it in order to obtain satisfaction of his claim and cannot, instead, initiate the same proceedings anew in any other State in which the Convention applies ([109]). The procedure operates on three levels of jurisdiction:

(a) The application is submitted to the court specifically designated for each State of enforcement. For Greece the Μουομελές Πρωτοδικειο has jurisdiction (Article 32, first paragraph). The jurisdiction of local courts is determined by reference to the place of domicile of the party against whom enforcement is sought or by reference to the place of enforcement where that party is not domiciled in the State of enforcement (Article 32, second paragraph).

The procedure for issuing the order for enforcement is simple and rapid. There is no obligation to inform the party against whom enforcement is sought of the submission of the application or of the date of the proceedings, and even if that party learns of the proceedings, he is not entitled at this stage to appear or make submissions on the application. The court must give its decision without delay. The foreign judgment may not be reviewed as to its substance and the application may be refused only for one of the reasons specified in Articles 27 and 28 (Article 34). The appropriate officer of the court will without delay bring the decision to the notice of the applicant in accordance with the procedure laid down by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought (Article 35).

(b) The party against whom enforcement is sought has the right to lodge an appeal against the decision granting the application with the court designated for each Contracting State in Article 37. The appeal must be lodged within one month of service of the decision authorizing enforcement if the party against whom enforcement is sought is domiciled in the State of enforcement (Article 36, first paragraph). This time limit will be two months from the date on which the decision is served on that party in person or at his residence if the latter is in a Contracting State other than that in which the decision authorizing enforcement is given. No extension of time may be granted on account of distance (Article 36, second paragraph). The Convention does not deal with the situation where the party against whom enforcement is sought is domiciled outside the territory of the Contracting States. In such cases it is accepted that the time limit will be one month which may be extended on account of distance in accordance with the law of the State authorizing enforcement of the foreign judgment ([110]). The Court of Justice of the European Communities has ruled that appeals under Article 31 are the only appeals which may be lodged against decisions authorizing enforcement of foreign judgments and has excluded the possibility of lodging any other appeals available under national law ([111]). In Greece the Εφετείο has jurisdiction to hear appeals. Appeals are to be lodged and heard in accordance with the rules governing procedure in contentious matters (Article 37). The court having jurisdiction to hear an appeal by the party against whom enforcement is sought may, on the application of that party, stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal ([112]) has been lodged against the judgment in the State in which that judgment was given or if the time for such an appeal has not yet expired. The same court may make enforcement conditional on the provision of a security (Article 38); the provision of a security will be ordered in the judgment on the appeal ([113]).

(c) The second paragraph of Article 37 gives an exhaustive list, for each Contracting State, of the types of further appeal which may be filed against the judgment given on the appeal lodged, in accordance with Article 36 and the first paragraph of Article 37, by the party against whom enforcement is sought. In Greece only an appeal in cassation is allowed.

85. A party seeking enforcement of a foreign judgment also has the right to lodge an appeal if an application submitted in accordance with Articles 31 et seq. is refused. The courts with jurisdiction to hear such appeals are specified for each Contracting State in the first paragraph of Article 40. In Greece such appeals are heard by the Εφετείο. When the appeal is heard, the person against whom enforcement is sought must be summoned ([114]), and if he fails to appear the provisions of the second and third paragraphs of Article 20 of the Convention apply. A judgment given on such an appeal may be contested only by one form of appeal in each Contracting State, as specified in Article 41. In Greece this may only be by an appeal in cassation.

86. Throughout the time specified for an appeal against the decision authorizing enforcement of the foreign judgment ([115]) and until any such appeal has been determined, no measures of enforcement may be taken other than protective measures taken against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought. The decision authorizing enforcement of the foreign judgment constitutes the legal basis for taking such measures (Article 39), without any special leave or subsequent confirmation being required of the national court ([116]).

87. The court of the State in which enforcement is sought may authorize partial enforcement of the foreign judgment if that judgment was given in respect of several matters and enforcement cannot be authorized for all of them, or if the applicant requests partial enforcement of the judgment (Article 42). Articles 44 and 45 deal with legal aid and prohibit any sort of security being required of a party applying for enforcement of a foreign judgment, in accordance with the Convention, on the grounds of his status as a foreigner or because he is not domiciled or resident in the State in which enforcement is sought. It should also be noted that Article III of the 1968 Protocol prohibits any charge, duty or fee calculated by reference to the value of the matter in issue from being levied in the State in which enforcement is sought in proceedings for the issue of an order for enforcement.

88. Articles 46 to 49 specify, in the interests of simplification, the supporting documents which a party seeking authorization of enforcement of a foreign judgment must produce before the court. Translation of such documents into the language of the proceedings is not obligatory, although it may be required by the court. The translation may be certified by any person qualified to do so in any of the Contracting States. In particular, it should be noted that Article 49 relieves the party concerned of any obligation to legalize documents which he submits.

89. Enforcement of authentic instruments and court settlements

Title IV contains provisions governing enforcement of authentic instruments (Article 50) and court settlements (Article 51). This concerns authentic instruments which have been drawn up or registered and are enforceable in a Contracting State. They will be declared enforceable in another Contracting State in accordance with the procedures laid down in Articles 31 et seq. An application for a foreign authentic instrument to be declared enforceable may be refused only if enforcement of the instrument is contrary to public policy in the State in which enforcement is sought (Article 50, first paragraph). The same rules also apply for the enforcement of court settlements approved by a court in a Contracting State and enforceable in that State (Article 51). These provisions of the Convention lay down arrangements which are in substance identical to those under Greek law (Articles 904 and 905 of the Code of Civil Procedure).

90. General provisions

Title V (Articles 52 and 53) lays down rules and connecting factors establishing the law applicable for determining the domicile of natural persons and the seat of a company or other legal person and also the domicile of trusts. In order to determine whether a party is domiciled in a Conctracting State, including the State in which the proceedings were initiated, the court will apply the internal law of that State. It will apply the internal law of the relevant Contracting State, to the exclusion of the rules of private international law (Article 52, first and second paragraphs) ([117]). If however, in accordance with a party's national law his domicile depends on that of another person or on the seat of an authority, his domicile will be determined in accordance with his national law (Article 52, third paragraph). The Convention does not, however, contain rules governing the domicile of a party outside the territory of the Contracting States. In this case the court seised of the matter will rule on the basis of the lex fori ([118]). Finally, in order to determine the seat of a company or other legal person or the domicile of a trust, the court seised of the matter will apply its rules of private international law (Article 53) ([119]).

D. THE 1971 PROTOCOL ON INTERPRETATION

91. Aware of the need to ensure that the Convention was applied as effectively as possible, to prevent differences of interpretation from restricting its unifying effect, and to avoid possible claims and disclaimers of jurisdiction, the Contracting States, in the Joint Declaration of 1968, expressed their intention to study these questions and in particular to examine the possibility of conferring jurisdiction in certain matters of interpretation on the Court of Justice of the European Communities and, if necessary, to negotiate an agreement to that effect. This undertaking resulted in the 1971 Protocol which confers jurisdiction on the Court of Justice of the European Communities to interpret the Convention. The Protocol has, of course, been adjusted by the 1978 and 1982 Accession Conventions.

92. The arrangements provided for in the 1971 Protocol are largely in line with the provisions of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty; that Article lays down that the national court can, or, in appropriate cases, must, refer questions on the interpretation of Community law and of the validity of acts by Community institutions to the Court of Justice for preliminary rulings. However, certain modifications were necessary in view of the particular nature of the matters governed by the Convention. The authors of the Protocol attempted to keep these changes to a minimum in their desire to maintain unity in the judicial practice of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in giving preliminary rulings on interpretation, as laid down by the Treaty, and not to disturb the system of cooperation which had been established over a period of many years between the Community Court and national courts. This intention is also clear from Article 5 (1) of the Protocol, which states that the provisions of the Treaty and of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice relating to preliminary rulings also apply to any proceedings for the interpretation of the Convention and the other instruments referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol, except where the latter provides otherwise.

93. The jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Justice of the European Communities to give rulings on interpretation concerns the instruments referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol. These instruments are the 1968 Convention, the 1968 Protocol and the 1971 Protocol, together with the instruments adjusting them, i.e. the 1978 and 1982 Accession Conventions.

94. The Protocol provides for three types of referral for preliminary rulings to the Court of Justice of the European Communities: firstly, optional referral by certain courts; secondly, obligatory referral by certain courts and, thirdly, referral 'in the interests of the law' by the competent national authorities.

95. Under Article 3 of the Protocol, both optional and obligatory referrals for a preliminary ruling are provided for where a question of interpretation of the Convention or of one of the other instruments referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol is raised in a case pending and a decision on the question of interpretation is necessary to enable the national court to give judgment.

96. Referrals may be made by the courts of the Contracting States when they are sitting in an appellate capacity (Article 2, point 2, and Article 3 (2) of the Protocol), and the courts of the Contracting States mentioned in Article 37 of the Convention where they are exercising the jurisdiction laid down in that provision (Article 2, point 3, and Article 3 (2) of the Protocol).

97. Referrals for a preliminary ruling on questions of interpretation must be made by the national courts mentioned in Article 2, point 1, of the Protocol. These are the national supreme courts which are specifically listed for the majority of Contracting States, with the exception of the United Kingdom and Greece. These two exceptions were made on the grounds of the judicial structure of the countries in question. In particular in the case of Greece it was considered advisable not to refer exclusively by name to the two main supreme courts, the Άρειος Πάγος and the Συμβούλιο της Επικρατείας, in order to extend the power to submit requests for preliminary rulings to the other supreme judicial bodies with general or specific jurisdiction, such as the special supreme court referred to in Article 100 of the Constitution and the Ελεγκτικό Συνέδριο. If only exceptionally, the matters falling within the jurisdiction of such courts may involve questions of interpretation of the Convention.

98. A request for the interpretation of the Convention or of one of the other instruments referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol may be submitted to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by the competent national authorities in accordance with Article 4 (1). In accordance with Article 4 (3), these authorities are the Procurators-General of the Courts of Cassation of the Contracting States or any other authority designated by a Contracting State (see also Article 10 (c)). This possibility of obtaining an interpretation 'in the interests of the law' may be exercised by the national authorities when judgments by courts in their country conflict with the interpretation already given either by the Court of Justice of the European Communities or by one of the courts of another Contracting State referred to in point 1 or 2 of Article 2. This power, however, only exists in respect of judgments which have become res judicata. Article 4 (2) of the Protocol specifies that the interpretation given in such cases by the Court of Justice of the European Communities does not affect the judgments by national courts which gave rise to the request for interpretation. Finally, in accordance with Article 4 (4), requests for interpretation submitted to the Court of Justice of the European Communities pursuant to Article 4 are to be notified to the Contracting States, to the Commission and to the Council of the European Communities, which are then entitled within two months of the notification to submit statements of case or written observations to the Court; new Member States who have not yet signed the Convention but will accede to it in the future are also entitled to submit observations ([120]). To accommodate the particular nature of requests for interpretation submitted pursuant to Article 4 of the Protocol, Article 4 (4) thus amends Article 20 of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice annexed to the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community, in accordance with which the decision of a national court or tribunal which submits a request for a preliminary ruling is notified by the Registrar of the Court of Justice of the European Communities to the parties, to the Member States and to the Commission, and also to the Council if the act, the validity or interpretation of which is in dispute, originates from the Council.

99. The frequency with which national courts submit requests for interpretation to the Court of Justice of the European Communities may be described as satisfactory. Application of the Protocol has already led to nearly fifty rulings being given by the Court of Justice.

E. TRANSITIONAL AND FINAL PROVISIONS. PROBLEMS OF TERMINOLOGY

100. Transitional provisions

The 1968 Convention (Title VI, Article 54) and the 1978 Accession Convention (Title V, Articles 34 to 36) contain a number of transitional provisions. Transitional provisions are also contained in the 1982 Convention on the Accession of Greece. In accordance in particular with Article 12 of the 1982 Accession Convention, the 1968 Convention and the 1971 Protocol, as amended by the 1978 and 1982 Accession Conventions, apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to authentic instruments formally drawn up or registered after the entry into force of the 1982 Convention in the State of origin and, where recognition or enforcement of a judgment or authentic instrument is sought, in the State addressed. Paragraph 2 of the Article, however, states that the provisions on recognition and enforcement in the Convention (Title III) also apply to judgments given in proceedings instituted before the entry into force of the 1982 Accession Convention, such entry into force being defined in particular in Article 12 (1) of that Convention, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules of the Community Convention or any other convention which was in force between the State of origin and the State addressed when the proceedings were instituted.

101. Relationship between the Convention and other conventions and Community law

Title VII (Articles 55 to 59) contains a number of provisions regarding the position of the numerous, in particular bilateral, conventions on jurisdiction and enforcement of judgements previously concluded between the Contracting States. The Convention, as a Community instrument, naturally supersedes these more particular conventions (Article 55) to the extent that it coincides with them in terms of date of application and the subject matter covered (Article 56) ([121]). Moreover, the Convention does not affect the validity, or prevent the conclusion by the Contracting Parties, of conventions which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments, nor does it affect corresponding existing or possible future legal acts of Community bodies or provisions of national law harmonized in implementation of such acts (Article 57).

102. Language versions of the Convention

All the texts of the Convention ([122]) have drawn up in the eight official languages of the Community, as constituted after the accession of Greece: Danish, Dutch, English, French, German, Greek, Irish and Italian (Article 68 of the 1968 Convention, Article 37, first paragraph, and Article 41 of the 1978 Accession Convention, Article 13, first paragraph, and Article 17 of the 1982 Accession Convention). All the language versions are equally authentic (Article 68 of the 1968 Convention, Article 37, second paragraph, and Article 41 of the 1978 Accession Convention, Article 13, second paragraph, and Article 17 of the 1982 Accession Convention).

103. Terminological problems in the Greek version of the Convention

There follows a list of points in the Greek version of the Convention which require clarification or correction:

(a) In the first sentence of the first paragraph of Article 1, the word 'δικαστήριο' (court) was preferred to the word 'δικαιοδοσία' (jurisdiction) in order to avoid the suggestion that a distinction is being made between contentious and non-contentious proceedings, when in fact the provision relates to the nature of the court itself (e.g. civil, criminal, administrative).

(b) In the section on lis pendens (Articles 21 to 23), a general rather than a technical term, 'επιλαμβάνεται', was used for the court 'seised', in order not to prejudge the solution to the question which has already been referred to the Court of Justice of the European Communities ([123]) as to whether this is a term with its own specific meaning in the Convention, or a general reference to the internal rules on jurisdiciton of the Contracting States. Similar considerations led to the use of the more general expression 'αναστολή της διαδικασίας' (stay of proceedings) in preference to 'αναστολή της αποφάσεως' (stay of judgment) (Article 21, second paragraph, Article 22, first paragraph).

(c) In Article 24, 'provisional, including protective, measures' has been rendered by the general and established term 'ασφαλιστικά μέτρα' instead of 'προσωρινά' or 'συντηρητικά μέτρα' (provisional or safeguard measures) to avoid giving the impression that distinctions previously made in Greek procedural law are being revived.

(d) In the second paragraph of Article 26 and the first paragraph of Article 31, reference is made to 'κάθε ενδιαφερόμενος' (any interested party) rather than to 'κάθε διάδικος' (any litigant) as being entitled to apply for the recognition or enforcement of a judgment. The general term has been used in order to avoid the impression that the text of the Convention itself confines such entitlement to the litigants in the original proceedings before the foreign court.

(e) In point 2 of Article 16 clearly 'ακυρότητα' (nullity) and not 'εγκυρότητα' is meant in contrast to the immediately following term 'κύρος' (validity).

(f) The meaning of 'καταχώριση' (article 16, point 4, of the Convention) and of 'εγγραφή' (Article V d of the 1968 Protocol) of patents is the same. What is involved in both cases is the public act which formally protects the right of the inventor. Both terms render the term 'registration' into Greek.

104. Entry into force of the Convention

The 1968 Convention entered into force on 1 February 1973 and the 1971 Protocol on 1 September 1975. As at 31 March 1986 the 1978 Accession Convention had been ratified by five States; it has not yet entered into force ([124]). The entry into force of the 1982 Accession Convention is governed by Article 15, in accordance with which the Convention 'shall enter into force, as between the States which have ratified it, on the first day of the third month following the deposit of the last instrument of ratification by the Hellenic Republic and those States which have put into force the 1978 Convention in accordance with Article 39 of that Convention'. The entry into force of the 1982 Accession Convention therefore depends on the entry into force of the 1978 Accession Convention and on the ratification of the 1982 Accession Convention by Greece.

(67) Despite the restrictive interpretation of this provision (Judgment of 14. 12. 1977, Case 73/77, Sanders v. Van der Putte), the Court of Justice of the EC recently ruled that the exclusive jurisdiction provided for in Article 16, point 1, also applies to proceedings in respect of the payment of rent, and that this includes short-term lettings of holiday homes: Judgment of 15. 1. 1985, Case 241/83, Rösler v. Rottwinkel.
(68) As in the case of third party objections under Greek law: Code of Civil Procedure, 936, paragraph 1, third subparagraph.

(72) See Schlosser, report, page 123, point 173.

(73) Each party may also designate a different group of courts in which it may be sued: Judgment of 9. 11. 1978, Case 23/78, Meeth v. Glacetal. If an agreement conferring jurisdiction has been stipulated in favour of only one of the parties, the convention (Article 17, fourth paragraph) allows this party to bring the matter before any other court with jurisdiction under the Convention. At all events, the Court of Justice of the EC took the view (in its Judgment given on 24. 6. 1987 in Case 22/85, Anterist v. Crédit Lyonnais) that, for such an agreement to exist in favour of only one of the parties, it would not be enough for the parties to have agreed on the international jurisdiction of a court or courts of a contracting State in the territory of which the 'advantaged' party is domiciled, but the common desire to favour the party must be clearly brought to light.

(74) Judgment of 14. 12. 1976, Case 24/76, Estasis Salotti v. RÜWA. However, in the particular case of persons domiciled in Luxembourg, the second paragraph of Article I of the 1968 Protocol requires that an express and specific clause conferring jurisdiction, which the Court of Justice of the European Communities has held to be the case (Judgment of 6. 5. 1980, Case 784/79, Porta-Leasing v. Prestige International) when the provision in question is separate, has been signed and is contained in the same document as the principal contract between the parties.

(103) The question of whether, in the case of a judgment given in default, the document which instituted the proceedings was served on the defendant in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence (Article 27, point 2, of the Convention) is, according to the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, to be examined by the court of the State in which enforcement is sought separately and without reference to the law on service applicable in the State of origin (Judgment of 16. 6. 1981, Case 166/80, Klomps v. Michel; the point was made more clearly recently: Judgment of 11. 6. 1985, Case 49/84, Debaecker v. Bouwman) or to the opinion of the court which delivered the judgment recognition or enforcement of which is sought (Judgment of 15. 7. 1982, Case 228/81, Pendy Plastic v. Pluspunkt).

The Kingdom of Spain and the Portuguese Republic hereby accede to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, signed at Brussels on 27 September 1968 (hereinafter called 'the 1968 Convention') and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice, signed at Luxembourg on 3 June 1971 (hereinafter called 'the 1971 Protocol'), with the adjustments made to them:

- by the Convention signed at Luxembourg on 9 October 1978 (hereinafter called 'the 1978 Convention'), on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice,

- by the Convention, signed at Luxembourg on 25 October 1982 (hereinafter called 'the 1982 Convention'), on the accession of the Hellenic Republic to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice, with the adjustments made to them by the Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The following point 4 shall be added to Article 6 of the 1968 Convention:

The following Article shall be added to Title VI of the 1968 Convention:

'Article 54A

For a period of three years from 1 November 1986 for Denmark and from 1 June 1988 for Ireland, jurisdiction in maritime matters shall be determined in these States not only in accordance with the provisions of Title II, but also in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 1 to 6 following. However, upon the entry into force of the International Convention relating to the arrest of sea-going ships, signed at Brussels on 10 May 1952, for one of these States, these provisions shall cease to have effect for that State.

1. A person who is domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued in the courts of one of the States mentioned above in respect of a maritime claim if the ship to which the claim relates or any other ship owned by him has been arrested by judicial process within the territory of the latter State to secure the claim, or could have been so arrested there but bail or other security has been given, and either:

(a) the claimant is domiciled in the latter State, or the claim arose in the latter State, or

(c)

the claim concerns the voyage during which the arrest was made or could have been made, or the claim arises out of a collision or out of damage caused by a ship to another ship or to goods or persons on board either ship, either by the execution or non-execution of a manoeuvre or by the non-observance of regulations, or the claim is for salvage, or

the claim is in respect of a mortgage or hypothecation of the ship arrested.

2. A claimant may arrest either the particular ship to which the maritime claim relates, or any other ship which is owned by the person who was, at the time when the maritime claim arose, the owner of the particular ship. However, only the particular ship to which the maritime claim relates may be arrested in respect of the maritime claims set out in (5) (o), (p) or (q) of this Article.

3. Ships shall be deemed to be in the same ownership when all the shares therein are owned by the same person or persons.

4. When in the case of a charter by demise of a ship the charterer alone is liable in respect of a maritime claim relating to that ship, the claimant may arrest that ship or any other ship owned by the charterer, but no other ship owned by the owner may be arrested in respect of such claim. The same shall apply to any case in which a person other than the owner of a ship is liable in respect of a maritime claim relating to that ship.

5. The expression 'maritime claim' means a claim arising out of one or more of the following:

damage caused by any ship either in collision or otherwise; loss of life or personal injury caused by any ship or occurring in connection with the operation on any ship;

(b)

(c)

(d) agreement relating to the use or hire of any ship whether by charterparty or otherwise;

(e) agreement relating to the carriage of goods in any ship whether by charterparty or otherwise; loss of or damage to goods including baggage carried in any ship;

(f)

(g) general average;

(h) bottomry;

(i) towage;

(j) pilotage;

(k)

goods or materials wherever supplied to a ship for her operation or maintenance;

(l) construction, repair or equipment of any ship or dock charges and dues;

(m) wages of masters, officers or crew;

(n) master's disbursements, including disbursements made by shippers, charterers or agents on behalf of a ship or her owner; dispute as to the title to or ownership of any ship;

(o)

disputes between co-owners of any ship as to the onwership, possession, employment or earnings of that ship;

the mortgage or hypothecation of any ship.

6. In Denmark, the expression 'arrest' shall be deemed as regards the maritime claims referred to in 5 (o) and (p) of this Article, to include a 'forbud', where that is the only procedure allowed in respect of such a claim under Articles 646 to 653 of the law on civil procedure (lov om rettens pleje).'

Article 18

The following shall be inserted at the appropriate places in chronological order in the list of

2. With a view to its uniform interpretation, paragraph 1 shall be applied in the following manner:

(a) this Convention shall not prevent a court of a Contracting State which is a party to a convention on a particular matter from assuming jurisdiction in accordance with that Convention, even where the defendant is domiciled in another Contracting State which is not a party to that Convention. The court hearing the action shall, in any event, apply Article 20 of this Convention;

(b) judgments given in a Contracting State by a court in the exercise of jurisdiction provided for in a convention on a particular matter shall be recognized and enforced in the other Contracting State in accordance with this Convention.

Where a convention on a particular matter to which both the State of origin and the State addressed are parties lays down conditions for the recognition or enforcement of judgments, those conditions shall apply. In any event, the provisions of this Convention which concern the procedure for recognition and enforcement of judgments may be applied.

3. This Convention shall not affect the application of provisions which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments and which are or will be contained in acts of the institutions of the European Communities or in national laws harmonized in implementation of such acts.'

The following shall be substituted for Article 58 of the 1968 Convention:

It shall stay the proceedings so long as he has not been notified. Competencias especiales

Artículo 5 Las personas domiciliadas en un Estado contratante podran ser demandadas en otro Estado contratante:

1. en materia contractual, ante el tribunal del lugar en el que hubiere sido o debiere ser cumplida la obligacion;

2. en materia de alimentos, ante el tribunal del lugar del domicilio o de la residencia habitual del acreedor de alimentos;

3. en materia delictual o cuasidelictual, ante el tribunal del lugar donde se hubiere producido el hecho dañoso;

4. si se tratare de acciones por daños y perjuicios o de acciones de restitucion fundamentadas en un acto que diere lugar a un procedimiento penal, ante el tribunal que conociere de dicho proceso, en la medida en que, de conformidad con su ley, dicho tribunal pudiere conocer de la accion civil;

5. si se tratare de litigios relativos a la explotacion de sucursales, agencias o cualquier otro establecimiento, ante el tribunal en que se hallaren sitos.

Artículo 6 Las personas a las que se refiere el artículo anterior podran también ser demandadas:

1. si hubiere varios demandados, ante el tribunal del domicilio de cualquiera de ellos;

2. si se tratare de una demanda sobre obligaciones de garantía o para la intervencion de terceros en el proceso, ante el tribunal que estuviere conociendo de la demanda principal, salvo que ésta se hubiere formulado con el unico objeto de provocar la intervencion de un tribunal distinto del correspondiente al demandado;

3. si se tratare de una reconvencion derivada del contrato o hecho en que se fundamentare la demanda inicial, ante el tribunal que estuviere conociendo de esta ultima.

Seccion 3

Competencia en materia de seguros

Artículo 7 En materia de seguros, se determinara la competencia con arreglo a las disposiciones de la presente Seccion, sin perjuicio de lo dispuesto en el artículo 4 y en el apartado 5 del artículo 5.

Artículo 8 El asegurador domiciliado en un Estado contratante podra ser demandado ante los tribunales de dicho Estado, o, en otro Estado contratante, ante el tribunal del lugar donde tuviere su domicilio el tomador del seguro, o, si varios aseguradores fueren demandados, ante los tribunales del Estado contratante en el que uno de ellos tuviere su domicilio.

Si la ley del tribunal que conozca del supuesto estableciere dicha competencia, el asegurador podra, asimismo, ser demandado, en un Estado contratante distinto del de su domicilio, ante el tribunal del lugar donde el intermediario que hubiere intervenido en la celebracion del contrato de seguro tuviere su domicilio, siempre que dicho domicilio figurare en la poliza o en la propuesta de seguro.

Cuando el asegurador no estuviere domiciliado en un Estado contratante pero tuviere sucursales, agencias o cualquier otro establecimiento en un Estado contratante, se le considerara, para los litigios relativos a su explotacion, domiciliado en dicho Estado.

Artículo 9 El asegurador podra, ademas, ser demandado ante el tribunal del lugar en que se hubiere producido el hecho dañoso cuando se tratare de seguros de responsabilidad o de seguros relativos a inmuebles. La misma regla sera de aplicacion cuando se tratare de seguros que se refirieren a inmuebles y a bienes muebles cubiertos por una misma poliza y afectados por el mismo siniestro.

Artículo 10 En materia de seguros de responsabilidad civil, el asegurador podra ser demandado igualmente ante el tribunal que conociere de la accion de la persona perjudicada contra el asegurado, cuando la ley de este tribunal lo permitiere.

Las disposiciones de los artículos 7, 8 y 9 seran aplicables en los casos de accion directa entablada por el perjudicado contra el asegurador cuando la accion directa fuere posible.

El mismo tribunal sera competente cuando la ley reguladora de esta accion directa previere la posibilidad de demandar al tomador del seguro o al asegurado.

Artículo 11 Salvo lo dispuesto en el parrafo tercero del artículo 10, la accion del asegurador solo podra ser ejercitada ante los tribunales del Estado contratante en cuyo territorio estuviere domiciliado el demandado, ya sea tomador del seguro, asegurado o beneficiario.

Las disposiciones de la presente Seccion no afectaran al derecho de interponer una reconvencion ante el tribunal que estuviere conociendo de una demanda inicial de conformidad con la presente Seccion.

Artículo 12 Unicamente prevaleceran sobre las disposiciones de la presente Seccion los convenios:

1. posteriores al nacimiento del litigio, o

2. que permitieren al tomador del seguro, al asegurado o al beneficiario formular demandas ante tribunales distintos de los indicados en la presente Seccion, o

3. que, habiéndose celebrado entre un tomador de seguro y un asegurador domiciliados en un mismo Estado contratante, atribuyeren, aunque el hecho dañoso se hubiere producido en el extranjero, competencia a los tribunales de dicho Estado, a no ser que la ley de éste prohibiere tales convenios.

Competencia en materia de venta y préstamos a plazos

Artículo 13 En materia de venta a plazos de mercaderías o de un préstamo a plazos directamente vinculado a la financiacion de la venta de tales bienes, la competencia quedara determinada por la presente Seccion, sin perjuicio de lo dispuesto en el artículo 4 y en el punto 5 del artículo 5.

Artículo 14 El vendedor y el prestamista domiciliados en un Estado contratante podran ser demandados ante los tribunales de dicho Estado o ante los tribunales del Estado contratante en el que tuviere su domicilio el comprador o el prestatario.

La accion del vendedor contra el comprador y la del prestamista contra el prestatorio solo podra interponerse ante los tribunales del Estado en el que el demandado tuviere su domicilio.

Estas disposiciones no afectaran al derecho de presentar una reconvencion ante el tribunal que entendiere de una demanda principal de conformidad con la presente Seccion.

Artículo 15 Unicamente prevaleceran sobre las disposiciones de la presente Seccion los convenios:

1. posteriores al nacimiento del litigio, o

2. que permitieren al comprador o al prestatario formular demandas ante tribunales distintos de los indicados en la presente Seccion, o

3. que habiéndose celebrado entre el comprador y el vendedor o entre el prestatario y el prestamista, domiciliados o con residencia habitual en el mismo Estado contratante, atribuyeren competencia a los tribunales de dicho Estado, a no ser que la ley de éste prohibiere tales convenios.

Seccion 5

Competencias exclusivas

Artículo 16 Son exclusivamente competentes, sin consideracion del domicilio:

1. en materia de derechos reales inmobiliarios y de contratos de arrendamiento de bienes inmuebles, los tribunales del Estado contratante donde el inmueble se hallare sito;

2. en materia de validez, nulidad o disolucion de sociedades y personas jurídicas que tuvieran su domicilio en un Estado contratante, o de decisiones de sus organos, los tribunales de dicho Estado;

3. en materia de validez de las inscripciones en los registros publicos, los tribunales del Estado contratante en que se encontrare el registro;

4. en materia de inscripciones o validez de patentes, marcas, diseños o dibujos y modelos, y demas derechos analogos sometidos a deposito o registro, los tribunales del Estado contratante en que se hubiere solicitado, efectuado o tenido por efectuado el deposito o registro en virtud de lo dispuesto en algun convenio internacional;

5. en materia de ejecucion de las resoluciones judiciales, los tribunales del Estado contratante del lugar de la ejecucion.

Prorroga de la competencia

Artículo 17 Si, mediante un convenio escrito o mediante un convenio verbal confirmado por escrito, las partes, cuando al menos una de ellas tuviere su domicilio en un Estado contratante, hubieren acordado que un tribunal o los tribunales de un Estado contratante fueren competentes para conocer de cualquier litigio que hubiere surgido o que pudiere surgir con ocasion de una determinada relacion jurídica, tal tribunal o tales tribunales seran los unicos competentes.

No surtiran efectos los convenios atributivos de competencia si fueren contrarios a las disposiciones de los artículos 12 y 15 o si excluyeren la competencia de tribunales exclusivamente competentes en virtud del artículo 16.

Cuando se celebrare un convenio atributivo de competencia en favor de una sola de las partes, ésta conservara su derecho de acudir ante cualquier otro tribunal que fuere competente en virtud del presente Convenio.

Artículo 18 Con independencia de los casos en los que su competencia resultare de otras disposiciones del presente Convenio, sera competente el tribunal de un Estado contratante ante el que compareciere el demandado. Esta regla no sera de aplicacion si la comparecencia tuviere por objeto impugnar la competencia o si existiere otra jurisdiccion exclusivamente competente en virtud del artículo 16.

Seccion 7

Comprobacion de la competencia judicial y de la

admisibilidad

Artículo 19 El tribunal de un Estado contratante, que conociere a título principal de un litigio para el que los tribunales de otro

Estado contratante fueren exclusivamente competentes en virtud del artículo 16, se declarara de oficio incompetente.

Artículo 20 Cuando el demandado domiciliado en un Estado contratante fuere emplazado por un tribunal de otro Estado contratante y no compareciere, dicho tribunal se declarara de oficio incompetente si su competencia no estuviere fundamentada en las disposiciones del presente Convenio.

Este tribunal estara obligado a suspender el procedimiento en tanto no se acreditare que el demandado ha podido recibir la cédula de emplazamiento con tiempo suficiente para defenderse o que se ha tomado toda diligencia a tal fin.

La disposiciones del parrafo precedente se sustituiran por las del artículo 15 del Convenio de La Haya, de 15 de noviembre de 1965, relativo a la notificacion o traslado en el extranjero de documentos judiciales y extrajudiciales en materia civil o mercantil, si la cédula de emplazamiento hubiere de ser remitida al extranjero, en cumplimiento del presente Convenio.

Litispendencia y conexidad

Artículo 21 Cuando se formularen demandas con el mismo objeto y la misma causa entre las mismas partes ante tribunales de Estados contratantes distintos, el tribunal ante el que se formulare la segunda demanda debera, incluso de oficio, inhibirse en favor del tribunal ante el que se interpuso la primera.

El tribunal que debería inhibirse podra suspender el procedimiento si fuere impugnada la competencia del otro tribunal.

Artículo 22 Cuando se presentaren demandas conexas ante tribunales de Estados contratantes diferentes y estuvieren pendientes en primera instancia, el tribunal ante el que se hubiere presentado la demanda posterior podra suspender el procedimiento.

Este tribunal podra de igual modo inhibirse, a instancia de una de las partes, a condicion de que su ley permita la acumulacion de asuntos conexos y de que el tribunal ante el que se hubiere presentado la primera demanda fuere competente para conocer de ambas demandas.

Se consideraran conexas, a los efectos del presente artículo, las demandas vinculadas entre sí por una relacion tan estrecha que sería oportuno tramitarlas y juzgarlas al mismo tiempo a fin de evitar resoluciones que podrían ser inconciliables si los asuntos fueren juzgados separadamente.

Artículo 23 Cuando en demandas sobre un mismo asunto los tribunales de varios Estados contratantes se declararen exclusivamente competentes, el desistimiento se llevara a cabo en favor del tribunal ante el que se hubiere presentado la primera demanda.

Seccion 9

Medidas provisionales y cautelares

Artículo 24 Podran solicitarse medidas provisionales o cautelares previstas por la ley de un Estado contratante a las autoridades judiciales de dicho Estado, incluso si, en virtud del presente Convenio, un tribunal de otro Estado contratante fuere competente para conocer sobre el fondo.

TITULO III

RECONOCIMIENTO Y EJECUCION

Artículo 25 Se entendera por "resolucion", a los efectos del presente Convenio, cualquier decision adoptada por un tribunal de un Estado contratante con independencia de la denominacion que recibiere, tal como auto, sentencia, providencia o mandamiento de ejecucion, así como el acto por el cual el secretario judicial liquidare las costas del proceso.

Seccion 1

Reconocimiento

Artículo 26 Las resoluciones dictadas en un Estado contratante seran reconocidas en los demas Estados contratantes, sin que fuere necesario recurrir a procedimiento alguno.

En caso de oposicion, cualquier parte interesada que invocare el reconocimiento a título principal podra solicitar, por el procedimiento previsto en las Secciones 2 y 3 del presente Título, que se reconozca la resolucion.

Si el reconocimiento se invocare como cuestion incidental ante un tribunal de un Estado contratante, dicho tribunal sera competente para entender del mismo.

Artículo 27 Las resoluciones no se reconoceran:

1. si el reconocimiento fuere contrario al orden publico del Estado requerido;

2. cuando se dictaren en rebeldía del demandado, si no se hubiere entregado o notificado al mismo la cédula de emplazamiento, de forma regular y con tiempo suficiente para defenderse;

3. si la resolucion fuere inconciliable con una resolucion dictada en un litigio entre las mismas partes en el Estado requerido;

4. si el tribunal del Estado de origen, para dictar su resolucion, hubiere desconocido, al decidir de una cuestion relativa al estado o capacidad de las personas físicas, a los regímenes matrimoniales, a los testamentos o a las sucesiones, una regla de Derecho internacional privado del Estado requerido, a menos que se hubiere llegado al mismo resultado mediante la aplicacion de las normas de Derecho internacional privado del Estado requerido.

Artículo 28 Asimismo, no se reconoceran las resoluciones si se hubiere desconocido las disposiciones de las Secciones 3, 4 y 5 del Título II, así como el caso previsto en el artículo 59.

En la apreciacion de las competencias mencionadas en el parrafo anterior, el tribunal requerido quedara vinculado por las apreciaciones de hecho sobre las cuales el tribunal del Estado de origen hubiere fundamentado su competencia.

Sin perjuicio de las disposiciones del parrafo primero, no podra procederse a la fiscalizacion de la competencia del tribunal del Estado de origen; el orden publico contemplado en el punto 1 del artículo 27 no afectara a las reglas relativas a la competencia judicial.

Artículo 29 La resolucion extranjera en ningun caso podra ser objeto de una revision en cuanto al fondo.

Artículo 30 El tribunal de un Estado contratante ante el que se hubiere solicitado el reconocimiento de una resolucion dictada en otro Estado contratante podra suspender el procedimiento si dicha resolucion fuere objeto de un recurso ordinario.

Ejecucion

Artículo 31 Las resoluciones dictadas en un Estado contratante que allí fueren ejecutorias se ejecutaran en otro Estado contratante cuando, a instancia de cualquier parte interesada, sean revestidas de la formula ejecutoria en este ultimo Estado.

Artículo 32 La solicitud se presentara:

- en Bélgica ante el "Tribunal de première instance" o "Rechtbank van eerste aanleg",

- en la Republica Federal de Alemania, ante el Presidente de una sala del "Landgericht",

- en Francia, ante el Presidente del "Tribunal de grande instance",

- en Italia, ante la "Corte d'appello",

- en Luxemburgo, ante el Presidente del "Tribunal d'arrondissement",

- en los Países Bajos, ante el Presidente del "Arrondissementsrechtbank".

La competencia territorial se determinara por el domicilio de la parte contra la que se solicitare la ejecucion. Si dicha parte no estuviere domiciliada en el Estado requerido, la competencia se determinara por el lugar de ejecucion.

Artículo 33 Las modalidades de presentacion de la solicitud se determinaran con arreglo a la ley del Estado en el que se solicitare la ejecucion.

El solicitante debera elegir domicilio para la notificacion del procedimiento en un lugar que correspondiere a la competencia judicial de la autoridad que conociere de la solicitud. No obstante, si la ley del Estado en el que se solicitare la ejecucion no conociere la eleccion de domicilio, el solicitante designara un mandatario ad litem.

Se adjuntaran a la solicitud los documentos mencionados en los artículos 46 y 47.

Artículo 34 El tribunal ante el que se presentare la solicitud se pronunciara en breve plazo sin que la parte contra la cual se solicitare la ejecucion pueda, en esta fase del procedimiento, formular observaciones.

La solicitud solo podra desestimarse por alguno de los motivos previstos en los artículos 27 y 28.

La resolucion extranjera en ningun caso podra ser objeto de una revision en cuanto al fondo.

Artículo 35 El secretario judicial notificara de inmediato la resolucion al solicitante de conformidad con las modalidades determinadas por la ley del Estado requerido.

Artículo 36 Si se otorgare la ejecucion, la parte contra la cual se hubiere solicitado podra interponer recurso contra la resolucion dentro del mes siguiente a la fecha de su notificacion.

Si dicha parte estuviere domiciliada en un Estado contratante distinto de aquél en el que se dictare la resolucion por la que se otorgare la ejecucion, el plazo sera de dos meses a partir del día en que tuviere lugar la notificacion, ya fuere personal, ya en su domicilio. Dicho plazo no admitira prorroga en razon de la distancia.

Artículo 37 El recurso contra la resolucion que otorgare la ejecucion se presentara, segun las normas que rigen el procedimiento contradictorio:

- en Bélgica ante el "Tribunal de première instance" o "Rechtbank van eerste aanleg",

- en la Republica Federal de Alemania, ante el "Oberlandesgericht",

- en Francia, ante la "Cour d'appel",

- en Italia, ante la "Corte d'appello",

- en Luxemburgo, ante la "Cour supérieure de Justice" reunida para entender en materia de apalacion civil,

- en los Países Bajos, ante el "Arrondissementsrechtbank".

La resolucion dictada sobre el recurso solo podra ser objeto de un recurso de casacion y, en la Republica Federal de Alemania, de una "Rechtsbeschwerde".

Artículo 38 El tribunal que conociere del recurso podra, a instancia de la parte que lo hubiese interpuesto, suspender el procedimiento si la resolucion extranjera hubiese sido objeto de recurso ordinario en el Estado de origen o si el plazo para interponerlo no hubiere expirado; en este ultimo caso, el tribunal podra conceder un aplazamiento a efectos de la interposicion de dicho recurso.

Dicho tribunal podra igualmente subordinar la ejecucion a la constitucion de una garantía que él mismo determinara.

Artículo 39 Durante el plazo del recurso previsto en el artículo 36 y hasta que se hubiere resuelto sobre el mismo, solamente se podran adoptar medidas cautelares sobre los bienes de la parte contra la que se hubiere solicitado la ejecucion.

La resolucion que otorgare la ejecucion incluira la autorizacion para adoptar tales medidas cautelares.

Artículo 40 Si la solicitud fuere desestimada, el solicitante podra interponer recurso:

- en Bélgica, ante la "Cour d'appel" o el "Hof van Beroep";

- en la Republica Federal de Alemania, ante el "Oberlandesgericht";

- en Francia, ante la "Cour d'appel";

- en Italia, ante la "Corte d'appello";

- en Luxemburgo, ante la "Cour supérieure de justice" reunida para entender en materia de apelacion civil,

- en los Países Bajos, ante el "Gereschtshof".

La parte contra la que se hubiere solicitado la ejecucion sera citada de comparecencia ante el tribunal que conociere del recurso. En caso de incomparecencia se aplicaran las disposiciones de los parrafos segundo y tercero del artículo 20, aunque dicha parte no estuviere domiciliada en uno de los Estados contratantes.

Artículo 41 La resolucion que decidiere del recurso previsto en el artículo 40 solo podra ser objeto de un recurso de casacion y, en la Republica Federal de Alemania, de un "Rechtsbeschwerde".

Artículo 42 Cuando la resolucion extranjera se hubiere pronunciado sobre varias pretensiones de la demanda y la ejecucion no pudiere otorgarse para la totalidad de ellas, el tribunal concedera la ejecucion para una o varias de las mismas.

El solicitante podra instar una ejecucion parcial.

Artículo 43 Las resoluciones extranjeras que condenaren el pago de multas coercitivas solamente podran ejecutarse en el Estado requerido cuando la cuantía hubiere sido fijada definitivamente por el tribunal del Estado de origen.

Artículo 44 El solicitante que hubiere obtenido el beneficio de justicia gratuita en el Estado en el que se hubiere dictado la resolucion gozara del mismo, sin nuevo examen, en el procedimiento previsto en los artículos 32 a 35.

Artículo 45 A la parte que instare en un Estado contratante la ejecucion de una resolucion dictada en otro Estado contratante no podra exigírsele caucion o deposito alguno, sea cual fuere su denominacion, por su condicion de extranjero o por no estar domiciliadoo no ser residente en el Estado requerido.

Seccion 3

Disposiciones comunes

Artículo 46 La parte que invocare el reconocimiento o instare la ejecucion de una resolucion debera presentar:

1. una copia auténtica de dicha resolucion;

2. si se tratare de una resolucion dictada en rebeldía, el original o una copia auténtica del documento que acreditare la entrega o notificacion de la demanda o de documento equivalente a la parte declarada en rebeldía.

Artículo 47 La parte que instare la ejecucion debera presentar ademas:

1. cualquier documento que acreditare que, segun la ley del Estado de origen, la resolucion es ejecutoria y ha sido notificada;

2. un documento justificativo de que el solicitante goza, en su caso, de beneficio de justicia gratuita en el Estado de origen.

Artículo 48 De no presentarse los documentos mencionados en el apartado 2 del artículo 46 y en el apartado 2 del artículo 47, el tribunal podra fijar un plazo para la presentacion de los mismos, aceptar documentos equivalentes o dispensar de ellos si se considerare suficientemente ilustrado.

Si el tribunal lo exigiere, se presentara una traduccion de los documentos; la traduccion estara certificada por una persona autorizada a tal fin en uno de los Estados contratantes.

Artículo 49 No se exigira legalizacion ni formalidad analoga alguna en lo que se refiriere a los documentos mencionados en los artículos 46, 47 y en el parrafo segundo del artículo 48, y en su caso, al poder para pleitos.

TITULO IV

DOCUMENTOS PUBLICOS CON FUERZA EJECUTIVA Y TRANSACCIONES JUDICIALES

Artículo 50 Los documentos publicos con fuerza ejecutiva, formalizados en un Estado contratante, seran, a instancia de parte, revestidos de la formula ejecutoria en otro Estado contratante, con arreglo al procedimiento previsto en los artículos 31 y siguientes. La solicitud solo podra desestimarse cuando la ejecucion del documento fuere contraria al orden publico del Estado requerido.

El documento presentado debera reunir las condiciones necesarias de autenticidad en el Estado de origen.

Seran aplicables, en la medida en que fuere necesario, las disposiciones de la Seccion 3 del Título III.

Artículo 51 Las transacciones celebradas ante el tribunal durante un proceso y ejecutorias en el Estado de origen seran ejecutorias en el Estado requerido, en las mismas condiciones que los documentos publicos con fuerza ejecutiva.

TITULO V

DISPOSICIONES GENERALES

Artículo 52 Para determinar si una parte esta domiciliada en el Estado contratante cuyos tribunales conocieren del asunto, el tribunal aplicara su ley interna.

Cuando una parte no estuviere domiciliada en el Estado cuyos tribunales conocieren del asunto, el tribunal, para determinar si dicha parte lo esta en otro Estado contratante, aplicara la ley de dicho Estado.

No obstante, para determinar el domicilio de una parte, se aplicara su ley nacional si, segun ésta, su domicilio dependiere del de otra persona o de la sede de una autoridad.

Artículo 53 A los efectos del presente Convenio, la sede de las sociedades y de otras personas jurídicas quedara asimilada al domicilio. Sin embargo, para determinar dicha sede, el tribunal que conociere del asunto aplicara las reglas de su Derecho internacional privado.

TITULO VI

DISPOSICIONES TRANSITORIAS

Artículo 54 La disposiciones del presente Convenio solamente seran aplicables a las acciones judiciales ejercitadas y a los documentos publicos con fuerza ejecutiva formalizados con posterioridad a su entrada en vigor.

Sin embargo, las resoluciones dictadas después de la fecha de entrada en vigor del presente Convenio como consecuencia de acciones ejercitadas con anterioridad a esta fecha seran reconocidas y ejecutadas en el Estado requerido con arreglo a las disposiciones del Título III, si las reglas de competencia aplicadas se ajustaren a las prevista en el Título II o en un Convenio en vigor entre el Estado de origen y el Estado requerido al ejercitarse la accion.

TITULO VII

O tribunal ou os tribunais de um Estado contratante, a que o acto constitutivo de um trust atribuir competência, têm competência exclusiva para conhecer da acçao contra um fundador, um trustee ou um beneficiario de um trust, se se tratar de relaçoes entre essas pessoas ou dos seus direitos ou obrigaçoes no âmbito do trust.

Os pactos atributivos de jurisdiçao, bem como as estipulaçoes similares de actos constitutivos de trust, nao produzirao efeitos se forem contrarios ao disposto nos artigos 12g. e 15g., ou se os tribunais cuja competência pretendam afastar tiverem competência exclusiva por força do artigo 16g.

Se um pacto atributivo de jurisdiçao tiver sido concluído a favor apenas de uma das partes, esta mantém o direito de recorrer a qualquer outro tribunal que seja competente, por força da presente convençao."

Na falta de tal declaraçao, os processos pendentes no territorio europeu do Reino, na sequência de um recurso de cassaçao de decisoes dos tribunais das Antilhas Neerlandesas, serao considerados como processos pendentes nesses tribunais.

Em derrogaçao ao disposto no primeiro paragrafo, a presente convençao nao se aplica:

1. As ilhas Faroé, salvo declaraçao em contrario do Reino da Dinamarca;

2. Aos territorios europeus situados fora do Reino Unido e cujas relaçoes internacionais sejam asseguradas pelo Reino Unido, salvo declaraçao em contrario do Reino Unido em relaçao a qualquer um desses territorios.

2. Todavia, nas relaçoes entre os seis Estados partes na convençao de 1968, as decisoes proferidas apos a data de entrada em vigor da presente convençao, na sequência de acçoes intentadas antes dessa data, serao reconhecidas e executadas em conformidade com o disposto no título III da convençao de 1968 alterada.

as decisoes proferidas apos a data de entrada em vigor da presente convençao nas relaçoes entre o Estado de origem e o Estado requerido, na sequência de acçoes intentadas antes dessa data, serao reconhecidas e executadas em conformidade com o disposto no título III da convençao de 1968 alterada, se a competência se tiver fundamentado em regras conformes com o disposto no título II alterado da convençao de 1968 ou com disposiçoes previstas em convençao vigente entre o Estado de origem e o Estado requerido aquando da instauraçao da acçao.

Artigo 35g. Se, por documento escrito anterior à entrada em vigor da presente convençao, as partes em litígio sobre um contrato tiverem acordado em aplicar a esse contrato o direito irlandês ou o direito de uma regiao do Reino Unido, os tribunais da Irlanda ou dessa regiao do Reino Unido conservam a faculdade de conhecer do litígio.

Artigo 36g. Durante os três anos seguintes à entrada em vigor da convençao de 1968, em relaçao ao Reino da Dinamarca e à Irlanda, a competência em matéria marítima em cada um desses Estados sera determinada, nao so nos termos da referida convençao, mas também nos termos dos pontos 1 a 6 a seguir enunciados. Todavia, estas disposiçoes deixarao de ser aplicadas em cada um desses Estados a partir do momento em que a convençao internacional para a unificaçao de certas regras relativas ao arresto de navios de mar, assinada em Bruxelas em 10 de Maio de 1952, entre em vigor nesses Estados.

1. Uma pessoa domiciliada no territorio de um Estado contratante pode ser demandada por um crédito marítimo perante os tribunais de um dos Estados atras mencionados quando o navio a que esse crédito se refere, ou qualquer outro navio de que essa pessoa é proprietaria, foi objecto de um arresto judicial no territorio de um desses Estados para garantir o crédito, ou poderia ter sido objecto de um arresto nesse mesmo Estado, ainda que tenha sido prestada cauçao ou outra garantia, nos casos seguintes:

a) Se o autor tiver domicílio no territorio desse Estado;

Se o crédito resultar de assistência ou salvamento;

f)

Se o crédito estiver garantido por hipoteca marítima ou mortgage sobre o navio arrestado.

2. Pode ser arrestado, tanto o navio a que se reporta o crédito marítimo, como qualquer outro pertencente àquele que, à data da constituiçao do crédito marítimo, era proprietario do navio a que o crédito se refere. Todavia, para os créditos previstos nas alíneas o), p) ou q) do ponto 5, apenas pode ser arrestado o navio a que o crédito se refere.

3. Considera-se que varios navios têm o mesmo proprietario quando todas as partes da propriedade pertencem à mesmas ou às mesmas pessoas.

4. No caso de fretamento de um navio com transferência de gestao nautica, quando so o afretador responder por um crédito marítimo relativo a esse navio, pode ser arrestado esse ou qualquer outro navio pertencente ao afretador, mas nenhum outro navio pertencente ao proprietario podera ser arrestado por tal crédito marítimo. O mesmo se aplica a todos os casos em que uma pessoa que nao o proprietario é devedora de um crédito marítimo.

m)

Soldadas do capitao, oficiais ou tripulantes;

n)

Desembolsos do capitao e os efectuados pelos carregadores, afretadores ou agentes por conta do navio ou do seu proprietario;

6. Na Dinamarca, a expressao "arresto judicial" abrange, no que diz respeito aos créditos marítimos referidos nas alíneas o) e p) do ponto anterior, o termo forbud, quando esse processo for o unico admitido no caso concreto pelos artigos 646g. a 653g. da Lei de processo civil ("Lov om rettens pleje").

Artículo I Cualquier persona domiciliada en Luxemburgo que fuere emplazada ante un tribunal de otro Estado contratante, en aplicacion del apartado 1 del artículo 5, podra impugnar la competencia de dicho tribunal. Este tribunal se declarara de oficio incompetente si no compareciere el demandado.

Cualquier convenio atributivo de jurisdiccion en el sentido del artículo 17 solo producira efectos con respecto a una persona domiciliada en Luxemburgo cuando ésta lo hubiere expresa y especialmente aceptado.

Artículo II Sin perjuicio de las disposiciones nacionales mas favorables, las personas domiciliadas en un Estado contratante y perseguidas por infracciones involuntarias ante los organos jurisdiccionales sancionadores de otro Estado contratante del que no fueren nacionales podran, aunque no comparecieren personalmente, defenderse por medio de las personas autorizadas a tal fin.

No obstante, el tribunal que conociere del asunto podra ordenar la comparecencia personal; si ésta no tuviere lugar, la resolucion dictada sobre la accion civil sin que la persona encausada hubiere tenido la posibilidad de defenderse podra no ser reconocida ni ejecutada en los demas Estados contratantes.

Artículo III El Estado requerido no percibira impuesto, derecho ni tasa alguna, proporcional al valor del litigio, en el procedimiento de exequatur.

Artículo IV Los documentos judiciales y extrajudiciales extendidos en un Estado contratante y que debieren ser notificados a personas que se encontraren en el territorio de otro Estado contra-tante, se transmitiran del modo previsto por los convenios o acuerdos celebrados entre los Estados contratantes.

A no ser que el Estado de destino se oponga a ello mediante declaracion formulada al Secretario General del Consejo de las Comunidades Europeas, tales documentos también podran ser enviados directamente por las personas autorizadas al efecto en el Estado en que se extendieren los documentos, a las personas autorizadas al efecto en el Estado en que se encontrare el destinatario del documento. En este caso, la persona autorizada al efecto en el Estado de origen, transmitira una copia del documento a la persona habilitada al efecto en el Estado requerido, que sea competente para hacerla llegar al destinatario. Esta entrega se hara en la forma prevista por la ley del Estado requerido. Se dejara constancia de la misma mediante certificacion enviada directamente a la persona autorizada al efecto en el Estado de origen.

Artículo V La competencia judicial prevista en el punto 2 del artículo 6 y en el artículo 10 para la demanda sobre obligaciones de garantía o para la intervencion de terceros en el proceso, no podra ser invocada en la Republica Federal de Alemania. En este Estado, cualquier persona domiciliada en otro Estado contratante podra ser demandada ante los tribunales en aplicacion de los artículos 68 y 72, 73 y 74 de la Ley de enjuiciamiento civil sobre litis denunciatio.

Las resoluciones dictadas en los demas Estados contratantes en virtud del punto 2 del artículo 6 y del artículo 10 seran reconocidas y ejecutadas en la Republica Federal de Alemania de conformidad con el Título III. Los efectos frente a terceros producidos en aplicacion de los artículos 68 y 72, 73 y 74 de la Ley de enjuiciamiento civil, por resoluciones dictadas en este Estado, seran igualmente reconocidos en los demas Estados contratantes.

Artículo VI Los Estados contratantes comunicaran al Secretario General del Consejo de las Comunidades Europeas los textos de sus disposiciones legales que modifiquen los artículos de sus leyes que se mencionan en el Convenio y los juzgados y tribunales designados en el Título III, Seccion 2 del Convenio.

La accion entablada por un consumidor contra la otra parte contratante podra interponerse ante los tribunales del Estado contratante en que estuviere domiciliada dicha parte o ante los tribunales del Estado contratante en que estuviere domiciliado el consumidor.

Tal convenio atributivo de competencia debera celebrarse bien por escrito, bien verbalmente con confirmacion escrita, bien, en el comercio internacional, en una forma conforme a los usos en ese ambito y que las partes conocieren o debieren conocer. Cuando ninguna de las partes que hubieren celebrado un acuerdo de este tipo estuviere domiciliada en un Estado contratante, los tribunales de los demas Estados contratantes solo podran conocer del litigio cuando el tribunal o los tribunales designados hubieren declinado su competencia.

El tribunal o los tribunales de un Estado contratante a los que el documento constitutivo de un trust hubiere atribuido competencia seran exclusivamente competentes para conocer de una accion contra el fundador, el trustee o el beneficiario de un trust si se tratare de relaciones entre estas personas o de sus derechos u obligaciones en el marco del trust.

No surtiran efecto los convenios atributivos de competencia ni las estipulaciones similares de documentos constitutivos de un trust si fueren contrarios a las disposiciones de los artículos 12 y 15 o si excluyeren la competencia de tribunales exclusivamente competentes en virtud del artículo 16.

TITULO V

Disposiciones transitorias

Artículo 34 1. El Convenio de 1968 y el Protocolo de 1971, modificados por el presente Convenio, solo seran aplicables a las acciones judiciales ejercitadas y a los documentos publicos con fuerza ejecutiva formalizados con posterioridad a la entrada en vigor del presente Convenio en el Estado de origen y a las solicitudes de reconocimiento o ejecucion de una resolucion o de un documento publico con fuerza ejecutiva en el Estado requerido.

2. Sin embargo, las resoluciones dictadas después de la fecha de entrada en vigor del presente Convenio entre los seis Estados que son parte del Convenio de 1968 como consecuencia de acciones ejercitadas con anterioridad a esta fecha seran reconocidas y ejecutadas con arreglo a las disposiciones del Título III del Convenio de 1968 modificado.

3. Por otra parte, en las relaciones entre los seis Estados que son parte del Convenio de 1968 y los tres Estados que se mencionan en el artículo 1 del presente Convenio, así como en las relaciones entre estos tres ultimos, las resoluciones dictadas después de la fecha de entrada en vigor del presente Convenio en las relaciones entre el Estado de origen y el Estado requerido como consecuencia de acciones ejercitadas con anterioridad a esa fecha seran reconocidas y ejecutadas con arreglo a las disposiciones del Título III del Convenio de 1968 modificado, si las reglas de competencia aplicadas se ajustaren a las previstas en el Título II modificado o en un Convenio en vigor entre el Estado de origen y el Estado requerido al ejercitarse la accion.

Artículo 35 Si, mediante escrito anterior a la entrada en vigor del presente Convenio, las partes en litigio a proposito de un contrato hubieren acordado aplicar a este contrato el derecho irlandés o el derecho de una parte del Reino Unido, los tribunales de Irlanda o de esta parte del Reino Unido conservaran la competencia para conocer de este litigio.

Artículo 36 Durante los tres años siguientes a la entrada en vigor del Convenio de 1968 en Dinamarca e Irlanda, respectivamente, la competencia en materia marítima en cada uno de esos Estados se determinara no solo con arreglo a las disposiciones de dicho Convenio, sino también con arreglo a los puntos 1 a 6 del presente artículo. Sin embargo, estas disposiciones dejaran de ser aplicables en cada uno de esos Estados cuando el Convenio internacional para la unificacion de ciertas reglas en materia de embargo preventivo de buques, firmado en Bruselas el 10 de mayo de 1952, entrare en vigor con respecto a cada uno de ellos.

1. Una persona domiciliada en un Estado contratante podra ser demandada por un crédito marítimo ante los tribunales de uno de los Estados antes mencionados mas arriba cuando el buque al que se refiriere el crédito o cualquier otro buque de su propiedad hubiere sido objeto de embargo judicial en el territorio de este ultimo Estado en garantía del crédito, o hubiere podido ser objeto de embargo pero se hubiere prestado fianza u otra garantía, en los casos siguientes:

a) si el demandante estuviere domiciliado en ese Estado;

b) si el crédito marítimo hubiere nacido en ese Estado;

c) si el crédito marítimo hubiere nacido en el curso de un viaje durante el cual se hubiere practicado o hubiere podido practicarse el embargo;

d) si el crédito proviniere de un abordaje o un daño causado por un buque, por ejecucion u omision de una maniobra o por inobservancia de los reglamentos, bien a otro buque, o bien a las cosas o personas que se encontraren a bordo de cualquiera de ellos;

e) si el crédito derivare de auxilio o salvamento;

si el crédito estuviere garantizado por una hipoteca naval u otra forma de garantía semejante sobre el buque embargado.

2. El acreedor podra embargar el buque al que se refiriere el crédito marítimo o cualquier otro buque perteneciente a quien hubiere sido propietario del buque al que se refiriere el crédito cuando se hubiere originado el crédito marítimo. No obstante, cuando se tratare de los créditos previstos en las letras o), p), o q) del apartado 5, solo podra ser embargado el buque al que se refiriere el crédito.

3. Se reputara que los buques tienen el mismo propietario cuando todas las partes de la propiedad pertenecieren a una misma persona o a las mismas personas.

4. En el caso de fletamento de un buque con cesion de la gestion nautica, cuando el fletador fuere el unico responsable de un crédito marítimo relativo a dicho buque, podra el demandante embargar dicho buque o cualquier otro que perteneciere al fletador, pero no podra ser embargado en virtud de tal crédito marítimo ningun otro buque perteneciente al propietario. La misma regla sera de aplicacion en los casos en que de un crédito marítimo respondiere una persona distinta del propietario.

5. Se entendera por "crédito marítimo" la alegacion de un derecho o de un crédito que tuviere una o varias de las causas siguientes:

a) daños causados por un buque, sea por abordaje, sea de cualquier otro modo;

b) pérdidas de vidas humanas o daños corporales causados por un buque o provenientes de la explotacion de un buque;

c) asistencia y salvamento;

d) contratos relativos a la utilizacion o al arriendo de un buque mediante poliza de fletamento o de otro modo;

e) contratos relativos al transporte de mercancías por un buque en virtud de una poliza de fletamento, de un conocimiento o de cualquier otra forma;

f) pérdidas o daños a las mercancías y equipajes transportados por un buque;

g) avería comun;

h)

préstamo a la gruesa;

i)

remolque;

j)

k)

suministro de productos o de material, cualquiera que sea el lugar en que se realizaren, hechos a un buque para su explotacion o su conservacion;

l) construccion, reparaciones, equipo de un buque o gastos de dique;

m) salarios del capitan, oficialidad o tripulacion;

n) desembolsos del capitan y los efectuados por los cargadores, fletadores o los agentes por cuenta del buque o de su propietario;

o)

la propiedad impugnada de un buque;

p)

la copropiedad de un buque o su posesion, o su explotacion o los derechos a los productos de explotacion de un buque en condominio;

cualquier hipoteca naval y cualquier otra forma de garantía semejante.

6. En Dinamarca, la expresion "embargo judicial" incluira, en lo relativo a los créditos marítimos mencionados mas arriba en las letras o) y p), el "forbud", siempre que este procedimiento fuere el unico admitido respecto de tal crédito en los artículos 646 a 653 de la Ley de enjuiciamiento civil ("Lov om rettens pleje").

Qualquer pessoa, independentemente da sua nacionalidade, com domicílio no territorio de um Estado contratante, pode, tal como os nacionais, invocar contra esse requerido as regras de competência que estejam em vigor nesse Estado e, nomeadamente, as previstas no segundo paragrafo do artigo 3g.

Secçao 2

Competências especiais

Artigo 5g. O requerido com domicílio no territorio de um Estado contratante pode ser demandado num outro Estado contratante:

1. Em matéria contratual, perante o tribunal do lugar onde a obrigaçao foi ou deva ser cumprida.

2. Em matéria de obrigaçao alimentar, perante o tribunal do lugar em que o credor de alimentos tem o seu domicílio ou a sua residência habitual.

3. Em matéria excontratual, perante o tribunal do lugar onde ocorreu o facto danoso.

4. Se se tratar de acçao de indemnizaçao ou de acçao de restituiçao fundadas numa infracçao, perante o tribunal onde foi intentada a acçao publica, na medida em que, de acordo com a sua lei, esse tribunal possa conhecer da acçao cível.

5. Se se tratar de um litígio relativo à exploraçao de uma sucursal, de uma agência ou de qualquer outro estabelecimento, perante o tribunal do lugar da sua situaçao.

Artigo 6g. O requerido com domicílio no territorio de um Estado contratante pode também ser demandado:

2. Se se tratar de chamamento de um garante à acçao ou de qualquer incidente de intervençao de terceiro, perante o tribunal onde foi instaurada a acçao principal, salvo se esta tiver sido proposta apenas com o intuito de subrair o terceiro à jurisdiçao do tribunal que seria competente nesse caso.

3. Se se tratar de um pedido reconvencional que derive do contrato ou do facto em que se fundamenta a acçao principal, perante o tribunal onde esta ultima foi instaurada.

Secçao 3

Competência em matéria de seguros

Artigo 7g. En matéria de seguros, a competência é determinada pela presente secçao, sem prejuízo do disposto no artigo 4g. e no ponto 5 do artigo 5g.

Artigo 8g. O segurador domiciliado no territorio de um Estado contratante pode ser demandado, quer perante os tribunais desse Estado quer noutro Estado contratante, perante o tribunal do lugar em que o tomador de seguro tiver o seu domicílio ou, no caso de varios seguradores serem requeridos, perante os tribunais do Estado contratante onde um deles tiver o seu domicílio.

Se a lei do país chamado a pronunciar-se previr tal competência, o segurador pode também ser demandado, num Estado contratante que nao seja o do seu domicílio, perante o tribunal em cuja jurisdiçao o intermediario que interveio na celebraçao do contrato de seguro tiver o seu domicílio, desde que esse domicílio seja mencionado na apolice ou na proposta de seguro.

O segurador que, nao tendo domicílio no territorio de um Estado contratante, possua uma sucursal ou uma agência num Estado contratante, sera considerado, quanto aos litígios relativos à exploraçao dessa sucursal ou dessa agência, como tendo domicílio no territorio desse Estado.

Artigo 9g. O segurador pode também ser demandado perante o tribunal do lugar onde o facto danoso ocorreu quando se trate de um seguro de responsabilidade civil ou de um seguro que tenha por objecto bens imoveis. Aplica-se a mesma regra quando se trata de um seguro que incida simultaneamente sobre bens imoveis e moveis cobertos pela mesma apolice e atingidos pelo mesmo sinistro.

Artigo 10g. Em matéria de seguros de responsabilidade civil, o segurador pode também ser chamado perante o tribunal onde for proposta a acçao do lesado contra o segurado, desde que a lei desse tribunal assim o permita.

O disposto nos artigos 7g., 8g. e 9g. aplica-se no caso de acçao intentada pelo lesado directamente contra o segurador, sempre que tal acçao directa seja possível.

Se o direito aplicavel a essa acçao directa previr o incidente do chamamento do tomador do seguro ou do segurado, o mesmo tribunal sera igualmente competente quanto a eles.

Artigo 11g. Sem prejuízo do disposto no terceiro paragrafo do artigo 10g., o segurador so pode intentar uma acçao perante os tribunais do Estado contratante em cujo territorio estiver domiciliado o requerido, quer este seja tomador do seguro, segurado ou beneficiario.

O disposto na presente secçao nao prejudica o direito de formular um pedido reconvencional perante o tribunal em que tiver sido instaurada a acçao principal nos termos da presente secçao.

Artigo 12g. As partes so podem convencionar derrogaçoes ao disposto na presente secçao, desde que tais convençoes:

1. Sejam posteriores ao nascimento do litígio, ou

2. Permitam ao tomador de seguro, ao segurado, ou ao beneficiario recorrer a tribunais que nao sejam os indicados na presente secçao, ou

3. Sejam concluídas entre um tomador do seguro e um segurador, ambos com domicílio num mesmo Estado contratante, e tenham por efeito atribuir competência

aos tribunais desse Estado, mesmo que o facto danoso ocorra no estrangeiro, salvo se a lei desse

Estado nao permitir tais convençoes.

Secçao 4

Competência em matéria de vendas e de empréstimo a prestaçoes

Artigo 13g. En matéria de venda a prestaçoes de bens moveis corporeos ou de empréstimo a prestaçoes directamente relacionado com o financiamento da venda de tais bens, a competência sera determinada pela presente secçao, sem prejuízo do disposto no artigo 4g. e no ponto 5 do artigo 5g.

Artigo 14g. O vendedor e o credor domiciliados no territorio de um Estado contratante podem ser demandados, quer perante os tribunais desse Estado quer perante os tribunais do Estado contratante em cujo territorio o comprador ou o mutuario tiveram o seu domicílio.

A acçao do vendedor contra o comprador e a acçao do credor contra o mutuario so podem ser intentadas perante os tribunais do Estado em cujo territorio o requerido tiver o seu domicílio.

Estas disposiçoes nao prejudicam o direito de formular um pedido reconvencional perante o tribunal em que tiver sido instaurada a acçao principal, nos termos da presente secçao.

Artigo 15g. As partes so podem convencionar derrogaçoes ao disposto na presente secçao desde que tais convençoes:

1. Sejam posteriores ao nascimento do litígio, ou

2. Permitam ao comprador ou ao mutuario recorrer a tribunais que nao sejam os indicados na presente secçao, ou

3. Sejam concluídas entre o comprador e o vendedor ou entre o mutuario e o credor, ambos com domicílio ou residência habitual num mesmo Estado contratante, e atribuam competência aos tribunais desse Estado, salvo se a lei desse Estado nao permitir tais convençoes.

4. Em matéria de inscriçao ou de validade de patentes, marcas, desenhos e modelos, e outros direitos analogos sujeitos a deposito ou a registo, os tribunais do Estado contratante em cujo territorio o deposito ou o registo tiver sido requerido, efectuado ou considerado efectuado nos termos de uma convençao internacional.

5. Em matéria de execuçao de decisoes, os tribunais do Estado contratante do lugar da execuçao.

Secçao 6

Extensao de competência

Artigo 17g. Se, mediante pacto escrito ou pacto verbal confirmado por escrito, as partes, das quais pelo menos uma se encontre domiciliada no territorio de um Estado contratante, tiverem designado um tribunal ou os tribunais de um Estado contratante competentes para decidir quaisquer litígios que tenham surgido ou que possam surgir de uma determinada relaçao jurídica, esse tribunal ou esses tribunais terao competência exclusiva.

Os pactos atributivos de jurisdiçao nao produzirao efeitos se forem contrarios ao disposto nos artigos 12g. e 15g. ou se os tribunais cuja competência pretendam afastar tiverem competência exclusiva por força do artigo 16g.

Se um pacto atributivo de jurisdiçao tiver sido concluído a favor apenas de uma das partes, esta mantém o direito de recorrer a qualquer outro tribunal que seja competente por força da presente convençao.

Artigo 18g. Para além dos casos em que a competência resulte de outras disposiçoes da presente convençao, é competente o tribunal de um Estado contratante perante o qual o requerido compareça. Esta regra nao é aplicavel se a comparência tiver como unico objectivo arguir a incompetência ou se existir outro tribunal com compêtencia exclusiva por força do artigo 16g.

Verificaçao da competência e da admissibilidade

Artigo 19g. O juiz de um Estado contratante, perante o qual tiver sido proposta, a título principal, uma acçao relativamente à qual tenha competência exclusiva um tribunal de outro Estado contratante por força do artigo 16g., declarar-se-a oficiosamente incompetente.

Artigo 20g. Quando o requerido domiciliado no territorio de um Estado contratante for demandado perante um tribunal de outro Estado contratante e nao compareça, o juiz declarar-se-a oficiosamente incompetente se a sua competência nao resultar das disposiçoes da presente convençao.

O juiz deve suspender a instância enquanto nao se verificar que a esse requerido foi dada a oportunidade de receber o acto que iniciou a instância em tempo util para apresentar a sua defesa, ou enquanto nao se verificar que para o efeito foram efectuadas todas as diligências.

O disposto no paragrafo anterior sera substituído pelo disposto no artigo 15g. da convençao de Haia, de 15 de Novembro de 1965, relativa à citaçao e à notificaçao no estrangeiro dos actos judiciais e extrajudiciais em matéria civil ou comercial, se o acto que iniciou a instância tiver sido transmitido em execuçao dessa convençao.

Secçao 8

Litispendência e conexao

Artigo 21g. Quando acçoes com o mesmo pedido e a mesma causa de pedir e entre as mesmas partes forem submetidas à apreciaçao de tribunais de diferentes Estados contratantes, o tribunal a que a acçao foi submetida em segundo lugar deve, mesmo oficiosamente, declarar-se incompetente em favor do tribunal a que a acçao foi submetida em primeiro lugar.

O tribunal que deveria declarar-se incompetente pode suspender a instância no caso de ser impugnada a competência do outro tribunal.

Artigo 22g. Quando acçoes conexas forem submetidas a tribunais de diferentes Estados contratantes e estiverem pendentes em primeira instância, o tribunal a que a acçao foi submetida em segundo lugar pode suspender a instância.

Este tribunal pode igualmente declarar-se incompetente, a pedido de uma das partes, desde que a sua lei permita a apensaçao de acçoes conexas e o tribunal a que a acçao foi submetida em primeiro lugar seja competente para conhecer das duas acçoes.

Para efeitos do presente artigo, consideram-se conexas as acçoes ligadas entre si por um nexo tao estreito que haja interesse em que sejam instruídas e julgadas simultaneamente para evitar soluçoes que poderiam ser inconciliaveis se as causas fossem julgadas separadamente.

Artigo 23g. Sempre que as acçoes forem da competência exclusiva de varios tribunais, qualquer tribunal a que a acçao tenha sido submetida posteriormente deve declarar-se incompetente em favor daquele a que a acçao tenha sido submetida em primeiro lugar.

Secçao 9

Medidas provisorias e cautelares

Artigo 24g. As medidas provisorias ou cautelares previstas na lei de um Estado contratante podem ser requeridas às autoridades judiciais desse Estado, mesmo que, por força da presente convençao, um tribunal de outro Estado contratante seja competente para conhecer da questao de fundo.

TITULO III

RECONHECIMENTO E EXECUÇAO

Artigo 25g. Para efeitos da presente convençao, considera-se "decisao" qualquer decisao proferida por um tribunal de um Estado contratante independentemente da designaçao que lhe for dada, tal como acordao, sentença, despacho judicial ou mandado de execuçao, bem como a fixaçao pelo secretario do tribunal do montante das custas do processo.

Secçao 1

Reconhecimento

Artigo 26g. As decisoes proferidas num Estado contratante sao reconhecidas nos outros Estados contratantes, sem necessidade de recurso a qualquer processo.

Em caso de impugnaçao, qualquer parte interessada que invoque o reconhecimento a título principal pode pedir, nos termos do processo previsto nas secçoes 2 e 3 do presente título, o reconhecimento da decisao. Se o reconhecimento for invocado a título incidental perante um tribunal de um Estado contratante, este sera competente para dele conhecer.

Artigo 27g. As decisoes nao serao reconhecidas:

1. Se o reconhecimento for contrario à ordem publica do Estado requerido.

2. Se o acto que determinou o início da instância ou acto equivalente nao tiver sido comunicado ou notificado ao requerido revel, regularmente e em tempo util, por forma a permitir-lhe a defesa.

3. Se a decisao for inconciliavel com outra decisao proferida quanto às mesmas partes no Estado requerido.

4. Se o tribunal do Estado de origem, ao proferir a sua decisao, tiver desrespeitado regras de direito internacional privado do Estado requerido na apreciaçao de questao relativa ao estado ou à capacidade das pessoas singulares, aos regimes matrimoniais, aos testamentos e às sucessoes, a nao ser que a sua decisao conduza ao mesmo resultado a que se chegaria se tivessem sido aplicadas as regras de direito internacional privado do Estado requerido.

Artigo 28g. As decisoes nao serao igualmente reconhecidas se tiver sido desrespeitado o disposto nas secçoes 3, 4 e 5 do título II ou no caso previsto no artigo 59g.

Na apreciaçao das competências referidas no paragrafo anterior, a autoridade requerida estara vinculada às decisoes sobre a matéria de facto com base nas quais o tribunal do Estado de origem tiver fundamentado a sua competência.

Sem prejuízo do disposto nos primeiros e segundo paragrafos, nao pode proceder-se ao controlo da competência dos tribunais do Estado de origem; as regras relativas à competências nao dizem respeito à ordem publica a que se refere o ponto 1 do artigo 27g.

Artigo 29g. As decisoes estrangeiras nao podem, em caso algum, ser objecto de revisao de mérito.

Artigo 30g. A autoridade judicial de um Estado contratante, perante o qual se invocar o reconhecimento de uma decisao proferida em outro Estado contratante, pode suspender a instância se essa decisao for objecto de recurso ordinario.

Execuçao

Artigo 31g. As decisoes proferidas num Estado contratante e que nesse Estado tenham força executiva podem ser executadas em outro Estado contratante depois de nele terem sido declaradas executorias, a requerimento de qualquer parte interessada.

Artigo 32g. O requerimento deve ser apresentado:

- na Bélgica, no "tribunal de première instance" ou "rechtbank van eerste aanleg",

- na Republica Federal da Alemanha, ao presidente de uma câmara do "Landgericht",

- em França, ao presidente do "tribunal de grande instance",

- em Italia, na "corte d'appello",

- no Luxemburgo, ao presidente do "tribunal d'arrondissement",

- nos Países Baixos, ao presidente de "arrondissementsrechtbank".

O tribunal territorialmente competente determina-se pelo domicílio da parte contra a qual a execuçao for promovida. Se esta parte nao estiver domiciliada no territorio do Estado requerido, a competência determina-se pelo lugar da execuçao.

Artigo 33g. A forma de apresentaçao do requerimento regula-se pela lei do Estado requerido.

O requerente deve escolher domicílio na area de jurisdiçao do tribunal em que tiver sido apresentado o requerimento.

Todavia, se a lei do Estado requerido nao previr a escolha de domicílio, o requerente designara um mandatario ad litem.

Os documentos referidos nos artigos 46g. e 47g. devem ser juntos ao requerimento.

Artigo 34g. O tribunal em que for apresentado o requerimento decidira em curto prazo, nao podendo a parte contra a qual a execuçao é promovidaapresentar observaçoes nesta fase do processo.

O requerimento so pode ser indeferido por qualquer dos motivos previstos nos artigos 27g. e 28g.

As decisoes estrangeiras nao podem, em caso algum, ser objecto de revisao de mérito.

Artigo 35g. A decisao proferida sobre o requerimento sera imediatamente levada ao conhecimento do requerente por iniciativa do secretario do tribunal, na forma determinada pela lei do Estado requerido.

Artigo 36g. Se a execuçao for autorizada, a parte contra a qual a execuçao é promovida pode interpor recurso da decisao no prazo de um mês a contar da sua notificaçao.

Se esta parte estiver domiciliada em Estado contratante diferente daquele onde foi proferida a decisao que autoriza a execuçao, o prazo sera de dois meses e começara a correr desde o dia em que tiver sido feita a citaçao pessoal ou domiciliaria. Este prazo nao é susceptível de prorrogaçao em razao da distância.

Artigo 37g. O recurso sera interposto de acordo com as regras do processo contraditorio:

- na Bélgica, para o "tribunal de première instance" ou "rechtbank van eerste aanleg",

- na Republica Federal da Alemanha, para o "Oberlandesgericht",

- em França, para a "Cour d'appel",

- em Italia, para a "corte d'appello",

- no Luxemburgo, para a "Cour supérieure de justice", decidindo em matéria civil,

- nos Países Baixos, para o "arrondissementsrechtbank".

A decisao proferida no recurso apenas pode ser objecto de um recurso de cassaçao e, na Republica Federal da Alemanha, de uma "Rechtsbeschwerde".

Artigo 38g. O tribunal de recurso pode, a pedido da parte que o tiver interposto, suspender a instância, se a decisao estrangeira for, no Estado de origem, objecto de recurso ordinario ou se o prazo para o interpor nao tiver expirado; neste caso, o tribunal pode fixar um prazo para a interposiçao desse recurso.

O tribunal pode ainda sujeitar a execuçao à constituiçao de uma garantia por ele determinada.

Artigo 39g. Durante o prazo de recurso previsto no artigo 36g. e na pendência de decisao sobre o mesmo, so podem tomar-se medidas cautelares sobre os bens da parte contra a qual a execuçao foi promovida.

A decisao de permitir a execuçao implica a autorizaçao para tomar tais medidas.

Artigo 40g. Se o requerimento for indeferido, o requerente pode interpor recurso:

- na Bélgica, para a "Cour d'appel" ou para o "hof van beroep",

- na Republica Federal da Alemanha, para o "Oberlandesgericht",

- em Italia, para a "corte d'appello",

- no Luxemburgo, para a "Cour supérieure de justice", decidindo em matéria civil,

- nos Países Baixos, para o "gerechtshof".

A parte contra a qual é promovida a execuçao deve ser notificada para comparecer no tribunal de recurso. Se faltar, é aplicavel o disposto no segundo e terceiro paragrafos do artigo 20g., ainda que a parte nao esteja domiciliada no territorio de um dos Estados contratantes.

Artigo 41g. A decisao proferida no recurso previsto no artigo 40g. apenas pode ser objecto de um recurso de cassaçao e, na Republica Federal da Alemanha, de uma "Rechtsbeschwerde".

Artigo 42g. Quando a decisao estrangeira se tiver pronunciado sobre varios pedidos e a execuçao nao possa ser autorizada quanto a todos, a autoridade judicial concedera a execuçao relativamente a um ou varios de entre eles.

O requerente pode pedir execuçao parcial.

Artigo 43g. As decisoes estrangeiras que condenem em sançoes pecuniarias compulsorias so sao executorias no Estado requerido se o respectivo montante tiver sido definitivamente fixado pelos tribunais do Estado de origem.

Artigo 44g. O requerente a quem tenha sido concedida assistência judiciaria no Estado onde a decisao foi proferida beneficiara dessa assistência, sem nova apreciaçao, no processo previsto nos artigos 32g. a 35g.

Artigo 45g. Nao pode ser exigida qualquer cauçao ou deposito, seja qual for a sua designaçao, com fundamento na qualidade de estrangeiro ou na falta de domicílio ou de residência no país, à parte que requerer a execuçao, num Estado contratante, de decisao proferida noutro Estado contratante.

3. Se for caso disso, documento comprovativo de que o requerente beneficia de assistência judiciaria no Estado de origem.

Artigo 48g. Na falta de apresentaçao dos documentos referidos no ponto 2 do artigo 46g. e no ponto 2 do artigo 47g., a autoridade judicial pode fixar um prazo para a sua apresentaçao, aceitar documentos equivalentes ou, se se julgar suficientemente esclarecida, dispensa-los. Deve ser apresentada uma traduçao dos documentos desde que a autoridade judicial a exija; a traduçao deve ser autenticada por pessoa habilitada para o efeito num dos Estados contratantes.

Artigo 49g. Nao é exigível a legalizaçao ou outra formalidade analoga dos documentos referidos nos artigos 46g., 47g. e segundo paragrafo do artigo 48g., bem como, se for caso disso, da procuraçao ad litem.

TITULO IV

Artigo 50g. Os actos autênticos exarados num Estado contratante e que nesse Estado tenham força executiva sao declarados executorios, mediante requerimento, noutro Estado contratante, segundo o processo previsto nos artigos 31g. e seguintes. O requerimento so pode ser indeferido se a execuçao do acto autêntico for contraria à ordem publica do Estado requerido.

O acto apresentado deve preencher os requisitos necessarios para a sua autenticidade no Estado de origem.

E aplicavel, se necessario, o disposto na secçao 3 do título III.

Artigo 51g. As transacçoes celebradas perante o juiz no decurso de um processo e que no Estado de origem tenham força executiva sao executorias no Estado requerido nas mesmas condiçoes que os actos autênticos.

TITULO V

DISPOSIÇCES GERAIS

Artigo 52g. Para determinar se uma parte tem domicílio no territorio do Estado contratante a cujos tribunais é submetida a questao, o juiz aplica a sua lei interna.

Quando a parte nao tiver domicílio no Estado a cujos tribunais foi submetida a questao, o juiz, para determinar se a parte tem domicílio noutro Estado contratante, aplica a lei desse Estado.

Todavia, para determinar o domicílio da parte, é aplicavel a sua lei nacional se, segundo esta, o seu domicílio depender do domicílio de uma outra pessoa ou da sede de uma autoridade.

Artigo 53g. Para efeitos da aplicaçao da presente convençao, a sede das sociedades e das pessoas colectivas é equiparada ao domicílio. Todavia, para determinar a sede, o tribunal a que foi submetida a questao aplica as regras do seu direito internacional privado.

TITULO VI

Artigo 54g. As disposiçoes da presente convençao sao aplicaveis apenas às acçoes judiciais intentadas e aos actos autênticos exarados posteriormente à sua entrada em vigor.

REPORT ON THE CONVENTION on the accession of the Kingdom of Spain and the Portuguese Republic to the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice with the adjustments made to them by the Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britian and Northern Ireland and the adjustments made to them by the Convention on the accession of the Hellenic Republic

(1990/C 189/06)

(Signed at Donostia/San Sebastian on 26 May 1989)

by

Mr Martinho de ALMEIDA CRUZ
Judge at First Instance, Legal Counsellor at the Permanent Representation of Portugal to the European Communities

Mr Manuel DESANTES REAL
Professor, Lab Faculty, University of Alicante

and Mr Paul JENARD
Honorary Director of Administration at the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs

In addition to the draft Convention and the other instruments drawn up by the government experts, the draft explanatory report was submitted to the Governments of the Member States of the European Communities prior to the Conference of representatives of the Governments of the Member States held in San Sebastian on 26 May 1989.

This report takes account of the comments made by certain Governments. It takes the form of an authorized commentary on the Convention of 26 May 1989.

CHAPTER I

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

1. Introductory remarks

1. By Article 220 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community, the Member States agreed to enter into negotiations with each other, so far as necessary, `with a view to securing for the benefit of their nationals the simplification of formalities governing the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments of courts or tribunals and of arbitration awards'.

   From this provision has developed, in this specific field, a genuine European legal area which, as will be seen, is destined to extend well beyond the relations between the Member States of the European Communities.

2. Three Conventions have been concluded under Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome prior to the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal:

   1. the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, supplemented by the Protocol of 3 June l971 on its interpretation by the Court of Justice;

2. the Luxembourg Convention of 9 October 1978 on the accession of Denmark, of Ireland and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Brussels Convention and to the 1971 Protocol;

3. the Luxembourg Convention of 25 October 1982 on the accession of Greece to the Brussels Convention as adjusted by the 1978 Convention and the 1971 Protocol.

In addition, negotiations with the Member States of the European Free Trade Association resulted in the Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988, based very largely on the 1968 Brussels Convention as adjusted by the Accession Conventions of 1978 and 1982.

Before entering on a detailed commentary on the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal, a brief description of the previous Conventions is helpful.

2. Previous Conventions concluded under Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome

1. Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968

3. This Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters was concluded between the six original Member States of the European Communities, the Six being Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands [FN 1]. The Convention entered into Force between the six Member States concerned on 1 February 1973.

The Brussels Convention is supplemented by a Protocol signed in Luxembourg on 3 June 1971 conferring on the Court of Justice of the European Communities jurisdiction to interpret the Convention [FN 2]. This Protocol entered into force on 1 September 1975.

4. The Brussels Convention is based on a number of fundamental principles [FN 3]:

- it applies only to matters relating to property,

- it lays down rules of direct jurisdiction, i.e. applying from the beginning of proceedings,

- the defendant's domicile, and not his nationality, is considered to be the basic rule for determining the jurisdiction of the courts,

- no derogation from this rule is allowed, unless expressly provided for in the Convention,

- the defendant's rights must have been respected in the State of origin,

- the grounds for refusing recognition and enforcement are limited in the interests of ensuring the greatest possible freedom of movement of judgments in the Community,

- the exequatur procedure is unified and simplified,

- any State which becomes a member of the European Economic Community is required to accept the Convention as a basis for the negotiations necessary to ensure the implementation of Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome; however, the necessary adjustments may be the subject of special conventions (Article 63).

2. Luxembourg Convention of 9 October 1978

5. After Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland joined the European Communities (Europe of Nine), a new Convention was concluded on the accession of those three States to the 1968 Convention and to the 1971 Protocol [FN 4].

6. That Convention, which is in conformity with Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome and Article 63 of the Brussels Convention, entered into force for Denmark on 1 November 1986, for the United Kingdom on 1 January 1987 and for Ireland on 1 June 1988.

7. The Convention of 9 October 1978 is thus currently in force between nine Member States of the Communities. While it introduced into the Brussels Convention a number of quite significant amendments, it left unchanged the basic principles of that Convention, as summarized in paragraph 4 above.

3. Luxembourg Convention of 25 October 1982

8. After Greece became a member of the Communities (Europe of Ten), the Luxembourg Convention of 25 October 1982 [FN 5] was concluded on its accession to the 1968 Brussels Convention and to the 1971 Protocol, with the adjustments made to them by the 1978 Convention.

That Convention entered into force between Greece and the other States parties to the 1978 Convention on 1 April 1989, with the exception of the United Kingdom, for which it entered into force on 1 October 1989.

The amendments made by the Luxembourg Convention to the Brussels Convention and to the 1971 Protocol are technical only [FN 6].

3. Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988

9. The Member States of the European Free Trade Association [FN 7] were desirous of concluding with the Member States of the European Communities a Convention based on the principles of the 1968 Brussels Convention.

Preparatory proceedings began in 1985 and were completed relatively quickly. They resulted in a Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, which was opened for signature in Lugano on 16 September 1988, at the close of a diplomatic conference held at the invitation of the Swiss Government [FN 8].

10. Without entering into great detail, it is important here to note that the Lugano Convention is also based on the fundamental principles of the Brussels Convention [FN 9] and that many of its Articles are identical to those of that Convention.

Where amendments have been made to the Brussels Convention, these can often be regarded as improvements. It was therefore natural that they should be taken into account in the preparatory negotiations, within the Communities, for the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Brussels Convention (see Chapter V).

The relationship between the Brussels and Lugano Conventions is dealt with in a specific Article (Article 54b) [FN 10] of the Lugano Convention.

The Jenard-Moller Report (paragraphs 14 to 17) has the following to say on the subject:

`As shown above, although the structure of the two Conventions is identical and they contain a great number of comparable provisions, they remain separate Conventions.

Application of the two Conventions is governed by Article 54b. The first point to note is that this Article primarily concerns the courts of member countries of the European Communities, these being the only courts which may be required to deliver judgments pursuant to either Convention. Courts in EFTA Member States are not bound by the Brussels Convention since the EFTA States are not parties to that Convention.

However, Article 54b is relevant for the courts of EFTA countries since it was felt advantageous that Article 54b should, for reasons of clarity, contain details relating to lis pendens, related actions, recognition and enforcement of judgments.

The philosophy of Article 54b is as follows:

According to paragraph 1, the Brussels Convention continues to apply in relations between Member States of the European Communities.

This applies in particular where:

(a) a person, of whatever nationality, domiciled in one Community State, e.g. France, is summoned to appear before a court in another such State, e.g. Italy. The plaintiff's nationality and domicile are immaterial;

(b) a judgment has been delivered in one European Community Member State, e.g. France, and must be recognized or enforced in another such State, e.g. Italy.

The Brussels Convention also applies where a person domiciled outside the territory of a European Community Member State and outside the territory of any other State party to the Lugano Convention, e.g. in the United States, is summoned to appear before a court in a European Community Member State (Article 4 of the Brussels Convention).

In each of these three instances, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has jurisdiction under the 1971 Protocol to rule on problems which may arise with regard to the interpretation of the Brussels Convention.

However, under paragraph 2, the court of a European Community Member State must apply the Lugano Convention where:

1. a defendant is domiciled in the territory of a State which is party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA member or is deemed to be so domiciled under Articles 8 or 13 of the Convention. For instance, if a person domiciled in Norway is summoned before a French court, jurisdiction will be vested in that court only in the cases for which the Lugano Convention provides. In particular the rules of exorbitant jurisdiction provided for in Article 4 of the Brussels Convention may not be relied on as against that person;

2. the courts of an EFTA Member State possess exclusive jurisdiction (Article 16) or jurisdiction by prorogation (Article 17). The courts of Member States of the European Communities may not, for instance, be seised of a dispute relating to real rights in immovable property situated in the territory of a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State, notwithstanding Article 16 (1) of the Brussels Convention, which does not apply unless the immovable property is situated in the territory of a State party to the 1968 Convention;

3. recognition or enforcement of a judgment delivered in a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State is being sought in a Community Member State (paragraph 2 (c)).

   Paragraph 2 also provides that the Lugano Convention applies where a judgment delivered in a Community Member State is to be enforced in an EFTA Member State party to the Lugano Convention.

   This does not resolve potential conflicts between the two Conventions, but it does define their respective scope. Obviously, if a judgment has been delivered in a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State and is to be enforced either in a Community Member State or in an EFTA Member State, the Brussels Convention does not apply;

4. Article 54b also contains provisions relating to lis pendens (Article 21) and related actions (Article 22). Under Article 54b (2) (b) a court in a Community Member State must apply these Articles of the Lugano Convention if a court in an EFTA Member State is seised of the same dispute or a related application.

   Apart from the greater clarity which they bring, these provisions serve a double purpose: to remove all uncertainty, and to ensure that judgments delivered in the different States concerned do not conflict;

5. Article 54b (3) lays down that a court in an EFTA Member State may refuse recognition or enforcement of a judgment delivered by a court in a Community Member State if the grounds on which the latter court has based its jurisdiction are not provided for in the Lugano Convention and if recognition or enforcement is being sought against a party who is domiciled in any EFTA Contracting State.

   These grounds for refusal are additional to those provided for in Article 28, and arise essentially from a guarantee sought by the EFTA Member States. The cases involved can be expected to arise relatively seldom, since with regard to rules of jurisdiction the Conventions are extremely similar. The possibility nevertheless remains. The case would arise in the event of a judgment on a contract of employment delivered by a court in a Community Member State which had erroneously based its jurisdiction with regard to a person domiciled in an EFTA Member State either on Article 4 or Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention, i.e. in a manner inconsistent with Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention, which includes a specific provision on contracts of employment, or on an agreement conferring jurisdiction which predated the origin of the dispute (Article 17).

However, in the interests of freedom of movement of judgments, the judgment will be recognized and enforced provided that this can be done in accordance with the rules of common law of the State addressed, in particular its common law rules on the jurisdiction of foreign courts;

6. For convenience, we have used the term `EFTA Member States' in the above examples. Obviously, the same arrangements would apply to States which are not members of either the EEC of EFTA but accede to the Lugano Convention (see Article 62 (1) (b)).'

CHAPTER II

ACCESSION OF SPAIN AND PORTUGAL TO THE 1968 CONVENTION

11. Article 3 (2) of the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Kingdom of Spain and the Portuguese Republic to the European Communities states that the new Member States undertake to accede to the conventions provided for in Article 220 of the EEC Treaty... and also to the protocols on the interpretation of those conventions by the Court of Justice, signed by the Member States of the Community as originally constituted or as enlarged and to this end they undertake to enter into negotiations with the present Member States in order to make the necessary adjustments thereto' [FN 11].

The only Convention in force that is based on Article 220 is the Brussels Convention of 27 September l968 as adjusted by the 1978 and 1982 Conventions.

12. At the request of the two Governments concerned, and ad hoc working party was set up and held its first meeting in Brussels on 20 February l989 under the chairmanship of Mr A. Boixareu Carrera, First Secretary at the Permanent Representation of Spain to the European Communities.

As rapporteurs, the Permanent Representatives Committee appointed Mr Martinho de Almeida Cruz, Judge at First Instance, Legal Counsellor at the Permanent Representation of Portugal to the European Communities. Mr Manuel Desantes Real, Professor in the Law Faculty of the University of Alicante and Mr Paul Jenard, Honorary Director of Administration at the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The ad hoc working party met three times between 20 February and 10 April 1989 [FN 12].

13. This report deals with:

- the technical adjustments to the Brussels Convention (Chapter IV),

- the adjustments which take account of the Lugano Convention (Chapter V).

In addition, particular attention is given to the final provisions of the Accession Convention, especially as regards its entry into force and territorial application (Chapter VI).

The amendments to the 1971 Protocol on the interpretation of the Convention by the Court of Justice, although only technical, are dealt with in a separate chapter (Chapter VII).

CHAPTER III

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

In the interests of clarity, we have referred in the report to the corresponding Articles of the Brussels Convention. However, Articles 1 and 2 of Accession Convention have no equivalent in the Brussels Convention.

Article 1 containing the undertaking by Spain and Portugal to accede to the Brussels Convention as adjusted by the subsequent Conventions gives rise to no particular comment.

Article 2 includes the provision that the formal adjustments to those Conventions are set out in Annex I to the 1989 Convention, of which it forms an integral part. This provision is designed, in the interests of legal security, to align the various language versions on those of the Lugano Convention, as a number of minor errors in the earlier Conventions were discovered during these negotiations. As Annex I forms an integral part of the Convention, it is the adjusted texts that will be authentic.

CHAPTER IV

TECHNICAL ADJUSTMENTS MADE TO THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION BY THE CONVENTION ON THE ACCESSION OF SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

14. The adjustments concern only:

- exorbitant jurisdictional bases [Article 3 (Article 3)],
- the list of Spanish and Portuguese courts with jurisdiction to apply Title III regarding the recognition and enforcement of judgments,
- bilateral Conventions concerned by the Accession Convention.

1. Exorbitant jurisdictional bases [Article 3 (Article 3)]

15. Portugal:

Articles 65 (1) (c), 65 (2) and 65a (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure and Article 11 of the Code of Labour Procedure.

This provision, inserted in Article 3 of the Accession Convention, is included in the Lugano Convention; on the basis of information provided by the Portuguese delegation, the Jenard-Moller Report comments as follows (paragraph 31):

`Article 65 of Chapter II of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a foreign national may be sued in a Portuguese court where:

- (paragraph 1 (c)) the plaintiff is Portuguese and, if the situation were reversed, he could be sued in the courts of the State of which the defendant is a national,

- (paragraph 2) under Portuguese law, the court with jurisdiction would be that of the defendant's domicile, if the latter is a foreigner who has been resident in Portugal for more than six months or who is fortuitously on Portuguese territory provided that, in the latter case, the obligation which is the subject of the dispute was entered into in Portugal.

Article 65a (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure confers exclusive jurisdiction on Portuguese courts for actions relating to employment relationships if any of the parties is of Portuguese nationality.

Article 11 of the Code of Labour Procedure gives jurisdiction to Portuguese labour courts for disputes concerning a Portuguese worker where the contract was concluded in Portugal.'

16. Spain

Articles 21 and 25 of the Spanish Ley Organica del Poder Judicial of 1 July 1985 governing the international jurisdiction of Spanish civil and social courts are directly based on the Brussels Convention, although drafted unilaterally. There are thus no such exorbitant bases in Spain.

In any event, the particulars for insertion in Article 3 of the Convention are not exhaustive since neither is the list contained in that Article, which merely cites examples, thus if there were any exorbitant jurisdiction, it, too, would be inapplicable.

2. Spanish and Portuguese courts having jurisdiction to apply Title III of the Convention

17. The additions are essentially technical in nature.

The formal adjustments to Articles 32 to 41 (Articles 10 to 13) relate exclusively to the courts having jurisdiction and the types of appeal that may be lodged against their judgments.

With regard to Portugal, it should be pointed out that the term `appeal on a point of law' used in Articles 37 and 41 relates to the restriction of the grounds of appeal to an incorrect application of the law as opposed to an incorrect assessment of the facts.

3. Relationship to existing Conventions and Community acts

a) Bilateral Conventions [Article 55 (Article 18)]

18. The list of bilateral Conventions on the recognition and the enforcement of judgments (of general scope) covers the Conventions concluded by Spain with France, Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany. Portugal has concluded no such Conventions with the Member States of the European Communities.

For the scope of Article 55 of the Brussels Convention the reader is referred to page 59 of the Jenard Report.

Article 58 (Article 20): Franco-Swiss Convention

19. During the negotiations on the Accession Convention it was considered advisable to specify the scope of Article 58 of the 1968 Convention with regard to the application of the Franco-Swiss Convention on jurisdiction and enforcement of judgments in civil matters, signed at Paris on 15 June 1869.

The attention accorded to this Convention is due not to its age but to the fact that it will cease to have effect once the Lugano Convention enters into force between France and the Swiss Confederation. The aim here was to prevent any conflict between the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention.

(b) Multilateral Conventions [Article 57 (Article 19)]

20. This matter is covered by Article 57. Article 57 (2) lays down a much more detailed system for settling conflicts of convention between the Brussels Convention and Conventions concluded on a particular matter. This provision was adopted in the 1978 Accession Convention (see Schlosser Report, paragraphs 238 to 246). In the interests of clarity it was thought preferable that it should be reproduced as such in Article 57 (2), just as it was included in the Lugano Convention, although with some differences from that Convention in order to ensure greater freedom of movement of judgments in the Community (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraphs 81 to 83).

(c) Community acts [Article 57 (3) (Article 19)]

21. This provision, which appears in the 1978 Convention, has been incorporated as such.

It should be noted that no Community act (Regulation or Directive) has so far contained any provision relating to jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments.

The problem of Community acts in relations between the Member States of the European Communities, i.e. in the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal, undoubtedly differs considerably from that which arises in relations with third countries. It is thus normal that on this point the Accession Convention should depart from the Lugano Convention (see Protocol 3 and relevant Declaration, and Jenard-Moller Report, paragraphs 120 to 128).

4. Special consideration regarding Spain: Actions on a warranty or guarantee

22. Third party intervention in proceedings is not governed by explicit rules in the Spanish legal system and the want of proper procedures is the source of procedural uncertainty. This legal hiatus has been severely criticized in the works of legal experts, who have recommended that it be remedied in the near future. However, this has not prevented acceptance of third party proceedings in some fields of jurisprudence or in civil laws governing certain specific cases, e.g. Article 124 (3) of Law No 11 of 20 March l986 on patents and Article 1482 [FN 13] of the Civil Code, regarding eviction. Generally speaking, it is the latter rule which is applicable in cases of non-voluntary third party proceedings; in the negotiations between the Member States of the European Communities and those of the European Free Trade Association, it was therefore judged advisable to include it in Article V of Protocol 1. Article 1482 is referred to, albeit indirectly, in Articles 638 (gift), 1145 (joint and several obligations), 1529 (assignment of claims), 1540 (exchange), 1553 (tenancy) 1681 (obligations of partners), 1830 (surety), 1831 (co-surety), etc. of the Civil Code.

When the problem arose during the negotiations for Spanish and Portuguese accession to the Brussels Convention, the Spanish delegation concluded that jurisprudence in this area could soon develop beyond the limited case of Article 1482 of the Civil Code. It therefore seemed wiser to omit any reference to Spain in Article V of Protocol 1, with there to be no difference in interpretation between the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention.

CHAPTER V

AMENDMENTS INCORPORATED FROM THE LUGANO CONVENTION

1. Article 5 (1) (Article 4): Contract of employment

23. (a) In negotiations for the Lugano Convention, the EFTA Member States requested that the question of the contract of employment should, where Article 5 and Article 17 were concerned (on the latter Article, see 27 below), be covered by independent provisions in order to ensure that the interpretation of it was that given on a number of occasions by the Court of Justice (see in particular the judgment of the Court of 26 May 1982 in Ivenel v. Schwab, Case 133/81, ECR 1982, p. 1891, and that given on 15 January 1987 in Shenavai v. Kreischer, Case 266/85, ECR 1987, pp. 239 to 257). Under the new Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention on the question of the contract of employment, the place of performance of the obligation in question is taken to mean that where the employee habitually carries out his work; if he does not habitually carry out his work in any one country, this place is the place of business through which he was engaged (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraphs 35 to 44).

(b) Following signature of the Lugano Convention, the working party took cognizance of the judgment given by the Court of Justice on 15 February 1989 (Six Constructions v. Humbert, Case 32/88). In the case, the French Cour de Cassation (Court of Cassation) had requested a ruling, inter alia, on the following question: `what is the obligation to be taken into account for the purposes of the application of Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 where the court is faced with claims based on obligations arising under a contract of employment binding an employee resident in France to a company having its registered office in Belgium which sent him to several countries outside Community territory?'

Although in the operative part of this judgment the Court of Justice restricts itself to pointing out that `Article 5 (1) of the Convention must be interpreted as meaning that, as regards contracts of employment, the obligation to be taken into consideration is that which characterizes the contract, in particular the obligation to carry out the duties agreed', it stresses obiter dictum the need to ensure adequate protection for the contracting party in the weaker position from the social point of view i.e. the employee concluding that `the particular characteristics of contracts of employment do not justify an interpretation under which Article 5 (1) of the Convention would allow the place where the business which engaged the employee is situated to be taken into consideration in cases where it would be difficult or impossible to say in which State the work had been carried out'.

(c) The solution adopted attempts to improve on that adopted by the Lugano Convention without departing from it too greatly, while following the guidelines laid down by the Court of Justice on the protection of the weaker party in the contractual relationship (note the same concern for protection in Article 17 (5) at 27 below). It was therefore agreed that, where the employee does not habitually carry out his work in any one country, the assumption contained in the last part of Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention is to operate in favour of the employee only. In order to avoid all ambiguity, the text states that the employee may bring proceedings before the courts for the place where the business [FN 14] which engaged him was situated either at the time of engagement or at the time when proceedings are brought. This stipulation was found necessary following discussions held within the working party on the degree to which the Six Contructions v. Humbert ruling should be taken into account.

(d) It follows from the same concern to protect the employee that the expression `in any one country' also includes cases where the work has been carried out, in whole or in part, outside Community territory.

(e) The effect of this provision is that, in any dispute between an employer and an employee, where the employee does not habitually carry out his work in any one country (whether or not within the Community):

1. the employer can only bring an action before the courts indicated in general terms in Article 2;

2. the employee can bring proceedings before the courts indicated in general terms in Article 2 or those in the last part of Article 5 (1) (the courts within the jurisdiction of which the business which engaged the employee is or was situated).

2. Article 6 (4) (Article 5): Combinations of actions in rem and in personam

24. This provision is taken directly from the text of the Lugano Convention. The Jenard-Moller Report (paragraphs 46 and 47) gives the following commentary on it:

`When a person has a mortgage on immovable property the owner of that property is quite often also personally liable for the secured debt. Therefore it has in some States been made possible to combine an action concerning the personal liability of the owner with an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property. This presupposes of course that the court for the place where the immovable property is situated also has jurisdiction as to actions concerning the personal liability of the owner.

It was agreed that it was practical that an action concerning the personal liability of the owner of an immovable property could be combined with an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property in those States where such a combination of actions was possible. Therefore it was deemed appropriate to include in the Convention a provision according to which a person domiciled in a Contracting State also may be sued in matters relating to a contract, if the action may be combined with an action against the same defendant in matters relating to rights in rem in immovable property, in the court of the Contracting State in which the property is situated.

To illustrate, let us assume that a person domiciled in France is the owner of an immovable property situated in Norway. This person has raised a loan which is secured through a mortgage on his immovable property in Norway. In the eventuality of the loan not being repaid when due, if the creditor wants to bring an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property, the Norwegian court has exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 (1). This court has however, under the present provision, moreover jurisdiction as to an action against the owner of the property concerning his personal liability for the debt, if the creditor wants to combine the latter action with an action for the enforced sale of the property.

It goes without saying that this jurisdictional basis cannot exist by itself. It must necessarily be supplemented by legal criteria which determine on which conditions such a combination is possible. Thus the provisions already existing in or which in the future may be introduced into the legal systems of the Contracting States with reference to the combining of the abovementioned actions remain unaffected by the Lugano Convention.

It goes without saying however that the combination of the two actions which this paragraph deals with have to be instituted by the "same claimant". The "same claimant" includes of course also a person to whom another person has transferred his rights or his successor.

3. Article 16 (1) (Article 6): Tenancies

25. (a) Taking into consideration the Lugano Convention and the intention, according to the Jenard (page 35) and Schlosser (paragraph 164) Reports, of the drafters of the Brussels Convention, the working party decided to insert a new subparagraph (b) in Article 16 (1), containing a special provision on short-term tenancies. This insertion was necessary in view of the fact that, in giving a ruling on the provision as drafted in 1968, the Court had been obliged to interpret literally Article 16 (1) of the Convention and to decide that it applied to all proceedings concerning the payment of rent, including cases of short-term rental of holiday accommodation (judgment of 15 January 1985, Rosler v. Rottwinkel, Case 241/83, ECR 1985, pp. 99 to 129).

(b) Because of the interpretation given by the Court to Article 16 (1), the Member States of EFTA and a number of Member States of the Communities expressed interest in including in the Lugano Convention a provision relating to tenancies of immovable property for limited periods. An agreement covering this was reached by which Article 16 (1) would be supplemented by the addition of a new subparagraph (b) (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 49 et seq.).

(c) The solution adopted by the Accession Convention differs from that contained in the Lugano Convention. In the first place, it is more restrictive: under subparagraph (b), the plaintiff may also bring an action before the courts of the Contracting State in the territory of which the defendant has his domicile where the proceedings concern tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months - this refers in particular to contracts agreed for holiday purposes - if (and only if) the tenant and the landlord are natural persons domiciled in the same Contracting State. Legal persons are excluded on the grounds that they are generally concerned with commercial transactions.

Secondly, this provision is not accompanied by any reservation option, since the introduction of a reservation was considered hardly conceivable in connection with a Convention based on Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome. It should be noted that Article 1b in Protocol 1 to the Lugano Convention allows for the possibility of entering a reservation by which any Contracting State may declare that it will not recognize or enforce a decision on tenancies of immovable property if the property concerned is situated on the territory of the State entering the reservation, even where the tenancy is of the type referred to in Article 16 (1) (b) and where the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin is based on the domicile of the defendant (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 3).

(d) As already pointed out in the Jenard-Moller Report (paragraph 54), `Article 16 (1) applies only if the property is situated in the territory of a Contracting State. The text is sufficiently explicit on this point. If the property is situated in the territory of a third State, the other provisions of the Convention apply, e.g. Article 2 if the defendant is domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State, and Article 4 if he is domiciled in the territory of a third State, etc.'

4. Article 17 (Article 7): Agreements conferring jurisdiction

(a) Form of agreements conferring jurisdiction

26. Paragraph 1 of Article 17 is once again directly from the text of the Lugano Convention.

The Jenard-Moller Report deals with this point at some length (see paragraphs 55 to 59); in summary, it says that, under the new arrangements adopted, agreements conferring jurisdiction should be:

- in writing or evidenced in writing; this is in accordance with the terms of the 1968 Convention,

- or in a form which accords with practices which the parties have established between themselves; on this, see the judgment of the Court of Justice of 14 December 1976, Case 25/76, Segoura v. Bonakdarian, ECR 1976, pp. 1851 to 1863,

- or, in international trade or commerce, in a form which accords with a usage of which the parties are or ought to have been aware (this is in accordance with the amendments made by the 1978 Convention to the 1968 Convention), but in addition this usage in such trade or commerce must be widely known to, and regularly observed by parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned.

These conditions supplementary to the text of the 1978 Convention were taken from Article 9 (2) of the 1980 Vienna Convention on International Contracts for the Sale of Goods.

(b) Agreements conferring jurisdiction in matters relating to contracts of employment [Article 17 (5) (Article 7)]

27. (a) This paragraph relates to agreements conferring jurisdiction in matters relating to contracts of employment.

There is no one provision of the 1968 Brussels Convention, as modified by the 1978 and 1982 Conventions, which expressly deals with this subject, although it has given rise to a judgment of the Court of Justice [FN 15].

(b) During negotiations for the Lugano Convention, the representatives of the Member States of EFTA proposed the addition of a new paragraph to Article 17 to the effect that agreements conferring jurisdiction in the matter of an individual contract of employment should only have legal force if they are entered into after the dispute has arisen. The addition was accepted in view of the fact that the idea underlying this provision was the protection of the employee who from the socioeconomic point of view is regarded as the weaker in the contractual relationship (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 60).

(c) It was natural that this amendment made by the Lugano Convention to the Brussels Convention should be the subject of particularly careful study during the negotiations on the Accession Convention, having regard also to the judgment given on 15 February 1989 by the Court of Justice, in which the Court, too, in its grounds for judgment gave particular attention to the protection of the weaker party, i.e. the employee (Case 32/88, Six Constructions v. P. Humbert, OJ No C 62, 11. 3. 1979, p. 7; see also 23 above).

(d) The solution adopted by the Accession Convention differs from that contained in the Lugano Convention in its emphasis on protection of the employee.

In other words, the solution incorporated in the Lugano Convention was considered too radical: this would be the case in particular where the agreement conferring jurisdiction, while entered into prior to the dispute arising, could in the employee's own view be favourable to him. For this reason the new paragraph 5 in Article 17 of the Convention provides that the agreement conferring jurisdiction may only take effect where it is entered into after the dispute has arisen - as in the Lugano Convention - or if the employee invokes it to seise courts other than those for the defendant's domicile or those specified in Article 5 (1)', which moderates the radicality of the Lugano Convention.

(e) It follows from this provision that:

1. The employee, in any dispute with the employer, may refer the dispute to the agreed courts having jurisdiction, even if the agreement conferring jurisdiction was entered into prior to the dispute arising.

2. Under the terms of the new provision this option is only open to the employee so that he may himself refer the dispute to the court to which prorogation is made; he could not make use of it in exceptional circumstances, e.g. if he were summoned to appear before the courts of his domicile. The latter possibility is denied him for the sake of protecting legal security and avoiding delaying action.

3. Finally, if the clause conferring jurisdiction attributes it to a court in the State of the defendant's domicile, the court to which prorogation has specially been made would have jurisdiction if the Convention is invoked by the employee. This should be the case, given that the deciding factor is the employee's choice and that where protection of employees is concerned the legal systems of different Contracting States are not all in agreement.

(f) In this new construction, the choice between the courts having jurisdiction (courts of the State of the defendant's domicile, place of performance of the contract of employment or to which prorogation has been made) thus lies entirely at the discretion of the employee in his capacity as plaintiff.

5. Article 21 (Article 8): Lis pendens

28. Article 21 of the Brussels Convention has been brought into line with Article 21 of the Lugano Convention, which lays down that in cases of lis pendens a court other than the one first seised, instead of declining jurisdiction of its own motion, must stay its proceedings of its own motion until the jurisdiction of the first court seised has been established. The Jenard-Moller Report (paragraph 64) contains the following commentary on this:

`Only this Article has been amended in Section 8.

Article 21 of the Brussels Convention provides that in cases of lis pendens, any court other than the court first seised must of its own motion decline jurisdiction in favour of that court and may stay its proceedings if the jurisdiction of the other court is contested.

The representatives of the EFTA Member States thought this solution was too radical.

They observed that an action often had to be brought in order to comply with a time limit or stop further time from running, and that opinions differed as to whether a time limit had been complied with where an action had been brought before a court lacking jurisdiction internationally.

Thus, in their view, if an action was brought before a judge who would have had jurisdiction, but was not the first to be seised, that judge would of his own motion have to decline jurisdiction in favour of the court first seised. However, that court might perhaps decide that it did not have jurisdiction. In that case, both actions would have been dismissed with the result that the time limits might have run out and the action be time barred.

These remarks have been taken into consideration.

Article 21 has been amended so that the court other than the court first seised will of its own motion stay its proceedings until the jurisdiction of the other court has been established.

A court other than the one first seised will not decline jurisdiction in favour of the court first seised until the jurisdiction of the latter has been established (see Schlosser Report, paragraph 176).

The Court of Justice has ruled that the concepts employed in Article 21 to define a case of lis pendens should be considered to be `independent' (point 11 of the grounds for judgment) and that the term lis pendens to which Article 21 refers covers a case where a party brings an action before a court in a Contracting State for a declaration that an international sales contract is inoperative or for the termination thereof whilst an action by the other party to secure performance of the said contract is pending before a court in another Contracting State' (judgment of 8 December 1987 in Case 144/86, Gubisch v. Palumbo, OJ No C 8, 13. 1. 1988, p. 3).

6. Articles 31 and 50 (Articles 9 and 14)

29. The expression `when the order for its enforcement has been issued', used in the Brussels Convention has been replaced by when it has been declared enforceable', as in the Lugano Convention. This amendment to the Brussels Convention was adopted in order to bring the two Conventions into line, particularly since the two expressions may be considered virtually equivalent (see also the Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 68 and 69, on this).

7. Article 52, third paragraph (Article 15)

30. The third paragraph of Article 52 has been deleted, in line with the Lugano Convention, as pointed out in the Jenard-Moller Report. This course was taken in view particularly of developments since the 1968 Convention was drafted as regards the domicile of married women (for further explanation, see the Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 53).

8. Article 54 (Article 16): Transitional provisions

31. 1. Only technical adjustments have been made to the first and second paragraphs of this Article. No modification to the substance has been made (see Jenard Report, pp. 57 and 58, Schlosser Report, paragraphs 228 to 235 and Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 74).

2. During negotiations for the 1989 Accession Convention it was considered appropriate to reproduce the third paragraph of Article 54 of the Lugano Convention and specify the scope of the words `this Convention'. This paragraph corresponds to Article 35 of the 1978 Accession Convention (see Schlosser Report, paragraphs 121 et seq.) and was declared to extend to the accession of the the Hellenic Republic by virtue of Article 1 (2) of the 1982 Accession Convention. For reasons of clarity, the 1989 Accession Convention defines what is to be understood by date of entry into force'. It was agreed that the provision shall only apply to agreements in writing dating from before 1 January 1987 where the United Kingdom is concerned and 1 June 1988 where Ireland is concerned.

9. Article 54a (Article 17)

32. This Article corresponds to Article 36 of the 1978 Accession Convention and Article 54a of the Lugano Convention (see Schlosser Report, paragraphs 121 et seq.. and Jenard-Moller Report, paragraph 75).

It should be noted that despite the wording of Article 54a of the Lugano Convention this provision does not apply to Greece, as Greece has ratified the Brussels Convention of 10 May l952 on the Arrest of Seagoing Ships. That Convention will also shortly be ratified by Denmark, and the approval procedure is under way in Ireland.

CHAPTER VI

FINAL PROVISIONS

1. Territorial application

33. This question was specifically dealt with by Article 60 of the 1968 Convention, as amended by Article 27 of the 1978 Accession Convention. Those two Articles are rescinded by Article 21 of this Accession Convention.

Under those Articles 60 and 27, the 1968 and 1978 Conventions applied to the European territory of the Contracting States, hut special provisions applied to France, Denmark, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

In accordance with those provisions and with statements made, where in existence, the situation at the date of signature of the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal is as follows:

(a) France: The 1968 Convention as modified by the 1978 Convention applies to all territories which are an integral part of the French Republic (see Articles 71 et seq. of the Constitution), including therefore the French Overseas Departments (Guadeloupe, Martinique, Guiana, Reunion), the Overseas Territories (Polynesia, New Caledonia, Southern and Antarctic Territories) and the individual territorial collectivities (Saint Pierre and Miquelon, Mayotte).

(b) Denmark: The 1978 Convention does not apply:

- either to the Faroe Islands, in the absence of any declaration to that effect.

- or to Greenland, as Denmark declared upon deposit of its instrument of ratification that the Convention did not extend to Greenland.

(c) The Netherlands: Since 1 January 1986, the Kingdom of the Netherlands consists of three countries, namely: the Netherlands, the Netherlands Antilles (the islands of Bonaire, Curacao, Sint Maarten (Netherlands part of the island), Sint Eustatius and Saba) and Aruba.

It should be noted here that the 1968 Convention stated that the Government of the Netherlands could declare the Convention applicable to Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles and that, in the absence of such declaration with respect to the Netherlands Antilles, proceedings taking place in the European territory of the Kingdom as a result of an appeal in cassation against the judgment of a court in the Netherlands Antilles should be deemed to be proceedings in the latter court.

In the 1978 Convention, the same provision was adopted except in relation to Surinam (Article 27 of the Accession Convention). The Convention therefore does not extend to Surinam. Upon deposit of the Netherlands' instrument of ratification regarding the 1978 Convention, it was expressly stated that the instrument included the declaration that the ratification applied only to the Kingdom in Europe.

As regards other territories which since 1986 have been part of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, it should be noted that the Convention's application was extended to Aruba on 30 June 1986.

(d) United Kingdom: The 1978 Convention (Article 27) providing that the Convention applied only to the European territory of the Contracting States specified that it did not apply to European territories situated outside the United Kingdom for the international relations of which the United Kingdom was responsible, in the absence of a declaration to the contrary by the United Kingdom with respect to such a territory (on these territories, see Schlosser Report, paragraph 252). No such declaration has been made by the United Kingdom.

34. In conclusion, on the date of the opening for signature of the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal, the 1968 Convention as modified by the 1978 and 1982 Conventions:

(a) applied to all territories which are an integral part of the French Republic;

(b) in the case of Denmark, did not apply to Greenland or the Faroe Islands;

(c) in the case of the Netherlands, applied only to the Kingdom's territory in Europe and to Aruba;

(d) in the case of the United Kingdom, did not apply to European territories situated outside the United Kingdom for the international relations of which the United Kingdom was responsible.

2. Effect of deletion of Article 60

35. The deletion of Article 60 is in agreement with the solution adopted in the Lugano Convention which also includes no clause on territorial application (see Jenard-Moller Report, paragraphs 91 to 96). The Convention could therefore be applicable to non-European territories.

36. (a) Territories affected

France: See 33 above.

Spain: The Convention applies to the whole territory of the Kingdom of Spain.

Portugal: The Convention applies to the whole territory of the Portuguese Republic. An extension of the Convention to Macao and East Timor would be possible.

Denmark: Denmark could extend the application of the Convention to the Faroe Islands and Greenland.

The Netherlands: The Netherlands could extend application to the Netherlands Antilles, extension to Aruba having already been accomplished.

United Kingdom: The list of non-European territories for the international relations of which the United Kingdom is responsible is given in Annex III.

It should be noted that in the negotiations leading up to the Lugano Convention, the United Kingdom indicated that, of its non-European territories, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, the Turks and Caicos Islands and Hong Kong were ones to which there might be a real prospect of the Convention being extended.

37. (b) Transitional situations

1. It could happen that before entry into force of the Accession Convention with regard to one of the States concerned (e.g. Denmark or the United Kingdom), that State might make declarations of extension on the basis of Article 60 of the 1978 Convention.

In our view, such declarations would become effective with regard to the States which were parties to the 1978 Convention and would continue to apply with regard to Spain and Portugal as from the entry into force of the Accession Convention between those countries and the territory concerned.

2. The effect of the progressive implementation of the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal is that for a transitional period this Convention and the 1968 Convention, as modified by the 1978 and 1982 Conventions will be governing relations between the Member States of the Communities simultaneously. To illustrate this, the following example may be taken: if Spain and the Netherlands are the first two States ratifying the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal, that Convention will govern relations between them, but between the Netherlands and the other States which have ratified the 1978 and 1982 Conventions it will be the provisions of those two Conventions which will remain applicable.

   This duality is not without implications for the territorial application of the Conventions. If it is supposed that after ratifying the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal the Netherlands wishes to extend it to the Netherlands Antilles, its declaration of extension would have to be made not only on the basis of Article 60 of the 1968 Convention [FN 16] so that the extension will be effective with regard to the other States which are party to that Convention, but also in conformity with the rules of public international law so that it will be effective with regard to Spain and Portugal.

3. Concerning the United Kingdom, under Article 60 (16) of the 1978 Convention, the United Kingdom may extend the Convention's application `to European territories' situated outside the United Kingdom for the international relations of which it is responsible.

   The 1978 Convention does not give the United Kingdom the right to extend the application of this Convention to non-European territories for the international relations of which it is responsible.

   Extension of the Convention even to non-European territories for the international relations of which the United Kingdom is responsible will therefore be governed in accordance with the rules of public international law.

38. The situation might prove somewhat complex for a time, but this demonstrates that there is every incentive to ensure that the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal is ratified as soon as possible by all the Member States of the Communities.

3. Entry into force

39. 1. Under Article 32 of the 1989 Accession Convention, it will enter into force when it has been ratified by two signatory States one of which is the Kingdom of Spain or the Portuguese Republic.

2. An accelerated entry into force of the Convention has been intentionally sought after. This intention was confirmed by the Declaration annexed to the Convention, which establishes a link between the Brussels Convention and the completion of the internal market and urges the States to adopt appropriate measures for ratification as soon as possible and, if possible, by 31 December 1992.

The effect of Article 32 is that the Convention could enter into force between Spain and Portugal if they were the first countries to ratify it.

3. It was understood that even in such circumstances the Court of Justice would have jurisdiction to give a ruling on the interpretation of the Accession Convention.

CHAPTER VII

LUXEMBOURG PROTOCOL OF 3 JUNE 1971

40. In general it may be said that the 1971 Protocol has been adapted to successive Accession Conventions. Its basic structure, which falls within the framework of Article 177 of the Treaty of Rome, has not been altered.

The considerations contained in the Jenard Report (OJ No C 59, 5. 3. 1979, p. 66), Schlosser Report (paragraphs 255 and 256) and Evrigenis-Kerameus Report (paragraphs 91 to 99) are therefore appropriate for consultation purposes.

The necessary technical adjustments consequent upon the accession of Spain and Portugal were made.

Articles 26 and 27 of the 1989 Accession Convention have deleted Articles 6 and 10 (d) of the Protocol relating to the Convention's territorial application.

CHAPTER VIII

CONCLUSIONS

1. The situation as revealed in this report may appear to be fairly complex, as the specialist finds himself confronted with a number of international instruments applying to a single area.

2. Without denying this complexity, one should not lose sight of the fact that this is a process which involves a very great effort on the part of 18 European States for the purpose of achieving, in the specific area of jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, a true European judicial area resting on common foundations. This creation has been brought about by successive accretions resulting from the extension of the Communities and from the interest shown by the EFTA countries in the Brussels Convention.

3. As a remedy, consideration should first be given to early ratification by all the States concerned of the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal, in accordance with the terms of the Declaration and because of the links between the Convention and the single market to which it draws attention. The situation would then certainly be clearer with the Brussels Convention brought up to date, as it were, by all the Member States of the Communities. This apart, arrangements have been adopted - as we described in our discussion of the final provisions (Chapter VI) - to speed up the implementation of this Accession Convention.

4. An early ratification of the Lugano Convention is of no less interest.

At a practical level, it would protect persons domiciled in a Member State of the Communities in that they could no longer be required to appear before the courts of EFTA Member States on exorbitant bases, and it would also ensure free movement of judgments. In economic terms, the EFTA countries are the European Communities' principal customer ahead even of the United States and Japan together; conversely, the Communities represent the EFTA countries' most important market. The Lugano Convention should resolve any disputes that may arise in the course of such trade.

5. Since 1 October 1989 the Brussels Convention has been in force between 10 Member States of the Communities.

   The following summary indicates the various stages which have been reached:

   1. The 1968 Brussels Convention entered into force on 1 February 1973 between Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands. The Protocol of 3 June 1971 entered into force between those six countries on 1 September 1975.

   2. The 1968 Convention was replaced by the 1978 Convention in relations between those six States and Denmark with effect from 1 November 1986, between all of those and the United Kingdom with effect from 1 January 1987 and between all of those and Ireland with effect from 1 June 1988.

   3. The 1982 Convention on the accession of Greece entered into force on 1 April 1989 between Greece and Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands. It has applied to the United Kingdom since 1 October 1989.

   4. The 1989 Accession Convention will enter into force when it has been ratified by two signatory States one of which is the Kingdom of Spain or the Portuguese Republic.

   5. The Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988 will enter into force when it has been ratified by two States one of which is a member of the Communities and the other a member of EFTA.

Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

of 22 December 2000

on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty establishing the European Community, and in particular Article 61(c) and Article 67(1) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal from the Commission(1),

Having regard to the opinion of the European Parliament(2),

Having regard to the opinion of the Economic and Social Committee(3),

Whereas:

(1) The Community has set itself the objective of maintaining and developing an area of freedom, security and justice, in which the free movement of persons is ensured. In order to establish progressively such an area, the Community should adopt, amongst other things, the measures relating to judicial cooperation in civil matters which are necessary for the sound operation of the internal market.

(2) Certain differences between national rules governing jurisdiction and recognition of judgments hamper the sound operation of the internal market. Provisions to unify the rules of conflict of jurisdiction in civil and commercial matters and to simplify the formalities with a view to rapid and simple recognition and enforcement of judgments from Member States bound by this Regulation are essential.

(3) This area is within the field of judicial cooperation in civil matters within the meaning of Article 65 of the Treaty.

(4) In accordance with the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality as set out in Article 5 of the Treaty, the objectives of this Regulation cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States and can therefore be better achieved by the Community. This Regulation confines itself to the minimum required in order to achieve those objectives and does not go beyond what is necessary for that purpose.

(5) On 27 September 1968 the Member States, acting under Article 293, fourth indent, of the Treaty, concluded the Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, as amended by Conventions on the Accession of the New Member States to that Convention (hereinafter referred to as the "Brussels Convention")(4). On 16 September 1988 Member States and EFTA States concluded the Lugano Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, which is a parallel Convention to the 1968 Brussels Convention. Work has been undertaken for the revision of those Conventions, and the Council has approved the content of the revised texts. Continuity in the results achieved in that revision should be ensured.

(6) In order to attain the objective of free movement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, it is necessary and appropriate that the rules governing jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments be governed by a Community legal instrument which is binding and directly applicable.

(7) The scope of this Regulation must cover all the main civil and commercial matters apart from certain well-defined matters.

(8) There must be a link between proceedings to which this Regulation applies and the territory of the Member States bound by this Regulation. Accordingly common rules on jurisdiction should, in principle, apply when the defendant is domiciled in one of those Member States.

(9) A defendant not domiciled in a Member State is in general subject to national rules of jurisdiction applicable in the territory of the Member State of the court seised, and a defendant domiciled in a Member State not bound by this Regulation must remain subject to the Brussels Convention.

(10) For the purposes of the free movement of judgments, judgments given in a Member State bound by this Regulation should be recognised and enforced in another Member State bound by this Regulation, even if the judgment debtor is domiciled in a third State.

(11) The rules of jurisdiction must be highly predictable and founded on the principle that jurisdiction is generally based on the defendant's domicile and jurisdiction must always be available on this ground save in a few well-defined situations in which the subject-matter of the litigation or the autonomy of the parties warrants a different linking factor. The domicile of a legal person must be defined autonomously so as to make the common rules more transparent and avoid conflicts of jurisdiction.

(12) In addition to the defendant's domicile, there should be alternative grounds of jurisdiction based on a close link between the court and the action or in order to facilitate the sound administration of justice.

(13) In relation to insurance, consumer contracts and employment, the weaker party should be protected by rules of jurisdiction more favourable to his interests than the general rules provide for.

(14) The autonomy of the parties to a contract, other than an insurance, consumer or employment contract, where only limited autonomy to determine the courts having jurisdiction is allowed, must be respected subject to the exclusive grounds of jurisdiction laid down in this Regulation.

(15) In the interests of the harmonious administration of justice it is necessary to minimise the possibility of concurrent proceedings and to ensure that irreconcilable judgments will not be given in two Member States. There must be a clear and effective mechanism for resolving cases of lis pendens and related actions and for obviating problems flowing from national differences as to the determination of the time when a case is regarded as pending. For the purposes of this Regulation that time should be defined autonomously.

(16) Mutual trust in the administration of justice in the Community justifies judgments given in a Member State being recognised automatically without the need for any procedure except in cases of dispute.

(17) By virtue of the same principle of mutual trust, the procedure for making enforceable in one Member State a judgment given in another must be efficient and rapid. To that end, the declaration that a judgment is enforceable should be issued virtually automatically after purely formal checks of the documents supplied, without there being any possibility for the court to raise of its own motion any of the grounds for non-enforcement provided for by this Regulation.

(18) However, respect for the rights of the defence means that the defendant should be able to appeal in an adversarial procedure, against the declaration of enforceability, if he considers one of the grounds for non-enforcement to be present. Redress procedures should also be available to the claimant where his application for a declaration of enforceability has been rejected.

(19) Continuity between the Brussels Convention and this Regulation should be ensured, and transitional provisions should be laid down to that end. The same need for continuity applies as regards the interpretation of the Brussels Convention by the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the 1971 Protocol(5) should remain applicable also to cases already pending when this Regulation enters into force.

(20) The United Kingdom and Ireland, in accordance with Article 3 of the Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, have given notice of their wish to take part in the adoption and application of this Regulation.

(21) Denmark, in accordance with Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, is not participating in the adoption of this Regulation, and is therefore not bound by it nor subject to its application.

(22) Since the Brussels Convention remains in force in relations between Denmark and the Member States that are bound by this Regulation, both the Convention and the 1971 Protocol continue to apply between Denmark and the Member States bound by this Regulation.

(23) The Brussels Convention also continues to apply to the territories of the Member States which fall within the territorial scope of that Convention and which are excluded from this Regulation pursuant to Article 299 of the Treaty.

(24) Likewise for the sake of consistency, this Regulation should not affect rules governing jurisdiction and the recognition of judgments contained in specific Community instruments.

(25) Respect for international commitments entered into by the Member States means that this Regulation should not affect conventions relating to specific matters to which the Member States are parties.

(26) The necessary flexibility should be provided for in the basic rules of this Regulation in order to take account of the specific procedural rules of certain Member States. Certain provisions of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention should accordingly be incorporated in this Regulation.

(27) In order to allow a harmonious transition in certain areas which were the subject of special provisions in the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention, this Regulation lays down, for a transitional period, provisions taking into consideration the specific situation in certain Member States.

(28) No later than five years after entry into force of this Regulation the Commission will present a report on its application and, if need be, submit proposals for adaptations.

(29) The Commission will have to adjust Annexes I to IV on the rules of national jurisdiction, the courts or competent authorities and redress procedures available on the basis of the amendments forwarded by the Member State concerned; amendments made to Annexes V and VI should be adopted in accordance with Council Decision 1999/468/EC of 28 June 1999 laying down the procedures for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission(6),

HAS ADOPTED THIS REGULATION:

CHAPTER I

(b) bankruptcy, proceedings relating to the winding-up of insolvent companies or other legal persons, judicial arrangements, compositions and analogous proceedings;

Section 1

General provisions

Article 2

1. Subject to this Regulation, persons domiciled in a Member State shall, whatever their nationality, be sued in the courts of that Member State.

2. Persons who are not nationals of the Member State in which they are domiciled shall be governed by the rules of jurisdiction applicable to nationals of that State.

Article 3

1. Persons domiciled in a Member State may be sued in the courts of another Member State only by virtue of the rules set out in Sections 2 to 7 of this Chapter.

2. In particular the rules of national jurisdiction set out in Annex I shall not be applicable as against them.

Article 4

1. If the defendant is not domiciled in a Member State, the jurisdiction of the courts of each Member State shall, subject to Articles 22 and 23, be determined by the law of that Member State.

2. As against such a defendant, any person domiciled in a Member State may, whatever his nationality, avail himself in that State of the rules of jurisdiction there in force, and in particular those specified in Annex I, in the same way as the nationals of that State.

Section 2

Special jurisdiction

Article 5

A person domiciled in a Member State may, in another Member State, be sued:

1. (a) in matters relating to a contract, in the courts for the place of performance of the obligation in question;

(b) for the purpose of this provision and unless otherwise agreed, the place of performance of the obligation in question shall be:

- in the case of the sale of goods, the place in a Member State where, under the contract, the goods were delivered or should have been delivered,

- in the case of the provision of services, the place in a Member State where, under the contract, the services were provided or should have been provided,

(c) if subparagraph (b) does not apply then subparagraph (a) applies;

2. in matters relating to maintenance, in the courts for the place where the maintenance creditor is domiciled or habitually resident or, if the matter is ancillary to proceedings concerning the status of a person, in the court which, according to its own law, has jurisdiction to entertain those proceedings, unless that jurisdiction is based solely on the nationality of one of the parties;

3. in matters relating to tort, delict or quasi-delict, in the courts for the place where the harmful event occurred or may occur;

4. as regards a civil claim for damages or restitution which is based on an act giving rise to criminal proceedings, in the court seised of those proceedings, to the extent that that court has jurisdiction under its own law to entertain civil proceedings;

5. as regards a dispute arising out of the operations of a branch, agency or other establishment, in the courts for the place in which the branch, agency or other establishment is situated;

6. as settlor, trustee or beneficiary of a trust created by the operation of a statute, or by a written instrument, or created orally and evidenced in writing, in the courts of the Member State in which the trust is domiciled;

7. as regards a dispute concerning the payment of remuneration claimed in respect of the salvage of a cargo or freight, in the court under the authority of which the cargo or freight in question:

(a) has been arrested to secure such payment, or

(b) could have been so arrested, but bail or other security has been given;

provided that this provision shall apply only if it is claimed that the defendant has an interest in the cargo or freight or had such an interest at the time of salvage.

Article 6

A person domiciled in a Member State may also be sued:

1. where he is one of a number of defendants, in the courts for the place where any one of them is domiciled, provided the claims are so closely connected that it is expedient to hear and determine them together to avoid the risk of irreconcilable judgments resulting from separate proceedings;

2. as a third party in an action on a warranty or guarantee or in any other third party proceedings, in the court seised of the original proceedings, unless these were instituted solely with the object of removing him from the jurisdiction of the court which would be competent in his case;

3. on a counter-claim arising from the same contract or facts on which the original claim was based, in the court in which the original claim is pending;

4. in matters relating to a contract, if the action may be combined with an action against the same defendant in matters relating to rights in rem in immovable property, in the court of the Member State in which the property is situated.

Article 7

Where by virtue of this Regulation a court of a Member State has jurisdiction in actions relating to liability from the use or operation of a ship, that court, or any other court substituted for this purpose by the internal law of that Member State, shall also have jurisdiction over claims for limitation of such liability.

Section 3

Jurisdiction in matters relating to insurance

Article 8

In matters relating to insurance, jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to Article 4 and point 5 of Article 5.

Article 9

1. An insurer domiciled in a Member State may be sued:

(a) in the courts of the Member State where he is domiciled, or

(b) in another Member State, in the case of actions brought by the policyholder, the insured or a beneficiary, in the courts for the place where the plaintiff is domiciled,

(c) if he is a co-insurer, in the courts of a Member State in which proceedings are brought against the leading insurer.

2. An insurer who is not domiciled in a Member State but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the Member States shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that Member State.

Article 10

In respect of liability insurance or insurance of immovable property, the insurer may in addition be sued in the courts for the place where the harmful event occurred. The same applies if movable and immovable property are covered by the same insurance policy and both are adversely affected by the same contingency.

Article 11

1. In respect of liability insurance, the insurer may also, if the law of the court permits it, be joined in proceedings which the injured party has brought against the insured.

2. Articles 8, 9 and 10 shall apply to actions brought by the injured party directly against the insurer, where such direct actions are permitted.

3. If the law governing such direct actions provides that the policyholder or the insured may be joined as a party to the action, the same court shall have jurisdiction over them.

Article 12

1. Without prejudice to Article 11(3), an insurer may bring proceedings only in the courts of the Member State in which the defendant is domiciled, irrespective of whether he is the policyholder, the insured or a beneficiary.

2. The provisions of this Section shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 13

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen, or

2. which allows the policyholder, the insured or a beneficiary to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section, or

3. which is concluded between a policyholder and an insurer, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same Member State, and which has the effect of conferring jurisdiction on the courts of that State even if the harmful event were to occur abroad, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of that State, or

4. which is concluded with a policyholder who is not domiciled in a Member State, except in so far as the insurance is compulsory or relates to immovable property in a Member State, or

5. which relates to a contract of insurance in so far as it covers one or more of the risks set out in Article 14.

Article 14

The following are the risks referred to in Article 13(5):

1. any loss of or damage to:

(a) seagoing ships, installations situated offshore or on the high seas, or aircraft, arising from perils which relate to their use for commercial purposes;

(b) goods in transit other than passengers' baggage where the transit consists of or includes carriage by such ships or aircraft;

2. any liability, other than for bodily injury to passengers or loss of or damage to their baggage:

(a) arising out of the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in point 1(a) in so far as, in respect of the latter, the law of the Member State in which such aircraft are registered does not prohibit agreements on jurisdiction regarding insurance of such risks;

(b) for loss or damage caused by goods in transit as described in point 1(b);

3. any financial loss connected with the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in point 1(a), in particular loss of freight or charter-hire;

4. any risk or interest connected with any of those referred to in points 1 to 3;

5. notwithstanding points 1 to 4, all "large risks" as defined in Council Directive 73/239/EEC(7), as amended by Council Directives 88/357/EEC(8) and 90/618/EEC(9), as they may be amended.

Section 4

Jurisdiction over consumer contracts

Article 15

1. In matters relating to a contract concluded by a person, the consumer, for a purpose which can be regarded as being outside his trade or profession, jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to Article 4 and point 5 of Article 5, if:

(a) it is a contract for the sale of goods on instalment credit terms; or

(b) it is a contract for a loan repayable by instalments, or for any other form of credit, made to finance the sale of goods; or

(c) in all other cases, the contract has been concluded with a person who pursues commercial or professional activities in the Member State of the consumer's domicile or, by any means, directs such activities to that Member State or to several States including that Member State, and the contract falls within the scope of such activities.

2. Where a consumer enters into a contract with a party who is not domiciled in the Member State but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the Member States, that party shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that State.

3. This Section shall not apply to a contract of transport other than a contract which, for an inclusive price, provides for a combination of travel and accommodation.

Article 16

1. A consumer may bring proceedings against the other party to a contract either in the courts of the Member State in which that party is domiciled or in the courts for the place where the consumer is domiciled.

2. Proceedings may be brought against a consumer by the other party to the contract only in the courts of the Member State in which the consumer is domiciled.

3. This Article shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 17

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the consumer to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section; or

3. which is entered into by the consumer and the other party to the contract, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same Member State, and which confers jurisdiction on the courts of that Member State, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of that Member State.

Section 5

Jurisdiction over individual contracts of employment

Article 18

1. In matters relating to individual contracts of employment, jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to Article 4 and point 5 of Article 5.

2. Where an employee enters into an individual contract of employment with an employer who is not domiciled in a Member State but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the Member States, the employer shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that Member State.

Article 19

An employer domiciled in a Member State may be sued:

1. in the courts of the Member State where he is domiciled; or

2. in another Member State:

(a) in the courts for the place where the employee habitually carries out his work or in the courts for the last place where he did so, or

(b) if the employee does not or did not habitually carry out his work in any one country, in the courts for the place where the business which engaged the employee is or was situated.

Article 20

1. An employer may bring proceedings only in the courts of the Member State in which the employee is domiciled.

2. The provisions of this Section shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 21

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement on jurisdiction:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the employee to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section.

Section 6

Exclusive jurisdiction

Article 22

The following courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile:

1. in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the Member State in which the property is situated.

However, in proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months, the courts of the Member State in which the defendant is domiciled shall also have jurisdiction, provided that the tenant is a natural person and that the landlord and the tenant are domiciled in the same Member State;

2. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of the constitution, the nullity or the dissolution of companies or other legal persons or associations of natural or legal persons, or of the validity of the decisions of their organs, the courts of the Member State in which the company, legal person or association has its seat. In order to determine that seat, the court shall apply its rules of private international law;

3. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of entries in public registers, the courts of the Member State in which the register is kept;

4. in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of patents, trade marks, designs, or other similar rights required to be deposited or registered, the courts of the Member State in which the deposit or registration has been applied for, has taken place or is under the terms of a Community instrument or an international convention deemed to have taken place.

Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of the European Patent Office under the Convention on the Grant of European Patents, signed at Munich on 5 October 1973, the courts of each Member State shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile, in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of any European patent granted for that State;

5. in proceedings concerned with the enforcement of judgments, the courts of the Member State in which the judgment has been or is to be enforced.

Section 7

Prorogation of jurisdiction

Article 23

1. If the parties, one or more of whom is domiciled in a Member State, have agreed that a court or the courts of a Member State are to have jurisdiction to settle any disputes which have arisen or which may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, that court or those courts shall have jurisdiction. Such jurisdiction shall be exclusive unless the parties have agreed otherwise. Such an agreement conferring jurisdiction shall be either:

(a) in writing or evidenced in writing; or

(b) in a form which accords with practices which the parties have established between themselves; or

(c) in international trade or commerce, in a form which accords with a usage of which the parties are or ought to have been aware and which in such trade or commerce is widely known to, and regularly observed by, parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned.

2. Any communication by electronic means which provides a durable record of the agreement shall be equivalent to "writing".

3. Where such an agreement is concluded by parties, none of whom is domiciled in a Member State, the courts of other Member States shall have no jurisdiction over their disputes unless the court or courts chosen have declined jurisdiction.

4. The court or courts of a Member State on which a trust instrument has conferred jurisdiction shall have exclusive jurisdiction in any proceedings brought against a settlor, trustee or beneficiary, if relations between these persons or their rights or obligations under the trust are involved.

5. Agreements or provisions of a trust instrument conferring jurisdiction shall have no legal force if they are contrary to Articles 13, 17 or 21, or if the courts whose jurisdiction they purport to exclude have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22.

Article 24

Apart from jurisdiction derived from other provisions of this Regulation, a court of a Member State before which a defendant enters an appearance shall have jurisdiction. This rule shall not apply where appearance was entered to contest the jurisdiction, or where another court has exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22.

Section 8

Examination as to jurisdiction and admissibility

Article 25

Where a court of a Member State is seised of a claim which is principally concerned with a matter over which the courts of another Member State have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22, it shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

Article 26

1. Where a defendant domiciled in one Member State is sued in a court of another Member State and does not enter an appearance, the court shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction unless its jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of this Regulation.

2. The court shall stay the proceedings so long as it is not shown that the defendant has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or that all necessary steps have been taken to this end.

3. Article 19 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 of 29 May 2000 on the service in the Member States of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters(10) shall apply instead of the provisions of paragraph 2 if the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document had to be transmitted from one Member State to another pursuant to this Regulation.

4. Where the provisions of Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 are not applicable, Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters shall apply if the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document had to be transmitted pursuant to that Convention.

Section 9

Lis pendens - related actions

Article 27

1. Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought in the courts of different Member States, any court other than the court first seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

2. Where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Article 28

1. Where related actions are pending in the courts of different Member States, any court other than the court first seised may stay its proceedings.

2. Where these actions are pending at first instance, any court other than the court first seised may also, on the application of one of the parties, decline jurisdiction if the court first seised has jurisdiction over the actions in question and its law permits the consolidation thereof.

3. For the purposes of this Article, actions are deemed to be related where they are so closely connected that it is expedient to hear and determine them together to avoid the risk of irreconcilable judgments resulting from separate proceedings.

Article 29

Where actions come within the exclusive jurisdiction of several courts, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Article 30

For the purposes of this Section, a court shall be deemed to be seised:

1. at the time when the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document is lodged with the court, provided that the plaintiff has not subsequently failed to take the steps he was required to take to have service effected on the defendant, or

2. if the document has to be served before being lodged with the court, at the time when it is received by the authority responsible for service, provided that the plaintiff has not subsequently failed to take the steps he was required to take to have the document lodged with the court.

Section 10

Provisional, including protective, measures

Article 31

Application may be made to the courts of a Member State for such provisional, including protective, measures as may be available under the law of that State, even if, under this Regulation, the courts of another Member State have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

CHAPTER III

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 32

For the purposes of this Regulation, "judgment" means any judgment given by a court or tribunal of a Member State, whatever the judgment may be called, including a decree, order, decision or writ of execution, as well as the determination of costs or expenses by an officer of the court.

Section 1

Recognition

Article 33

1. A judgment given in a Member State shall be recognised in the other Member States without any special procedure being required.

2. Any interested party who raises the recognition of a judgment as the principal issue in a dispute may, in accordance with the procedures provided for in Sections 2 and 3 of this Chapter, apply for a decision that the judgment be recognised.

3. If the outcome of proceedings in a court of a Member State depends on the determination of an incidental question of recognition that court shall have jurisdiction over that question.

Article 34

A judgment shall not be recognised:

1. if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

2. where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so;

3. if it is irreconcilable with a judgment given in a dispute between the same parties in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

4. if it is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another Member State or in a third State involving the same cause of action and between the same parties, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State addressed.

Article 35

1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised if it conflicts with Sections 3, 4 or 6 of Chapter II, or in a case provided for in Article 72.

2. In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in the foregoing paragraph, the court or authority applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the Member State of origin based its jurisdiction.

3. Subject to the paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in point 1 of Article 34 may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction.

Article 36

Under no circumstances may a foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 37

1. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in another Member State may stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal against the judgment has been lodged.

2. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom may stay the proceedings if enforcement is suspended in the State of origin, by reason of an appeal.

Section 2

Enforcement

Article 38

1. A judgment given in a Member State and enforceable in that State shall be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.

2. However, in the United Kingdom, such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland, or in Northern Ireland when, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom.

Article 39

1. The application shall be submitted to the court or competent authority indicated in the list in Annex II.

2. The local jurisdiction shall be determined by reference to the place of domicile of the party against whom enforcement is sought, or to the place of enforcement.

Article 40

3. The documents referred to in Article 53 shall be attached to the application.

Article 41

The judgment shall be declared enforceable immediately on completion of the formalities in Article

53 without any review under Articles 34 and 35. The party against whom enforcement is sought shall not at this stage of the proceedings be entitled to make any submissions on the application.

2. Where the judgment was given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, any form of appeal available in the Member State of origin shall be treated as an ordinary appeal for the purposes of paragraph 1.

3. The court may also make enforcement conditional on the provision of such security as it shall determine.

Article 47

1. When a judgment must be recognised in accordance with this Regulation, nothing shall prevent the applicant from availing himself of provisional, including protective, measures in accordance with the law of the Member State requested without a declaration of enforceability under Article 41 being required.

2. The declaration of enforceability shall carry with it the power to proceed to any protective measures.

3. During the time specified for an appeal pursuant to Article 43(5) against the declaration of enforceability and until any such appeal has been determined, no measures of enforcement may be taken other than protective measures against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought.

2. An applicant may request a declaration of enforceability limited to parts of a judgment.

Article 49

A foreign judgment which orders a periodic payment by way of a penalty shall be enforceable in the Member State in which enforcement is sought only if the amount of the payment has been finally determined by the courts of the Member State of origin.

Article 50

An applicant who, in the Member State of origin has benefited from complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses, shall be entitled, in the procedure provided for in this Section, to benefit from the most favourable legal aid or the most extensive exemption from costs or expenses provided for by the law of the Member State addressed.

Article 51

However, the court seised of the matter may order appearance in person; in the case of failure to appear, a judgment given in the civil action without the person concerned having had the opportunity to arrange for his defence need not be recognised or enforced in the other Member States.

Article 63

1. A person domiciled in the territory of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and sued in the court of another Member State pursuant to Article 5(1) may refuse to submit to the jurisdiction of that court if the final place of delivery of the goods or provision of the services is in Luxembourg.

2. Where, under paragraph 1, the final place of delivery of the goods or provision of the services is in Luxembourg, any agreement conferring jurisdiction must, in order to be valid, be accepted in writing or evidenced in writing within the meaning of Article 23(1)(a).

Article 66

1. This Regulation shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after the entry into force thereof.

2. However, if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted before the entry into force of this Regulation, judgments given after that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with Chapter III,

(a) if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted after the entry into force of the Brussels or the Lugano Convention both in the Member State or origin and in the Member State addressed;

(b) in all other cases, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in Chapter II or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

In any event, the provisions of this Regulation which concern the procedure for recognition and enforcement of judgments may be applied.

Article 72

This Regulation shall not affect agreements by which Member States undertook, prior to the entry into force of this Regulation pursuant to Article 59 of the Brussels Convention, not to recognise judgments given, in particular in other Contracting States to that Convention, against defendants domiciled or habitually resident in a third country where, in cases provided for in Article 4 of that Convention, the judgment could only be founded on a ground of jurisdiction specified in the second paragraph of Article 3 of that Convention.

Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY, hereinafter referred to as "the Community", of the one part, and

THE KINGDOM OF DENMARK, hereinafter referred to as "Denmark", of the other part,

HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

Article 1

Aim

1. The aim of this Agreement is to apply the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures to the relations between the Community and Denmark, in accordance with Article 2(1) of this Agreement.

2. It is the objective of the Contracting Parties to arrive at a uniform application and interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures in all Member States.

3. The provisions of Articles 3(1), 4(1) and 5(1) of this Agreement result from the Protocol on the position of Denmark.

Article 2

Jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

1. The provisions of the Brussels I Regulation, which is annexed to this Agreement and forms part thereof, together with its implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation and, in respect of implementing measures adopted after the entry into force of this Agreement, implemented by Denmark as referred to in Article 4 of this Agreement, and the measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(1) of the Regulation, shall under international law apply to the relations between the Community and Denmark.

2. However, for the purposes of this Agreement, the application of the provisions of that Regulation shall be modified as follows:

(a) Article 1(3) shall not apply.

(b) Article 50 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):

"2. However, an applicant who requests the enforcement of a decision given by an administrative authority in Denmark in respect of a maintenance order may, in the Member State addressed, claim the benefits referred to in the first paragraph if he presents a statement from the Danish Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the financial requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses."

(c) Article 62 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):

"2. In matters relating to maintenance, the expression "court" includes the Danish administrative authorities."

(d) Article 64 shall apply to seagoing ships registered in Denmark as well as in Greece and Portugal.

(e) The date of entry into force of this Agreement shall apply instead of the date of entry into force of the Regulation as referred to in Articles 70(2), 72 and 76 thereof.

(f) The transitional provisions of this Agreement shall apply instead of Article 66 of the Regulation.

(g) In Annex I the following shall be added: "in Denmark: Article 246(2) and (3) of the Administration of Justice Act (lov om rettens pleje)".

(h) In Annex II the following shall be added: "in Denmark, the "byret"".

(i) In Annex III the following shall be added: "in Denmark, the "landsret"".

(j) In Annex IV the following shall be added: "in Denmark, an appeal to the "Højesteret" with leave from the "Procesbevillingsnævnet"".

Article 3

Amendments to the Brussels I Regulation

1. Denmark shall not take part in the adoption of amendments to the Brussels I Regulation and no such amendments shall be binding upon or applicable in Denmark.

2. Whenever amendments to the Regulation are adopted Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of such amendments. Notification shall be given at the time of the adoption of the amendments or within 30 days thereafter.

3. If Denmark decides that it will implement the content of the amendments the notification shall indicate whether implementation can take place administratively or requires parliamentary approval.

4. If the notification indicates that implementation can take place administratively the notification shall, moreover, state that all necessary administrative measures enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

5. If the notification indicates that implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark, the following rules shall apply:

(a) Legislative measures in Denmark shall enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or within 6 months after the notification, whichever date is the latest;

(b) Denmark shall notify the Commission of the date upon which the implementing legislative measures enter into force.

6. A Danish notification that the content of the amendments has been implemented in Denmark, in accordance with paragraphs 4 and 5, creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The amendments to the Regulation shall then constitute amendments to this Agreement and shall be considered annexed hereto.

7. In cases where:

(a) Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the content of the amendments; or

(b) Denmark does not make a notification within the 30-day time-limit set out in paragraph 2; or

(c) Legislative measures in Denmark do not enter into force within the time-limits set out in paragraph 5, this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days or, in the situation referred to under (c), legislative measures in Denmark enter into force within the same period. Termination shall take effect three months after the expiry of the 90-day period.

8. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 7 are not affected hereby.

Article 4

Implementing measures

1. Denmark shall not take part in the adoption of opinions by the Committee referred to in Article 75 of the Brussels I Regulation. Implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of that Regulation shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Whenever implementing measures are adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation, the implementing measures shall be communicated to Denmark. Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of the implementing measures. Notification shall be given upon receipt of the implementing measures or within 30 days thereafter.

3. The notification shall state that all necessary administrative measures in Denmark enter into force on the date of entry into force of the implementing measures or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

4. A Danish notification that the content of the implementing measures has been implemented in Denmark creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The implementing measures will then form part of this Agreement.

5. In cases where:

(a) Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the content of the implementing measures; or

(b) Denmark does not make a notification within the 30-day time-limit set out in paragraph 2, this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days. Termination shall take effect three months after the expiry of the 90-day period.

6. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 5 are not affected hereby.

7. If in exceptional cases the implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark, the Danish notification under paragraph 2 shall indicate this and the provisions of Article 3(5) to (8) shall apply.

8. Denmark shall notify the Commission of texts amending the items set out in Article 2(2)(g) to (j) of this Agreement. The Commission shall adapt Article 2(2)(g) to (j) accordingly.

Article 5

International agreements which affect the Brussels I Regulation

1. International agreements entered into by the Community based on the rules of the Brussels I Regulation shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Denmark will abstain from entering into international agreements which may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement unless it is done in agreement with the Community and satisfactory arrangements have been made with regard to the relationship between this Agreement and the international agreement in question.

3. When negotiating international agreements that may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement, Denmark will coordinate its position with the Community and will abstain from any actions that would jeopardise the objectives of a Community position within its sphere of competence in such negotiations.

Article 6

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to the interpretation of the Agreement

1. Where a question on the validity or interpretation of this Agreement is raised in a case pending before a Danish court or tribunal, that court or tribunal shall request the Court of Justice to give a ruling thereon whenever under the same circumstances a court or tribunal of another Member State of the European Union would be required to do so in respect of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures referred to in Article 2(1) of this Agreement.

2. Under Danish law, the courts in Denmark shall, when interpreting this Agreement, take due account of the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention, the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures.

3. Denmark may, like the Council, the Commission and any Member State, request the Court of Justice to give a ruling on a question of interpretation of this Agreement. The ruling given by the Court of Justice in response to such a request shall not apply to judgments of courts or tribunals of the Member States which have become res judicata.

4. Denmark shall be entitled to submit observations to the Court of Justice in cases where a question has been referred to it by a court or tribunal of a Member State for a preliminary ruling concerning the interpretation of any provision referred to in Article 2(1).

5. The Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

6. If the provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community regarding rulings by the Court of Justice are amended with consequences for rulings in respect of the Brussels I Regulation, Denmark may notify the Commission of its decision not to apply the amendments in respect of this Agreement. Notification shall be given at the time of the entry into force of the amendments or within 60 days thereafter.

In such a case this Agreement shall be considered terminated. Termination shall take effect three months after the notification.

7. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 6 are not affected hereby.

Article 7

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to compliance with the Agreement

1. The Commission may bring before the Court of Justice cases against Denmark concerning non-compliance with any obligation under this Agreement.

2. Denmark may bring a complaint before the Commission as to the non-compliance by a Member State of its obligations under this Agreement.

3. The relevant provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community governing proceedings before the Court of Justice as well as the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

Article 8

Territorial application

1. This Agreement shall apply to the territories referred to in Article 299 of the Treaty establishing the European Community.

2. If the Community decides to extend the application of the Brussels I Regulation to territories currently governed by the Brussels Convention, the Community and Denmark shall cooperate in order to ensure that such an application also extends to Denmark.

Article 9

Transitional provisions

1. This Agreement shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after the entry into force thereof.

2. However, if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted before the entry into force of this Agreement, judgments given after that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with this Agreement,

(a) if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted after the entry into force of the Brussels or the Lugano Convention both in the Member State of origin and in the Member State addressed;

(b) in all other cases, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in this Agreement or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

Article 10

Relationship to the Brussels I Regulation

1. This Agreement shall not prejudice the application by the Member States of the Community other than Denmark of the Brussels I Regulation.

2. However, this Agreement shall in any event be applied:

(a) in matters of jurisdiction, where the defendant is domiciled in Denmark, or where Article 22 or 23 of the Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of Article 2 of this Agreement, confer jurisdiction on the courts of Denmark;

(b) in relation to a lis pendens or to related actions as provided for in Articles 27 and 28 of the Brussels I Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of Article 2 of this Agreement, when proceedings are instituted in a Member State other than Denmark and in Denmark;

(c) in matters of recognition and enforcement, where Denmark is either the State of origin or the State addressed.

Article 11

Termination of the agreement

1. This Agreement shall terminate if Denmark informs the other Member States that it no longer wishes to avail itself of the provisions of Part I of the Protocol on the position of Denmark, in accordance with Article 7 of that Protocol.

2. This Agreement may be terminated by either Contracting Party giving notice to the other Contracting Party. Termination shall be effective six months after the date of such notice.

3. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 1 or 2 are not affected hereby.

Article 12

Entry into force

1. The Agreement shall be adopted by the Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective procedures.

2. The Agreement shall enter into force on the first day of the sixth month following the notification by the Contracting Parties of the completion of their respective procedures required for this purpose.

Article 13

Proposal for a

COUNCIL DECISION

concerning the conclusion of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

(presented by the Commission)

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

1. Political and legal background

Pursuant to Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on the European Union and the Treaty establishing the European Community, Denmark does not participate in Title IV of the Treaty. As a consequence, Community instruments adopted in the field of, among others, judicial cooperation in civil matters are not binding upon or applicable in Denmark.

One of these Community instruments is Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. This Regulation has replaced the Brussels Convention of 1968 on the same matter, to which Denmark is a party. The Regulation contains revised and modernized rules of the Brussels Convention and applies to all Member States except Denmark; the United Kingdom and Ireland having exercised their right to opt in.

The non-application of Regulation 44/2001 in Denmark results in a most unsatisfactory legal situation: Not only does Denmark continue to apply the old rules of the Brussels Convention, but also all other Member States have to apply these rules, i.e. a set of rules different from the one they use in their mutual relations, when it comes to the recognition and enforcement of Danish decisions. This constitutes a step backwards given that prior to the entry into force of Regulation 44/2001 the rules of the Brussels Convention applied uniformly in all Member States. The current situation therefore jeopardizes the uniformity and legal certainty of the Community rules.

Denmark expressed at several occasions its interest to participate in the new regime. After in depth discussions, the Commission accepted to negotiate parallel agreements with Denmark, provided that the following conditions were fulfilled: Such a solution would have to be of an exceptional nature and apply for a transitional period only, the participation of Denmark in the Community regime would have to be fully in the interests of the Community and its citizens and the requirements imposed on Denmark would have to be identical to those imposed on all Member States, so as to ensure that rules with the same content are applied in Denmark and in the other Member States.

In view of the situation outlined above, the Commission considered it to be in the Community interest to extend to Denmark the provisions of Regulations 44/2001 and Council Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 on the service in the Member States of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters, which is closely linked to Regulation 44/2001. The agreement extending the provisions of Regulation 1348/2000 to Denmark is the subject matter of a separate Council decision.

The Commission presented on 28th June 2002 a recommendation for a Council Decision authorizing the Commission to open negotiations for the conclusion of two agreements between the European Community and Denmark, extending both Regulation 44/2001 and Regulation 1348/2000 to Denmark.

The Council decided on 8 May 2003 to exceptionally authorize the Commission to negotiate an agreement with Denmark with the view to make the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 as well as the provisions of Regulation 1348/2000 applicable to Denmark under international law.

2. Results of the Negotiations

The Commission negotiated the parallel agreement extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters in accordance with the Council's negotiating directives, carefully ensuring that rights and obligations of Denmark under this agreement correspond to rights and obligations of the other Member States.

As a result, the parallel agreement contains, in particular, the following provisions:

- appropriate rules on the role of the Court of Justice to ensure the uniform interpretation of the instrument applied by the parallel agreement between Denmark and the other Member States;

- a mechanism to enable Denmark to accept future amendments by the Council to the basic instrument and the future implementing measures to be adopted under Article 202 of the EC Treaty;

- a clause providing that the agreement is considered terminated if Denmark refuses to accept such future amendments and implementing measures;

- rules specifying Denmark's obligations in negotiations with third countries for agreements concerning matters covered by the parallel agreement;

- the possibility of denouncing the parallel agreement by giving notice to the other Contracting Party.

3. Conclusions

In view of the positive outcome of the negotiations, the Commission recommends that the Council adopt the following two decisions:

Firstly, a decision concerning the signing of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

Secondly, a decision concerning the conclusion by the European Community of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matter.

ANNEX

AGREEMENT

between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark

on

jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY,

hereinafter referred to as the Community, of the one part, and

THE KINGDOM OF DENMARK,

hereinafter referred to as Denmark, of the other part,

1. DESIRING to unify the rules of conflict of jurisdiction in civil and commercial matters and to simplify the formalities with a view to rapid and simple recognition and enforcement of judgments within the Community,

2. WHEREAS the Member States on 27 September 1968, acting under Article 293, fourth indent, of the Treaty establishing the European Community, concluded the Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, as amended by Conventions on the Accession of the New Member States to that Convention (the "Brussels Convention").[6] On 16 September 1988 Member States and EFTA States concluded the Lugano Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters[7], which is a parallel Convention to the 1968 Brussels Convention.

3. WHEREAS the main content of the Brussels Convention has been taken over in the Council Regulation No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters[8] (the Brussels I Regulation),

4. REFERRING to the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community (the Protocol on the position of Denmark) pursuant to which the Brussels I Regulation shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark,

5. STRESSING that a solution to the unsatisfactory legal situation arising from differences in applicable rules on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments within the Community must be found,

6. DESIRING that the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation, future amendments hereto and the implementing measures relating to it should under international law apply to the relations between the Community and Denmark being a Member State with a special position with respect to Title IV of the Treaty establishing the European Community,

7. STRESSING that continuity between the Brussels Convention and this Agreement should be ensured, and that transitional provisions as in the Brussels I Regulation should be applied to this agreement as well. The same need for continuity applies as regards the interpretation of the Brussels Convention by the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the 1971 Protocol[9] which should remain applicable also to cases already pending when this Agreement enters into force,

8. STRESSING that the Brussels Convention also continues to apply to the territories of the Member States which fall within the territorial scope of that Convention and which are excluded from this Agreement,

9. STRESSING the importance of proper co-ordination between the Community and Denmark with regard to the negotiation and conclusion of international agreements that may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation,

10. STRESSING that Denmark should seek to join international agreements entered into by the Community where Danish participation in such agreements is relevant for the coherent application of the Brussels I Regulation and this Agreement,

11. STATING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities should have jurisdiction in order to secure the uniform application and interpretation of this Agreement including the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures forming part of this Agreement,

12. REFERRING to the jurisdiction conferred to the Court of Justice of the European Communities pursuant to Article 68(1) of the Treaty establishing the European Community to give rulings on preliminary questions relating to the validity and interpretation of acts of the institutions of the Community based on Title IV of the Treaty, including the validity and interpretation of this Agreement, and to the circumstance that this provision shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark, as results from the Protocol on the position of Denmark,

13. CONSIDERING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities should have jurisdiction under the same conditions to give preliminary rulings on questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this Agreement which are raised by a Danish court or tribunal , and that Danish courts and tribunals should therefore request preliminary rulings under the same conditions as courts and tribunals of other Member States in respect of the interpretation of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures,

14. REFERRING to the provision that, pursuant to Article 68(3) of the Treaty establishing the European Community, the Council of the European Union, the European Commission and the Member States may request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to give a ruling on the interpretation of acts of the institutions of the Community based on Title IV of the Treaty, including the interpretation of this Agreement, and the circumstance that this provision shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark, as results from the Protocol on the position of Denmark,

15. CONSIDERING that Denmark should, under the same conditions as other Member States in respect of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures, be accorded the possibility to request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to give rulings on questions relating to the interpretation of this Agreement,

16. STRESSING that under Danish law the courts in Denmark should - when interpreting this Agreement including the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures forming part of this Agreement - take due account of the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and of the courts of the Member States of the European Communities in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention, the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures,

17. CONSIDERING that it should be possible to request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to rule on questions relating to compliance with obligations under this Agreement pursuant to the provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community governing proceedings before the Court,

18. WHEREAS, by virtue of Article 300(7) of the Treaty establishing the European Community, this Agreement binds Member States; it is therefore appropriate that Denmark, in the case of non-compliance by a Member State, should be able to seize the Commission as guardian of the Treaty,

HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

ARTICLE 1

Aim

1. The aim of this Agreement is to apply the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (the Brussels I Regulation) and its implementing measures to the relations between the Community and Denmark, in accordance with Article 2(1).

2. It is the objective of the Contracting Parties to arrive at a uniform application and interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures in all Member States.

3. The provisions of Articles 3(1), 4(1) and 5(1) of this Agreement result from the Protocol on the position of Denmark.

ARTICLE 2

1. The provisions of the Brussels I Regulation, which is annexed to this Agreement and forms part thereof, together with its implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation and - in respect of implementing measures adopted after the entry into force of this Agreement - implemented by Denmark as referred to in Article 4 of this Agreement, and the measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(1) of the Regulation, shall under international law apply to the relations between the Community and Denmark.

2. However, for the purposes of this Agreement, the application of the provisions of that Regulation shall be modified as follows:

8. Article 1(3) shall not apply.

9. Article 50 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):2. However, an applicant who requests the enforcement of a decision given by an administrative authority in Denmark in respect of a maintenance order may, in the Member State addressed, claim the benefits referred to in the first paragraph if he presents a statement from the Danish Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the financial requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses.

10. Article 62 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):2. In matters relating to maintenance, the expression 'court' includes the Danish administrative authorities.

11. Article 64 shall apply to seagoing ships registered in Denmark as well as in Greece and Portugal.

12. The date of entry into force of this Agreement shall apply instead of the date of entry into force of the Regulation as referred to in Articles 70(2), 72 and 76 thereof.

13. The transitional provisions of this Agreement shall apply instead of Art. 66 of the Regulation.

14. In Annex I the following shall be added: in Denmark: Article 246(2) and (3) of the Administration of Justice Act (lov om rettens pleje).

15. In Annex II the following shall be added: in Denmark, the byret '.

16. In Annex III the following shall be added: in Denmark, the landsret '.

ARTICLE 3

Amendments to the Brussels I Regulation

1. Denmark shall not take part in the adoption of amendments to the Brussels I Regulation and no such amendments shall be binding upon or applicable in Denmark.

2. Whenever amendments to the Regulation are adopted Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of such amendments. Notification shall be given at the time of the adoption of the amendments or within 30 days hereafter.

3. If Denmark decides that it will implement the content of the amendments the notification shall indicate whether implementation can take place administratively or requires parliamentary approval.

4. If the notification indicates that implementation can take place administratively the notification shall, moreover, state that all necessary administrative measures enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

5. If the notification indicates that implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark the following rules shall apply:

18. Legislative measures in Denmark shall enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or within 6 months after the notification, whichever date is the latest;

19. Denmark shall notify the Commission of the date upon which the implementing legislative measures enter into force.

6. A Danish notification that the content of the amendments has been implemented in Denmark, cf. paragraph 4 and 5, creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The amendments to the Regulation shall then constitute amendments to this Agreement and shall be considered annexed hereto.

7. In case:

20. Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the content of the amendments; or

21. Denmark does not make a notification within the 30 days time limit set out in paragraph 2; or

22. Legislative measures in Denmark do not enter into force within the time limits set out in paragraph 5;

this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days or, in the situation referred to under c, legislative measures in Denmark enter into force within the same period. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the expiry of the 90 days period.

8. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 7 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 4

Implementing measures

1. Denmark shall not take part in the adoption of opinions by the Committee referred to in Article 75 of the Brussels I Regulation. Implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Whenever implementing measures are adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation, the implementing measures shall be communicated to Denmark. Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of the implementing measures. Notification shall be given upon receipt of the implementing measures or within 30 days hereafter.

3. The notification shall state that all necessary administrative measures in Denmark enter into force on the date of entry into force of the implementing measures or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

4. A Danish notification that the content of the implementing measures has been implemented in Denmark creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The implementing measures will then form part of this Agreement.

5. In case:

23. Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the implementing measures; or

24. Denmark does not make a notification within the 30 days time limit set out in paragraph 2;

this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the expiry of the 90 days period.

6. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 5 are not affected hereby.

7. If in exceptional cases the implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark, the Danish notification under paragraph 2 shall indicate this and the provisions of Article 3(5)-(8) shall apply.

8. Denmark shall notify the Commission of texts amending the items set out in Article 2(2)(f)-(i) of this Agreement. The Commission shall adapt Article 2(2)(f)-(i) accordingly.

ARTICLE 5

International agreements which affect the Agreement

1. International agreements entered into by the Community based on the rules of the Brussels I Regulation shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Denmark will abstain from entering into international agreements which may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement unless it is done in agreement with the Community and satisfactory arrangements have been made with regard to the relationship between this Agreement and the international agreement in question.

3. When negotiating international agreements that may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement , Denmark will co-ordinate its position with the Community and will abstain from any actions that would jeopardise the objectives of a Community position within its sphere of competence in such negotiations.

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to the interpretation of the Agreement

1. Where a question on the validity or interpretation of this Agreement is raised in a case pending before a Danish court or tribunal, that court or tribunal shall request the Court of Justice to give a ruling thereon whenever under the same circumstances a court or tribunal of another Member State of the European Union would be required to do so in respect of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures referred to in Article 2(1).

2. Under Danish law, the courts in Denmark shall, when interpreting this Agreement, take due account of the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention, the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures.

3. Denmark may, like the Council, the Commission and any Member State, request the Court of Justice to give a ruling on a question of interpretation of this Agreement. The ruling given by the Court of Justice in response to such a request shall not apply to judgments of courts or tribunals of the Member States which have become res judicata.

4. Denmark shall be entitled to submit observations to the Court of Justice in cases where a question has been referred to it by a court or tribunal of a Member State for a preliminary ruling concerning the interpretation of any provision referred to in Article 2(1).

5. The Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

6. If the provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community regarding rulings by the Court of Justice are amended with consequences for rulings in respect of the Brussels I Regulation, Denmark may notify the Commission of its decision not to apply the amendments in respect of this Agreement. Notification shall be given at the time of the entry into force of the amendments or within 60 days hereafter.

In such a case this Agreement shall be considered terminated. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the notification.

7. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 6 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 7

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to compliance with the Agreement

1. The Commission may bring before the Court of Justice cases against Denmark concerning non-compliance with any obligation under this Agreement.

2. Denmark may bring a complaint to the Commission as to the non-compliance by a Member State of its obligations by virtue of this Agreement.

3. The relevant provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community governing proceedings before the Court of Justice as well as the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

ARTICLE 8

Territorial application

1. This Agreement shall apply to the territories referred to in Article 299 of the Treaty establishing the European Community.

2. If the Community decides to extend the application of the Brussels I Regulation to territories currently governed by the Brussels Convention, the Community and Denmark shall cooperate in order to ensure that such an application also extends to Denmark.

ARTICLE 9

Transitional provisions

1. This Agreement shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after the entry into force thereof.

2. However, if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted before the entry into force of this Agreement, judgments given after that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with this Agreement,

25. if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted after the entry into force of the Brussels or the Lugano Convention both in the Member State of origin and in the Member State addressed;

26. in all other cases, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in this Agreement or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

ARTICLE 10

1. This Agreement shall not prejudice the application by the Member States of the Community other than Denmark of the Brussels I Regulation.

2. However, this Agreement shall in any event be applied:

27. in matters of jurisdiction, where the defendant is domiciled in Denmark, or where Article 22 or 23 of the Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of Article 2 of this Agreement, confer jurisdiction on the courts of Denmark;

28. in relation to a lis pendens or to related actions as provided for in Articles 27 and 28 of the Brussels I Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of article 2 of this Agreement, when proceedings are instituted in a Member State other than Denmark and in Denmark;

29. in matters of recognition and enforcement, where Denmark is either the State of origin or the State addressed.

ARTICLE 11

Termination of the agreement

1. This Agreement shall terminate if Denmark informs the other Member States that it no longer wishes to avail itself of the provisions of Part I of the Protocol on the position of Denmark, cf. Article 7 of that Protocol.

2. This Agreement may be terminated by either Contracting Party giving notice to the other Contracting Party. Termination shall be effective six months after the date of such notice.

3. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 1 or 2 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 12

Entry into force

1. The Agreement shall be adopted by the Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective procedures.

2. The Agreement shall enter into force on the first day of the sixth month following the notification by the Contracting Parties of the completion of their respective procedures required for this purpose.

Proposal for a

COUNCIL DECISION

concerning the conclusion of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

(presented by the Commission)

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

1. Political and legal background

Pursuant to Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on the European Union and the Treaty establishing the European Community, Denmark does not participate in Title IV of the Treaty. As a consequence, Community instruments adopted in the field of, among others, judicial cooperation in civil matters are not binding upon or applicable in Denmark.

One of these Community instruments is Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. This Regulation has replaced the Brussels Convention of 1968 on the same matter, to which Denmark is a party. The Regulation contains revised and modernized rules of the Brussels Convention and applies to all Member States except Denmark; the United Kingdom and Ireland having exercised their right to opt in.

The non-application of Regulation 44/2001 in Denmark results in a most unsatisfactory legal situation: Not only does Denmark continue to apply the old rules of the Brussels Convention, but also all other Member States have to apply these rules, i.e. a set of rules different from the one they use in their mutual relations, when it comes to the recognition and enforcement of Danish decisions. This constitutes a step backwards given that prior to the entry into force of Regulation 44/2001 the rules of the Brussels Convention applied uniformly in all Member States. The current situation therefore jeopardizes the uniformity and legal certainty of the Community rules.

Denmark expressed at several occasions its interest to participate in the new regime. After in depth discussions, the Commission accepted to negotiate parallel agreements with Denmark, provided that the following conditions were fulfilled: Such a solution would have to be of an exceptional nature and apply for a transitional period only, the participation of Denmark in the Community regime would have to be fully in the interests of the Community and its citizens and the requirements imposed on Denmark would have to be identical to those imposed on all Member States, so as to ensure that rules with the same content are applied in Denmark and in the other Member States.

In view of the situation outlined above, the Commission considered it to be in the Community interest to extend to Denmark the provisions of Regulations 44/2001 and Council Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 on the service in the Member States of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters, which is closely linked to Regulation 44/2001. The agreement extending the provisions of Regulation 1348/2000 to Denmark is the subject matter of a separate Council decision.

The Commission presented on 28th June 2002 a recommendation for a Council Decision authorizing the Commission to open negotiations for the conclusion of two agreements between the European Community and Denmark, extending both Regulation 44/2001 and Regulation 1348/2000 to Denmark.

The Council decided on 8 May 2003 to exceptionally authorize the Commission to negotiate an agreement with Denmark with the view to make the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 as well as the provisions of Regulation 1348/2000 applicable to Denmark under international law.

2. Results of the Negotiations

The Commission negotiated the parallel agreement extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters in accordance with the Council's negotiating directives, carefully ensuring that rights and obligations of Denmark under this agreement correspond to rights and obligations of the other Member States.

As a result, the parallel agreement contains, in particular, the following provisions:

- appropriate rules on the role of the Court of Justice to ensure the uniform interpretation of the instrument applied by the parallel agreement between Denmark and the other Member States;

- a mechanism to enable Denmark to accept future amendments by the Council to the basic instrument and the future implementing measures to be adopted under Article 202 of the EC Treaty;

- a clause providing that the agreement is considered terminated if Denmark refuses to accept such future amendments and implementing measures;

- rules specifying Denmark's obligations in negotiations with third countries for agreements concerning matters covered by the parallel agreement;

- the possibility of denouncing the parallel agreement by giving notice to the other Contracting Party.

3. Conclusions

In view of the positive outcome of the negotiations, the Commission recommends that the Council adopt the following two decisions:

Firstly, a decision concerning the signing of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

Secondly, a decision concerning the conclusion by the European Community of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark extending to Denmark the provisions of Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognitions and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matter.

ANNEX

AGREEMENT

between the European Community and

the Kingdom of Denmark

on

jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement

of judgments in civil and commercial matters

THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY,

hereinafter referred to as the Community, of the one part, and

THE KINGDOM OF DENMARK,

hereinafter referred to as Denmark, of the other part,

1. DESIRING to unify the rules of conflict of jurisdiction in civil and commercial matters and to simplify the formalities with a view to rapid and simple recognition and enforcement of judgments within the Community,

2. WHEREAS the Member States on 27 September 1968, acting under Article 293, fourth indent, of the Treaty establishing the European Community, concluded the Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, as amended by Conventions on the Accession of the New Member States to that Convention (the "Brussels Convention").[6] On 16 September 1988 Member States and EFTA States concluded the Lugano Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters[7], which is a parallel Convention to the 1968 Brussels Convention.

3. WHEREAS the main content of the Brussels Convention has been taken over in the Council Regulation No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters[8] (the Brussels I Regulation),

4. REFERRING to the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community (the Protocol on the position of Denmark) pursuant to which the Brussels I Regulation shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark,

5. STRESSING that a solution to the unsatisfactory legal situation arising from differences in applicable rules on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments within the Community must be found,

6. DESIRING that the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation, future amendments hereto and the implementing measures relating to it should under international law apply to the relations between the Community and Denmark being a Member State with a special position with respect to Title IV of the Treaty establishing the European Community,

7. STRESSING that continuity between the Brussels Convention and this Agreement should be ensured, and that transitional provisions as in the Brussels I Regulation should be applied to this agreement as well. The same need for continuity applies as regards the interpretation of the Brussels Convention by the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the 1971 Protocol[9] which should remain applicable also to cases already pending when this Agreement enters into force,

8. STRESSING that the Brussels Convention also continues to apply to the territories of the Member States which fall within the territorial scope of that Convention and which are excluded from this Agreement,

9. STRESSING the importance of proper co-ordination between the Community and Denmark with regard to the negotiation and conclusion of international agreements that may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation,

10. STRESSING that Denmark should seek to join international agreements entered into by the Community where Danish participation in such agreements is relevant for the coherent application of the Brussels I Regulation and this Agreement,

11. STATING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities should have jurisdiction in order to secure the uniform application and interpretation of this Agreement including the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures forming part of this Agreement,

12. REFERRING to the jurisdiction conferred to the Court of Justice of the European Communities pursuant to Article 68(1) of the Treaty establishing the European Community to give rulings on preliminary questions relating to the validity and interpretation of acts of the institutions of the Community based on Title IV of the Treaty, including the validity and interpretation of this Agreement, and to the circumstance that this provision shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark, as results from the Protocol on the position of Denmark,

13. CONSIDERING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities should have jurisdiction under the same conditions to give preliminary rulings on questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this Agreement which are raised by a Danish court or tribunal , and that Danish courts and tribunals should therefore request preliminary rulings under the same conditions as courts and tribunals of other Member States in respect of the interpretation of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures,

14. REFERRING to the provision that, pursuant to Article 68(3) of the Treaty establishing the European Community, the Council of the European Union, the European Commission and the Member States may request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to give a ruling on the interpretation of acts of the institutions of the Community based on Title IV of the Treaty, including the interpretation of this Agreement, and the circumstance that this provision shall not be binding upon or applicable in Denmark, as results from the Protocol on the position of Denmark,

15. CONSIDERING that Denmark should, under the same conditions as other Member States in respect of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures, be accorded the possibility to request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to give rulings on questions relating to the interpretation of this Agreement,

16. STRESSING that under Danish law the courts in Denmark should - when interpreting this Agreement including the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures forming part of this Agreement - take due account of the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and of the courts of the Member States of the European Communities in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention, the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures,

17. CONSIDERING that it should be possible to request the Court of Justice of the European Communities to rule on questions relating to compliance with obligations under this Agreement pursuant to the provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community governing proceedings before the Court,

18. WHEREAS, by virtue of Article 300(7) of the Treaty establishing the European Community, this Agreement binds Member States; it is therefore appropriate that Denmark, in the case of non-compliance by a Member State, should be able to seize the Commission as guardian of the Treaty,

HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

ARTICLE 1

Aim

1. The aim of this Agreement is to apply the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (the Brussels I Regulation) and its implementing measures to the relations between the Community and Denmark, in accordance with Article 2(1).

2. It is the objective of the Contracting Parties to arrive at a uniform application and interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures in all Member States.

3. The provisions of Articles 3(1), 4(1) and 5(1) of this Agreement result from the Protocol on the position of Denmark.

ARTICLE 2

Jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

1. The provisions of the Brussels I Regulation, which is annexed to this Agreement and forms part thereof, together with its implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation and - in respect of implementing measures adopted after the entry into force of this Agreement - implemented by Denmark as referred to in Article 4 of this Agreement, and the measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(1) of the Regulation, shall under international law apply to the relations between the Community and Denmark.

2. However, for the purposes of this Agreement, the application of the provisions of that Regulation shall be modified as follows:

8. Article 1(3) shall not apply.

9. Article 50 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):2. However, an applicant who requests the enforcement of a decision given by an administrative authority in Denmark in respect of a maintenance order may, in the Member State addressed, claim the benefits referred to in the first paragraph if he presents a statement from the Danish Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the financial requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses.

10. Article 62 shall be supplemented by the following paragraph (as paragraph 2):2. In matters relating to maintenance, the expression 'court' includes the Danish administrative authorities.

11. Article 64 shall apply to seagoing ships registered in Denmark as well as in Greece and Portugal.

12. The date of entry into force of this Agreement shall apply instead of the date of entry into force of the Regulation as referred to in Articles 70(2), 72 and 76 thereof.

13. The transitional provisions of this Agreement shall apply instead of Art. 66 of the Regulation.

14. In Annex I the following shall be added: in Denmark: Article 246(2) and (3) of the Administration of Justice Act (lov om rettens pleje).

15. In Annex II the following shall be added: in Denmark, the byret '.

16. In Annex III the following shall be added: in Denmark, the landsret '.

2. Whenever amendments to the Regulation are adopted Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of such amendments. Notification shall be given at the time of the adoption of the amendments or within 30 days hereafter.

3. If Denmark decides that it will implement the content of the amendments the notification shall indicate whether implementation can take place administratively or requires parliamentary approval.

4. If the notification indicates that implementation can take place administratively the notification shall, moreover, state that all necessary administrative measures enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

5. If the notification indicates that implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark the following rules shall apply:

18. Legislative measures in Denmark shall enter into force on the date of entry into force of the amendments to the Regulation or within 6 months after the notification, whichever date is the latest;

19. Denmark shall notify the Commission of the date upon which the implementing legislative measures enter into force.

6. A Danish notification that the content of the amendments has been implemented in Denmark, cf. paragraph 4 and 5, creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The amendments to the Regulation shall then constitute amendments to this Agreement and shall be considered annexed hereto.

7. In case:

20. Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the content of the amendments; or

21. Denmark does not make a notification within the 30 days time limit set out in paragraph 2; or

22. Legislative measures in Denmark do not enter into force within the time limits set out in paragraph 5;

this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days or, in the situation referred to under c, legislative measures in Denmark enter into force within the same period. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the expiry of the 90 days period.

8. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 7 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 4

Implementing measures

1. Denmark shall not take part in the adoption of opinions by the Committee referred to in Article 75 of the Brussels I Regulation. Implementing measures adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Whenever implementing measures are adopted pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Regulation, the implementing measures shall be communicated to Denmark. Denmark shall notify the Commission of its decision whether or not to implement the content of the implementing measures. Notification shall be given upon receipt of the implementing measures or within 30 days hereafter.

3. The notification shall state that all necessary administrative measures in Denmark enter into force on the date of entry into force of the implementing measures or have entered into force on the date of the notification, whichever date is the latest.

4. A Danish notification that the content of the implementing measures has been implemented in Denmark creates mutual obligations under international law between Denmark and the Community. The implementing measures will then form part of this Agreement.

5. In case:

23. Denmark notifies its decision not to implement the implementing measures; or

24. Denmark does not make a notification within the 30 days time limit set out in paragraph 2;

this Agreement shall be considered terminated unless the parties decide otherwise within 90 days. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the expiry of the 90 days period.

6. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 5 are not affected hereby.

7. If in exceptional cases the implementation requires parliamentary approval in Denmark, the Danish notification under paragraph 2 shall indicate this and the provisions of Article 3(5)-(8) shall apply.

8. Denmark shall notify the Commission of texts amending the items set out in Article 2(2)(f)-(i) of this Agreement. The Commission shall adapt Article 2(2)(f)-(i) accordingly.

ARTICLE 5

International agreements which affect the Agreement

1. International agreements entered into by the Community based on the rules of the Brussels I Regulation shall not be binding upon and shall not be applicable in Denmark.

2. Denmark will abstain from entering into international agreements which may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement unless it is done in agreement with the Community and satisfactory arrangements have been made with regard to the relationship between this Agreement and the international agreement in question.

3. When negotiating international agreements that may affect or alter the scope of the Brussels I Regulation as annexed to this Agreement , Denmark will co-ordinate its position with the Community and will abstain from any actions that would jeopardise the objectives of a Community position within its sphere of competence in such negotiations.

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to the interpretation of the Agreement

1. Where a question on the validity or interpretation of this Agreement is raised in a case pending before a Danish court or tribunal, that court or tribunal shall request the Court of Justice to give a ruling thereon whenever under the same circumstances a court or tribunal of another Member State of the European Union would be required to do so in respect of the Brussels I Regulation and its implementing measures referred to in Article 2(1).

2. Under Danish law, the courts in Denmark shall, when interpreting this Agreement, take due account of the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention, the Brussels I Regulation and any implementing Community measures.

3. Denmark may, like the Council, the Commission and any Member State, request the Court of Justice to give a ruling on a question of interpretation of this Agreement. The ruling given by the Court of Justice in response to such a request shall not apply to judgments of courts or tribunals of the Member States which have become res judicata.

4. Denmark shall be entitled to submit observations to the Court of Justice in cases where a question has been referred to it by a court or tribunal of a Member State for a preliminary ruling concerning the interpretation of any provision referred to in Article 2(1).

5. The Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

6. If the provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community regarding rulings by the Court of Justice are amended with consequences for rulings in respect of the Brussels I Regulation, Denmark may notify the Commission of its decision not to apply the amendments in respect of this Agreement. Notification shall be given at the time of the entry into force of the amendments or within 60 days hereafter.

In such a case this Agreement shall be considered terminated. Termination shall take effect 3 months after the notification.

7. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 6 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 7

Jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in relation to compliance with the Agreement

1. The Commission may bring before the Court of Justice cases against Denmark concerning non-compliance with any obligation under this Agreement.

2. Denmark may bring a complaint to the Commission as to the non-compliance by a Member State of its obligations by virtue of this Agreement.

3. The relevant provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community governing proceedings before the Court of Justice as well as the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and its Rules of Procedure shall apply.

ARTICLE 8

Territorial application

1. This Agreement shall apply to the territories referred to in Article 299 of the Treaty establishing the European Community.

2. If the Community decides to extend the application of the Brussels I Regulation to territories currently governed by the Brussels Convention, the Community and Denmark shall cooperate in order to ensure that such an application also extends to Denmark.

ARTICLE 9

Transitional provisions

1. This Agreement shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after the entry into force thereof.

2. However, if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted before the entry into force of this Agreement, judgments given after that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with this Agreement,

25. if the proceedings in the Member State of origin were instituted after the entry into force of the Brussels or the Lugano Convention both in the Member State of origin and in the Member State addressed;

26. in all other cases, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in this Agreement or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

ARTICLE 10

Relationship to the Brussels I Regulation

1. This Agreement shall not prejudice the application by the Member States of the Community other than Denmark of the Brussels I Regulation.

2. However, this Agreement shall in any event be applied:

27. in matters of jurisdiction, where the defendant is domiciled in Denmark, or where Article 22 or 23 of the Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of Article 2 of this Agreement, confer jurisdiction on the courts of Denmark;

28. in relation to a lis pendens or to related actions as provided for in Articles 27 and 28 of the Brussels I Regulation, applicable to the relations between the Community and Denmark by virtue of article 2 of this Agreement, when proceedings are instituted in a Member State other than Denmark and in Denmark;

29. in matters of recognition and enforcement, where Denmark is either the State of origin or the State addressed.

ARTICLE 11

Termination of the agreement

1. This Agreement shall terminate if Denmark informs the other Member States that it no longer wishes to avail itself of the provisions of Part I of the Protocol on the position of Denmark, cf. Article 7 of that Protocol.

2. This Agreement may be terminated by either Contracting Party giving notice to the other Contracting Party. Termination shall be effective six months after the date of such notice.

3. Legal proceedings instituted and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the date of termination of the Agreement as set out in paragraph 1 or 2 are not affected hereby.

ARTICLE 12

Entry into force

1. The Agreement shall be adopted by the Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective procedures.

2. The Agreement shall enter into force on the first day of the sixth month following the notification by the Contracting Parties of the completion of their respective procedures required for this purpose.

Article 10

In respect of liability insurance or insurance of immovable property, the insurer may in addition be sued in the courts for the place where the harmful event occurred. The same applies if movable and immovable property are covered by the same insurance policy and both are adversely affected by the same contingency.

Article 11

1. In respect of liability insurance, the insurer may also, if the law of the court permits it, be joined in proceedings which the injured party has brought against the insured.

2. Articles 8, 9 and 10 shall apply to actions brought by the injured party directly against the insurer, where such direct actions are permitted.

3. If the law governing such direct actions provides that the policyholder or the insured may be joined as a party to the action, the same court shall have jurisdiction over them.

Article 12

1. Without prejudice to Article 11(3), an insurer may bring proceedings only in the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the defendant is domiciled, irrespective of whether he is the policyholder, the insured or a beneficiary.

2. The provisions of this Section shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 13

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the policyholder, the insured or a beneficiary to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section; or

3. which is concluded between a policyholder and an insurer, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same State bound by this Convention, and which has the effect of conferring jurisdiction on the courts of that State even if the harmful event were to occur abroad, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of that State; or

4. which is concluded with a policyholder who is not domiciled in a State bound by this Convention, except insofar as the insurance is compulsory or relates to immovable property in a State bound by this Convention; or

5. which relates to a contract of insurance insofar as it covers one or more of the risks set out in Article 14.

Article 14

The following are the risks referred to in Article 13(5):

1. any loss of or damage to:

   (a) seagoing ships, installations situated offshore or on the high seas, or aircraft, arising from perils which relate to their use for commercial purposes;

   (b) goods in transit, other than passengers' baggage, where the transit consists of or includes carriage by such ships or aircraft;

2. any liability, other than for bodily injury to passengers or loss of or damage to their baggage:

   (a) arising out of the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in point 1(a) insofar as, in respect of the latter, the law of the State bound by this Convention in which such aircraft are registered does not prohibit agreements on jurisdiction regarding insurance of such risks;

   (b) for loss or damage caused by goods in transit as described in point 1(b);

3. any financial loss connected with the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in point 1(a), in particular loss of freight or charter-hire;

4. any risk or interest connected with any of those referred to in points 1 to 3;

5. notwithstanding points 1 to 4, all large risks.

SECTION 4

Jurisdiction over consumer contracts

Article 15

1. In matters relating to a contract concluded by a person, the consumer, for a purpose which can be regarded as being outside his trade or profession, jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to Articles 4 and 5(5), if:

(a) it is a contract for the sale of goods on instalment credit terms; or

(b) it is a contract for a loan repayable by instalments, or for any other form of credit, made to finance the sale of goods; or

(c) in all other cases, the contract has been concluded with a person who pursues commercial or professional activities in the State bound by this Convention of the consumer's domicile or, by any means, directs such activities to that State or to several States including that State, and the contract falls within the scope of such activities.

2. Where a consumer enters into a contract with a party who is not domiciled in the State bound by this Convention but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the States bound by this Convention, that party shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that State.

3. This section shall not apply to a contract of transport other than a contract which, for an inclusive price, provides for a combination of travel and accommodation.

Article 16

1. A consumer may bring proceedings against the other party to a contract either in the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which that party is domiciled or in the courts for the place where the consumer is domiciled.

2. Proceedings may be brought against a consumer by the other party to the contract only in the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the consumer is domiciled.

3. This Article shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 17

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the consumer to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section; or

3. which is entered into by the consumer and the other party to the contract, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same State bound by this Convention, and which confers jurisdiction on the courts of that State, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of that State.

SECTION 5

Jurisdiction over individual contracts of employment

Article 18

1. In matters relating to individual contracts of employment, jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to Articles 4 and 5(5).

2. Where an employee enters into an individual contract of employment with an employer who is not domiciled in a State bound by this Convention but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the States bound by this Convention, the employer shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that State.

Article 19

An employer domiciled in a State bound by this Convention may be sued:

1. in the courts of the State where he is domiciled; or

2. in another State bound by this Convention:

   (a) in the courts for the place where the employee habitually carries out his work or in the courts for the last place where he did so; or

   (b) if the employee does not or did not habitually carry out his work in any one country, in the courts for the place where the business which engaged the employee is or was situated.

Article 20

1. An employer may bring proceedings only in the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the employee is domiciled.

2. The provisions of this Section shall not affect the right to bring a counter-claim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 21

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement on jurisdiction:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the employee to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section.

SECTION 6

Exclusive jurisdiction

Article 22

The following courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile:

1. in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the property is situated.

   However, in proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the defendant is domiciled shall also have jurisdiction, provided that the tenant is a natural person and that the landlord and the tenant are domiciled in the same State bound by this Convention;

2. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of the constitution, the nullity or the dissolution of companies or other legal persons or associations of natural or legal persons, or of the validity of the decisions of their organs, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the company, legal person or association has its seat. In order to determine that seat, the court shall apply its rules of private international law;

3. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of entries in public registers, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the register is kept;

4. in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of patents, trade marks, designs, or other similar rights required to be deposited or registered, irrespective of whether the issue is raised by way of an action or as a defence, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the deposit or registration has been applied for, has taken place or is, under the terms of a Community instrument or an international convention, deemed to have taken place.

Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of the European Patent Office under the Convention on the grant of European patents, signed at Munich on 5 October 1973, the courts of each State bound by this Convention shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile, in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of any European patent granted for that State irrespective of whether the issue is raised by way of an action or as a defence;

5. in proceedings concerned with the enforcement of judgments, the courts of the State bound by this Convention in which the judgment has been or is to be enforced.

SECTION 7

Prorogation of jurisdiction

Article 23

1. If the parties, one or more of whom is domiciled in a State bound by this Convention, have agreed that a court or the courts of a State bound by this Convention are to have jurisdiction to settle any disputes which have arisen or which may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, that court or those courts shall have jurisdiction. Such jurisdiction shall be exclusive unless the parties have agreed otherwise. Such an agreement conferring jurisdiction shall be either:

(a) in writing or evidenced in writing; or

(b) in a form which accords with practices which the parties have established between themselves; or

(c) in international trade or commerce, in a form which accords with a usage of which the parties are or ought to have been aware and which in such trade or commerce is widely known to, and regularly observed by, parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned.

2. Any communication by electronic means which provides a durable record of the agreement shall be equivalent to 'writing'.

3. Where such an agreement is concluded by parties, none of whom is domiciled in a State bound by this Convention, the courts of other States bound by this Convention shall have no jurisdiction over their disputes unless the court or courts chosen have declined jurisdiction.

4. The court or courts of a State bound by this Convention on which a trust instrument has conferred jurisdiction shall have exclusive jurisdiction in any proceedings brought against a settlor, trustee or beneficiary, if relations between these persons or their rights or obligations under the trust are involved.

5. Agreements or provisions of a trust instrument conferring jurisdiction shall have no legal force if they are contrary to the provisions of Articles 13, 17 or 21, or if the courts whose jurisdiction they purport to exclude have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22.

Article 24

Apart from jurisdiction derived from other provisions of this Convention, a court of a State bound by this Convention before which a defendant enters an appearance shall have jurisdiction. This rule shall not apply where appearance was entered to contest the jurisdiction, or where another court has exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22.

SECTION 8

Examination as to jurisdiction and admissibility

Article 25

Where a court of a State bound by this Convention is seised of a claim which is principally concerned with a matter over which the courts of another State bound by this Convention have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 22, it shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

Article 26

1. Where a defendant domiciled in one State bound by this Convention is sued in a court of another State bound by this Convention and does not enter an appearance, the court shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction unless its jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of this Convention.

2. The court shall stay the proceedings so long as it is not shown that the defendant has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or that all necessary steps have been taken to this end.

3. Instead of the provisions of paragraph 2, Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil and Commercial matters shall apply if the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document had to be transmitted pursuant to that Convention.

4. Member States of the European Community bound by Council Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 of 29 May 2000 or by the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on the service of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters, signed at Brussels on 19 October 2005, shall apply in their mutual relations the provision in Article 19 of that Regulation if the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document had to be transmitted pursuant to that Regulation or that Agreement.

SECTION 9

Lis pendens* — related actions

Article 27

1. Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought in the courts of different States bound by this Convention, any court other than the court first seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

2. Where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Article 28

1. Where related actions are pending in the courts of different States bound by this Convention, any court other than the court first seised may stay its proceedings.

2. Where these actions are pending at first instance, any court other than the court first seised may also, on the application of one of the parties, decline jurisdiction if the court first seised has jurisdiction over the actions in question and its law permits the consolidation thereof.

3. For the purposes of this Article, actions are deemed to be related where they are so closely connected that it is expedient to hear and determine them together to avoid the risk of irreconcilable judgments resulting from separate proceedings.

Article 29

Where actions come within the exclusive jurisdiction of several courts, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Article 30

For the purposes of this Section, a court shall be deemed to be seised:

1. at the time when the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document is lodged with the court, provided that the plaintiff has not subsequently failed to take the steps he was required to take to have service effected on the defendant; or

2. if the document has to be served before being lodged with the court at the time when it is received by the authority responsible for service, provided that the plaintiff has not subsequently failed to take the steps he was required to take to have the document lodged with the court.

SECTION 10

Provisional, including protective, measures

Article 31

Application may be made to the courts of a State bound by this Convention for such provisional, including protective, measures as may be available under the law of that State, even if, under this Convention, the courts of another State bound by this Convention have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

TITLE III

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 32

For the purposes of this Convention, 'judgment' means any judgment given by a court or tribunal of a State bound by this Convention, whatever the judgment may be called, including a decree, order, decision or writ of execution, as well as the determination of costs or expenses by an officer of the court.

SECTION 1

Recognition

Article 33

1. A judgment given in a State bound by this Convention shall be recognised in the other States bound by this Convention without any special procedure being required.

2. Any interested party who raises the recognition of a judgment as the principal issue in a dispute may, in accordance with the procedures provided for in Sections 2 and 3 of this Title, apply for a decision that the judgment be recognised.

3. If the outcome of proceedings in a court of a State bound by this Convention depends on the determination of an incidental question of recognition that court shall have jurisdiction over that question.

Article 34

A judgment shall not be recognised:

1. if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the State in which recognition is sought;

2. where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so;

3. if it is irreconcilable with a judgment given in a dispute between the same parties in the State in which recognition is sought;

4. if it is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another State bound by this Convention or in a third State involving the same cause of action and between the same parties, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the State addressed.

Article 35

1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised if it conflicts with Sections 3, 4 or 6 of Title II, or in a case provided for in Article 68. A judgment may furthermore be refused recognition in any case provided for in Article 64(3) or 67(4).

2. In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in the foregoing paragraph, the court or authority applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the State of origin based its jurisdiction.

3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in Article 34(1) may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction.

Article 36

Under no circumstances may a foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 37

1. A court of a State bound by this Convention in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in another State bound by this Convention may stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal against the judgment has been lodged.

2. A court of a State bound by this Convention in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom may stay the proceedings if enforcement is suspended in the State of origin, by reason of an appeal.

SECTION 2

Enforcement

Article 38

1. A judgment given in a State bound by this Convention and enforceable in that State shall be enforced in another State bound by this Convention when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.

2. However, in the United Kingdom, such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland, or in Northern Ireland when, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom.

Article 39

1. The application shall be submitted to the court or competent authority indicated in the list in Annex II.

2. The local jurisdiction shall be determined by reference to the place of domicile of the party against whom enforcement is sought, or to the place of enforcement.

Article 40

1. The procedure for making the application shall be governed by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought.

2. The applicant must give an address for service of process within the area of jurisdiction of the court applied to. However, if the law of the State in which enforcement is sought does not provide for the furnishing of such an address, the applicant shall appoint a representative ad litem.

3. The documents referred to in Article 53 shall be attached to the application.

Article 41

The judgment shall be declared enforceable immediately on completion of the formalities in Article 53 without any review under Articles 34 and 35. The party against whom enforcement is sought shall not at this stage of the proceedings be entitled to make any submissions on the application.

Article 42

1. The decision on the application for a declaration of enforceability shall forthwith be brought to the notice of the applicant in accordance with the procedure laid down by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought.

2. The declaration of enforceability shall be served on the party against whom enforcement is sought, accompanied by the judgment, if not already served on that party.

Article 43

1. The decision on the application for a declaration of enforceability may be appealed against by either party.

2. The appeal is to be lodged with the court indicated in the list in Annex III.

3. The appeal shall be dealt with in accordance with the rules governing procedure in contradictory matters.

4. If the party against whom enforcement is sought fails to appear before the appellate court in proceedings concerning an appeal brought by the applicant, Article 26(2) to (4) shall apply even where the party against whom enforcement is sought is not domiciled in any of the States bound by this Convention.

5. An appeal against the declaration of enforceability is to be lodged within one month of service thereof. If the party against whom enforcement is sought is domiciled in a State bound by this Convention other than that in which the declaration of enforceability was given, the time for appealing shall be two months and shall run from the date of service, either on him in person or at his residence. No extension of time may be granted on account of distance.

Article 44

The judgment given on the appeal may be contested only by the appeal referred to in Annex IV.

Article 45

1. The court with which an appeal is lodged under Article 43 or Article 44 shall refuse or revoke a declaration of enforceability only on one of the grounds specified in Articles 34 and 35. It shall give its decision without delay.

2. Under no circumstances may the foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 46

1. The court with which an appeal is lodged under Article 43 or Article 44 may, on the application of the party against whom enforcement is sought, stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal has been lodged against the judgment in the State of origin or if the time for such an appeal has not yet expired; in the latter case, the court may specify the time within which such an appeal is to be lodged.

2. Where the judgment was given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, any form of appeal available in the State of origin shall be treated as an ordinary appeal for the purposes of paragraph 1.

3. The court may also make enforcement conditional on the provision of such security as it shall determine.

Article 47

1. When a judgment must be recognised in accordance with this Convention, nothing shall prevent the applicant from availing himself of provisional, including protective, measures in accordance with the law of the State requested without a declaration of enforceability under Article 41 being required.

2. The declaration of enforceability shall carry with it the power to proceed to any protective measures.

3. During the time specified for an appeal pursuant to Article 43(5) against the declaration of enforceability and until any such appeal has been determined, no measures of enforcement may be taken other than protective measures against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought.

Article 48

1. Where a foreign judgment has been given in respect of several matters and the declaration of enforceability cannot be given for all of them, the court or competent authority shall give it for one or more of them.

2. An applicant may request a declaration of enforceability limited to parts of a judgment.

Article 49

A foreign judgment which orders a periodic payment by way of a penalty shall be enforceable in the State in which enforcement is sought only if the amount of the payment has been finally determined by the courts of the State of origin.

Article 50

1. An applicant who in the State of origin has benefited from complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses shall be entitled, in the procedure provided for in this Section, to benefit from the most favourable legal aid or the most extensive exemption from costs or expenses provided for by the law of the State addressed.

2. However, an applicant who requests the enforcement of a decision given by an administrative authority in Denmark, in Iceland or in Norway in respect of maintenance may, in the State addressed, claim the benefits referred to in paragraph 1 if he presents a statement from the Danish, Icelandic, or Norwegian Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the economic requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses.

Article 51

No security, bond or deposit, however described, shall be required of a party who in one State bound by this Convention, applies for enforcement of a judgment given in another State bound by this Convention on the ground that he is a foreign national or that he is not domiciled or resident in the State in which enforcement is sought.

Article 52

In proceedings for the issue of a declaration of enforceability, no charge, duty or fee calculated by reference to the value of the matter at issue may be levied in the State in which enforcement is sought.

SECTION 3

Common provisions

Article 53

1. A party seeking recognition or applying for a declaration of enforceability shall produce a copy of the judgment which satisfies the conditions necessary to establish its authenticity.

2. A party applying for a declaration of enforceability shall also produce the certificate referred to in Article 54, without prejudice to Article 55.

Article 54

The court or competent authority of a State bound by this Convention where a judgment was given shall issue, at the request of any interested party, a certificate using the standard form in Annex V to this Convention.

Article 55

1. If the certificate referred to in Article 54 is not produced, the court or competent authority may specify a time for its production or accept an equivalent document or, if it considers that it has sufficient information before it, dispense with its production.

2. If the court or competent authority so requires, a translation of the documents shall be produced. The translation shall be certified by a person qualified to do so in one of the States bound by this Convention.

Article 56

No legalisation or other similar formality shall be required in respect of the documents referred to in Article 53 or Article 55(2), or in respect of a document appointing a representative ad litem.

TITLE IV

AUTHENTIC INSTRUMENTS AND COURT SETTLEMENTS

Article 57

1. A document which has been formally drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument and is enforceable in one State bound by this Convention shall, in another State bound by this Convention, be declared enforceable there, on application made in accordance with the procedures provided for in Article 38, et seq. The court with which an appeal is lodged under Article 43 or Article 44 shall refuse or revoke a declaration of enforceability only if enforcement of the instrument is manifestly contrary to public policy in the State addressed.

2. Arrangements relating to maintenance obligations concluded with administrative authorities or authenticated by them shall also be regarded as authentic instruments within the meaning of paragraph 1.

3. The instrument produced must satisfy the conditions necessary to establish its authenticity in the State of origin.

4. Section 3 of Title III shall apply as appropriate. The competent authority of a State bound by this Convention where an authentic instrument was drawn up or registered shall issue, at the request of any interested party, a certificate using the standard form in Annex VI to this Convention.

Article 58

A settlement which has been approved by a court in the course of proceedings and is enforceable in the State bound by this Convention in which it was concluded shall be enforceable in the State addressed under the same conditions as authentic instruments. The court or competent authority of a State bound by this Convention where a court settlement was approved shall issue, at the request of any interested party, a certificate using the standard form in Annex V to this Convention.

TITLE V

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 59

1. In order to determine whether a party is domiciled in the State bound by this Convention whose courts are seised of a matter, the court shall apply its internal law.

2. If a party is not domiciled in the State whose courts are seised of the matter, then, in order to determine whether the party is domiciled in another State bound by this Convention, the court shall apply the law of that State.

Article 60

1. For the purposes of this Convention, a company or other legal person or association of natural or legal persons is domiciled at the place where it has its:

(a) statutory seat; or

(b) central administration; or

(c) principal place of business.

2. For the purposes of the United Kingdom and Ireland 'statutory seat' means the registered office or, where there is no such office anywhere, the place of incorporation or, where there is no such place anywhere, the place under the law of which the formation took place.

3. In order to determine whether a trust is domiciled in the State bound by this Convention whose courts are seised of the matter, the court shall apply its rules of private international law.

Article 61

Without prejudice to any more favourable provisions of national laws, persons domiciled in a State bound by this Convention who are being prosecuted in the criminal courts of another State bound by this Convention of which they are not nationals for an offence which was not intentionally committed may be defended by persons qualified to do so, even if they do not appear in person. However, the court seised of the matter may order appearance in person; in the case of failure to appear, a judgment given in the civil action without the person concerned having had the opportunity to arrange for his defence need not be recognised or enforced in the other States bound by this Convention.

Article 62

For the purposes of this Convention, the expression 'court' shall include any authorities designated by a State bound by this Convention as having jurisdiction in the matters falling within the scope of this Convention.

TITLE VI

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

Article 63

1. This Convention shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after its entry into force in the State of origin and, where recognition or enforcement of a judgment or authentic instruments is sought, in the State addressed.

2. However, if the proceedings in the State of origin were instituted before the entry into force of this Convention, judgments given after that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with Title III:

(a) if the proceedings in the State of origin were instituted after the entry into force of the Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988 both in the State of origin and in the State addressed;

(b) in all other cases, if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in Title II or in a convention concluded between the State of origin and the State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

TITLE VII

RELATIONSHIP TO COUNCIL REGULATION (EC) No 44/2001 AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Article 64

1. This Convention shall not prejudice the application by the Member States of the European Community of the Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, as well as any amendments thereof, of the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, signed at Brussels on 27 September 1968, and of the Protocol on interpretation of that Convention by the Court of Justice of the European Communities, signed at Luxembourg on 3 June 1971, as amended by the Conventions of Accession to the said Convention and the said Protocol by the States acceding to the European Communities, as well as of the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, signed at Brussels on 19 October 2005.

2. However, this Convention shall in any event be applied:

(a) in matters of jurisdiction, where the defendant is domiciled in the territory of a State where this Convention but not an instrument referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article applies, or where Articles 22 or 23 of this Convention confer jurisdiction on the courts of such a State;

(b) in relation to lis pendens or to related actions as provided for in Articles 27 and 28, when proceedings are instituted in a State where the Convention but not an instrument referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article applies and in a State where this Convention as well as an instrument referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article apply;

(c) in matters of recognition and enforcement, where either the State of origin or the State addressed is not applying an instrument referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. In addition to the grounds provided for in Title III, recognition or enforcement may be refused if the ground of jurisdiction on which the judgment has been based differs from that resulting from this Convention and recognition or enforcement is sought against a party who is domiciled in a State where this Convention but not an instrument referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article applies, unless the judgment may otherwise be recognised or enforced under any rule of law in the State addressed.

Article 65

Subject to the provisions of Articles 63(2), 66 and 67, this Convention shall, as between the States bound by this Convention, supersede the conventions concluded between two or more of them that cover the same matters as those to which this Convention applies. In particular, the conventions mentioned in Annex VII shall be superseded.

Article 66

1. The conventions referred to in Article 65 shall continue to have effect in relation to matters to which this Convention does not apply.

2. They shall continue to have effect in respect of judgments given and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the entry into force of this Convention.

Article 67

1. This Convention shall not affect any conventions by which the Contracting Parties and/or the States bound by this Convention are bound and which in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments. Without prejudice to obligations resulting from other agreements between certain Contracting Parties, this Convention shall not prevent Contracting Parties from entering into such conventions.

2. This Convention shall not prevent a court of a State bound by this Convention and by a convention on a particular matter from assuming jurisdiction in accordance with that convention, even where the defendant is domiciled in another State bound by this Convention which is not a party to that convention. The court hearing the action shall, in any event, apply Article 26 of this Convention.

3. Judgments given in a State bound by this Convention by a court in the exercise of jurisdiction provided for in a convention on a particular matter shall be recognised and enforced in the other States bound by this Convention in accordance with Title III of this Convention.

4. In addition to the grounds provided for in Title III, recognition or enforcement may be refused if the State addressed is not bound by the convention on a particular matter and the person against whom recognition or enforcement is sought is domiciled in that State, or, if the State addressed is a Member State of the European Community and in respect of conventions which would have to be concluded by the European Community, in any of its Member States, unless the judgment may otherwise be recognised or enforced under any rule of law in the State addressed.

5. Where a convention on a particular matter to which both the State of origin and the State addressed are parties lays down conditions for the recognition or enforcement of judgments, those conditions shall apply. In any event, the provisions of this Convention which concern the procedures for recognition and enforcement of judgments may be applied.

Article 68

1. This Convention shall not affect agreements by which States bound by this Convention undertook, prior to the entry into force of this Convention, not to recognise judgments given in other States bound by this Convention against defendants domiciled or habitually resident in a third State where, in cases provided for in Article 4, the judgment could only be founded on a ground of jurisdiction as specified in Article 3(2). Without prejudice to obligations resulting from other agreements between certain Contracting Parties, this Convention shall not prevent Contracting Parties from entering into such conventions.

2. However, a Contracting Party may not assume an obligation towards a third State not to recognise a judgment given in another State bound by this Convention by a court basing its jurisdiction on the presence within that State of property belonging to the defendant, or the seizure by the plaintiff of property situated there:

(a) if the action is brought to assert or declare proprietary or possessory rights in that property, seeks to obtain authority to dispose of it, or arises from another issue relating to such property; or

(b) if the property constitutes the security for a debt which is the subject-matter of the action.

PROTOCOL 1

on certain questions of jurisdiction, procedure and enforcement

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

Article I

1. Judicial and extrajudicial documents drawn up in one State bound by this Convention which have to be served on persons in another State bound by this Convention shall be transmitted in accordance with the procedures laid down in the conventions and agreements applicable between these States.

2. Unless the Contracting Party on whose territory service is to take place objects by declaration to the Depositary, such documents may also be sent by the appropriate public officers of the State in which the document has been drawn up directly to the appropriate public officers of the State in which the addressee is to be found. In this case the officer of the State of origin shall send a copy of the document to the officer of the State applied to who is competent to forward it to the addressee. The document shall be forwarded in the manner specified by the law of the State applied to. The forwarding shall be recorded by a certificate sent directly to the officer of the State of origin.

3. Member States of the European Community bound by Council Regulation (EC) No 1348/2000 of 29 May 2000 or by the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on the service of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters, signed at Brussels on 19 October 2005, shall apply in their mutual relations that Regulation and that Agreement.

Article II

1. The jurisdiction specified in Articles 6(2) and 11 in actions on a warranty or guarantee or in any other third party proceedings may not be fully resorted to in the States bound by this Convention referred to in Annex IX. Any person domiciled in another State bound by this Convention may be sued in the courts of these States pursuant to the rules referred to in Annex IX.

2. At the time of ratification the European Community may declare that proceedings referred to in Articles 6 (2) and 11 may not be resorted to in some other Member States and provide information on the rules that shall apply.

3. Judgments given in the other States bound by this Convention by virtue of Article 6(2) or Article 11 shall be recognised and enforced in the States mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 in accordance with Title III. Any effects which judgments given in these States may have on third parties by application of the provisions in paragraphs 1 and 2 shall also be recognised in the other States bound by this Convention.

Article III

1. Switzerland reserves the right to declare upon ratification that it will not apply the following part of the provision in Article 34(2):

'unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so'.

If Switzerland makes such declaration, the other Contracting Parties shall apply the same reservation in respect of judgments rendered by the courts of Switzerland.

2. Contracting Parties may, in respect of judgments rendered in an acceding State referred to in Article 70(1)(c), by declaration reserve:

(a) the right mentioned in paragraph 1; and

(b) the right of an authority mentioned in Article 39, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 41, to examine of its own motion whether any of the grounds for refusal of recognition and enforcement of a judgment is present or not.

3. If a Contracting Party has made such a reservation towards an acceding State as referred to in paragraph 2, this acceding State may by declaration reserve the same right in respect of judgments rendered by the courts of that Contracting Party.

4. Except for the reservation mentioned in paragraph 1, the declarations are valid for periods of five years and are renewable at the end of such periods. The Contracting Party shall notify a renewal of a declaration referred to under paragraph 2 not later than six months prior to the end of such period. An acceding State may only renew its declaration made under paragraph 3 after renewal of the respective declaration under paragraph 2.

Article IV

The declarations referred to in this Protocol may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Depositary. The notification shall be accompanied by a translation into English and French. The Contracting Parties provide for translations into their languages. Any such withdrawal shall take effect as of the first day of the third month following that notification.

PROTOCOL 2

on the uniform interpretation of the Convention and on the Standing Committee

PREAMBLE

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

HAVING REGARD to Article 75 of this Convention,

CONSIDERING the substantial link between this Convention, the 1988 Lugano Convention, and the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention,

CONSIDERING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities has jurisdiction to give rulings on the interpretation of the provisions of the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention,

CONSIDERING that this Convention becomes part of Community rules and that therefore the Court of Justice of the European Communities has jurisdiction to give rulings on the interpretation of the provisions of this Convention as regards the application by the courts of the Member States of the European Community,

BEING AWARE of the rulings delivered by the Court of Justice of the European Communities on the interpretation of the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention up to the time of signature of this Convention, and of the rulings delivered by the courts of the Contracting Parties to the 1988 Lugano Convention on the latter Convention up to the time of signature of this Convention,

CONSIDERING that the parallel revision of both the 1988 Lugano and Brussels Conventions, which led to the conclusion of a revised text for these Conventions, was substantially based on the above mentioned rulings on the 1968 Brussels and the 1988 Lugano Conventions,

CONSIDERING that the revised text of the Brussels Convention has been incorporated, after the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty, into Regulation (EC) No 44/2001,

CONSIDERING that this revised text also constituted the basis for the text of this Convention,

DESIRING to prevent, in full deference to the independence of the courts, divergent interpretations and to arrive at an interpretation as uniform as possible of the provisions of this Convention and of those of the Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 which are substantially reproduced in this Convention and of other instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention,

HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

1. Any court applying and interpreting this Convention shall pay due account to the principles laid down by any relevant decision concerning the provision(s) concerned or any similar provision(s) of the 1988 Lugano Convention and the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of the Convention rendered by the courts of the States bound by this Convention and by the Court of Justice of the European Communities.

2. For the courts of Member States of the European Community, the obligation laid down in paragraph 1 shall apply without prejudice to their obligations in relation to the Court of Justice of the European Communities resulting from the Treaty establishing the European Community or from the Agreement between the European Community and the Kingdom of Denmark on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, signed at Brussels on 19 October 2005.

Article 2

Any State bound by this Convention and which is not a Member State of the European Community is entitled to submit statements of case or written observations, in accordance with Article 23 of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, where a court or tribunal of a Member State of the European Community refers to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling a question on the interpretation of this Convention or of the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention.

Article 3

1. The Commission of the European Communities shall set up a system of exchange of information concerning relevant judgments delivered pursuant to this Convention as well as relevant judgments under the 1988 Lugano Convention and the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention. This system shall be accessible to the public and contain judgments delivered by the courts of last instance and of the Court of Justice of the European Communities as well as judgments of particular importance which have become final and have been delivered pursuant to this Convention, the 1988 Lugano Convention, and the instruments referred to in Article 64(1) of this Convention. The judgments shall be classified and provided with an abstract.

The system shall comprise the transmission to the Commission by the competent authorities of the States bound by this Convention of judgments as referred to above delivered by the courts of these States.

2. A selection of cases of particular interest for the proper functioning of the Convention will be made by the Registrar of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, who shall present the selected case law at the meeting of experts in accordance with Article 5 of this Protocol.

3. Until the European Communities have set up the system pursuant to paragraph 1, the Court of Justice of the European Communities shall maintain the system for the exchange of information established by Protocol 2 of the 1988 Lugano Convention for judgments delivered under this Convention and the 1988 Lugano Convention.

Article 4

1. A Standing Committee shall be set up, composed of the representatives of the Contracting Parties.

2. At the request of a Contracting Party, the Depositary of the Convention shall convene meetings of the Committee for the purpose of:

— a consultation on the relationship between this Convention and other international instruments,

— a consultation on the application of Article 67, including intended accessions to instruments on particular matters according to Article 67(1), and proposed legislation according to Protocol 3, — the consideration of the accession of new States. In particular, the Committee may ask acceding States referred to in Article 70(1)(c) questions about their judicial systems and the implementation of the Convention. The Committee may also consider possible adaptations to the Convention necessary for its application in the acceding States, — the acceptance of new authentic language versions pursuant to Article 73(3) of this Convention and the necessary amendments to Annex VIII, — a consultation on a revision of the Convention pursuant to Article 76,

— a consultation on amendments to Annexes I through IV and Annex VII pursuant to Article 77(1), — the adoption of amendments to Annexes V and VI pursuant to Article 77(2), — a withdrawal of the reservations and declarations made by the Contracting Parties pursuant to Protocol 1 and necessary amendments to Annex IX.

3. The Committee shall establish the procedural rules concerning its functioning and decision-making. These rules shall provide for the possibility to consult and decide by written procedure.

Article 5

1. The Depositary may convene, whenever necessary, a meeting of experts to exchange views on the functioning of the Convention, in particular on the development of the case-law and new legislation that may influence the application of the Convention.

2. This meeting shall be composed of experts of the Contracting Parties, of the States bound by this Convention, of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, and of the European Free Trade Association. It shall be open to any other experts whose presence is deemed appropriate.

3. Any problems arising on the functioning of the Convention may be referred to the Standing Committee referred to in Article 4 of this Protocol for further action.

PROTOCOL 3

on the application of Article 67 of the Convention

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

1. For the purposes of the Convention, provisions which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments and which are or will be contained in acts of the institutions of the European Communities shall be treated in the same way as the conventions referred to in Article 67(1).

2. If one of the Contracting Parties is of the opinion that a provision contained in a proposed act of the institutions of the European Communities is incompatible with the Convention, the Contracting Parties shall promptly consider amending the Convention pursuant to Article 76, without prejudice to the procedure established by Protocol 2.

3. Where a Contracting Party or several Parties together incorporate some or all of the provisions contained in acts of the institutions of the European Community referred to in paragraph 1 into national law, then these provisions of national law shall be treated in the same way as the conventions referred to in Article 67(1).

4. The Contracting Parties shall communicate to the Depositary the text of the provisions mentioned in paragraph 3. Such communication shall be accompanied by a translation into English and French.

DECISIONS

of 15 October 2007

on the signing, on behalf of the Community, of the Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters

(2007/712/EC)

THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty establishing the European Community, and in particular Article 61(c) thereof, in conjunction with the first subparagraph of Article 300(2) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal from the Commission,

Whereas:

(1) On 16 September 1988, the Member States of the European Communities signed an international agreement with the Republic of Iceland, the Kingdom of Norway and the Swiss Confederation on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters ([1]) (the Lugano Convention), thereby extending to Iceland, Norway and Switzerland the application of the rules of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on the same subject matter ([2]) (the Brussels Convention).

(2) Negotiations on a revision of the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention were undertaken during the years 1998-1999 within the framework of an ad hoc Working Party enlarged with Switzerland, Norway and Iceland. These negotiations led to the adoption of a text of a draft convention prepared by the Working Party, which was confirmed by the Council at its meeting on 27 and 28 May 1999.

(3) Subsequent negotiations within the Council on the basis of this text led to the adoption of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters ([3]), which modernised the rules of the Brussels Convention and made the system of recognition and enforcement swifter and more efficient.

(4) In the light of the parallelism between the Brussels and the Lugano Convention regimes on jurisdiction and on recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, the rules of the Lugano Convention should be aligned with the rules of Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 in order to achieve the same level of circulation of judgments between the EU Member States and the EFTA States concerned.

(5) In accordance with the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, Denmark does not take part in the application of measures pursuant to Title IV of the Treaty establishing the European Community. In order for the rules of the Lugano Convention to apply to Denmark, Denmark should therefore participate as a Contracting Party to a new convention covering the same subject matter.

(6) By Decision of 27 September 2002, the Council authorised the Commission to negotiate with a view to the adoption of a new Lugano Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters.

(7) The Commission has negotiated such a convention, on behalf of the Community, with Iceland, Norway, Switzerland and Denmark.

(8) In accordance with Article 3 of the Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, the United Kingdom and Ireland are taking part in the adoption and application of this Decision.

(9) In accordance with Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol on the position of Denmark, Denmark does not take part in the adoption of this Decision and is not bound by it or subject to its application.

(10) The Convention, initialled at Brussels on 28 March 2007, should be signed,

HAS DECIDED AS FOLLOWS:

Article 1

The signing of the Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, which will replace the Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988, is hereby approved on behalf of the Community, subject to the conclusion of the said Convention.

The text of the Convention is attached to this Decision.

Article 2

The President of the Council is hereby authorised to designate the person(s) empowered to sign, on behalf of the Community, the Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters.

Done at Luxembourg, 15 October 2007.

For the Council

The President

Statement on Articles 15 and 73

1. The Council and the Commission are aware that the development of electronic commerce in the information society facilitates the economic growth of undertakings. Community law is an essential if citizens, economic operators and consumers are to benefit from the possibilites afforded by electronic commerce.

   They consider that the development of new distance marketing techniques based on the use of the Internet depends in part on the mutual confidence which may grow up between undertakings and consumers. One of the major elements in this confidence is the opportunity offered to consumers by Article 16 of the Regulation to bring possible disputes before the courts of the Member States in which they reside, where the contract concluded by the consumer is covered by Article 15 of the Regulation.

   The Council and the Commission point out in this connection that for Article 15(1)(c) to be applicable it is not sufficient for an undertaking to target its activities at the Member State of the consumer's residence, or at a number of Member States including that Member State; a contract must also be concluded within the framework of its activities. This provision relates to a number of marketing methods, including contracts concluded at a distance through the Internet.

   In this context, the Council and the Commission stress that the mere fact that an Internet site is accessible is not sufficient for Article 15 to be applicable, although a factor will be that this Internet site solicits the conclusion of distance contracts and that a contract has actually been concluded at a distance, by whatever means. In this respect, the language or currency which a website uses does not constitute a relevant factor.

2. The Council and the Commission take the view that in general it is in the interest of consumers and undertakings to try to settle their disputes amicably before resorting to the courts.

   The Council and the Commission stress in this connection that the purpose of the Regulation, and in particular of Articles 15 and 17 thereof, is not to prohibit the parties from making use of alternative methods of dispute settlement.

   The Council and the Commission accordingly wish to reiterate how important it is that work on alternative methods of dispute settlement in civil and commercial matters should continue at European Community level, in keeping with the Council's conclusions of 29 May 2000.

   They are aware of the great significance of this work and stress the useful complementary role represented by alternative methods of dispute settlement in civil and commercial matters, in particular with regard to electronic commerce.

3. Pursuant to Article 73 of the Regulation, the Commission is to submit a report on the application of the Regulation, accompanied, if need be, by proposals for adaptations, to the European Parliament, the Council and the Economic and Social Committee.

   The Council and the Commission consider that in preparing the report especial attention should be paid to the application of the provisions of the Regulation relating to consumers and small and medium-sized undertakings, in particular with respect to electronic commerce. For this purpose, the Commission will, where appropriate, propose amendments to the Regulation before the expiry of the period referred to in Article 73 of the Regulation.

Revision of the Lugano Convention

1. Status of the revision

At the end of April 1999, an EU-EFTA working group completed a draft of the substantive part of the revision of the Lugano and Brussels Conventions. Shortly afterwards, in May 1999, the Treaty of Amsterdam came into force for the EU member states. This treaty provides the basis for EC competence in civil justice cooperation. The re-vised text of the new agreement was consequently moulded into an EC regulation known as the Brussels I Regu-lation, without having any substantive effect on the outcome of the negotiations.

The second, formal part of the revision concerns essentially the transitional provisions, the relationship between the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention and other agreements, jurisdiction and appeals procedures, as well as ratification and membership procedures. The formal revision of the Convention was delayed for several reasons: firstly, there was a difference in interpretation of the paragraph on consumers by the Internet providers and consumers. This question had to be resolved before the Brussels I Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001) was passed on 22 December 2000 (entry into force 1 March 2002). The Lugano negotiations were fur-ther delayed because a separate instrument had to be negotiated with Denmark, which under the EC Treaty is not a party to the EC-driven integration of police and judicial affairs. Moreover, it was unclear for a long time whether the European Community had exclusive or shared competence to conclude the new Lugano Convention. The opinion of the European Court of Justice dated 7 February 2006 ruled that the conclusion of the new agreement fell entirely within the sphere of the Community's exclusive competence, which means that Switzerland, Norway and Iceland now only have to negotiate with one single contracting party — the European Community, acting through the EC Commission. The EU member states enjoy observer status.

The revised Lugano Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil an commercial matters was signed on 30 october 2007 in Lugano. The Convention still has to be ratified by the con-tracting parties.

The Convention will enter into force in respect of Switzerland earliest on 1st january 2010.

2. Revision Overview

The revision of the substantive part of the Convention focussed on the regulations on the court of jurisdiction and jurisdiction over consumer contracts. Other important changes were made in the following areas: special jurisdiction in company law, lis pendens and the consolidation of related actions, and in matters regarding exequatur proceedings. Other less significant changes were made in the areas: agreement conferring jurisdiction, employment contracts, jurisdiction relating to torts, the passive joinder of proceedings, action on a warranty or guarantee, action for breach of warranty, action in opposition to the execution of a judgement , insurance matters, exclusive jurisdiction regarding immovable property and intellectual property litigation, as well as defence on the substance of an action. The revised Lugano Convention largely assumes the numbering of the articles of the Brussels I Regulation.

In respect of liability insurance, the insurer may also, if the law of the court permits it, be joined in proceedings which the injured party has brought against the insured.

The provisions of Articles 7, 8 and 9 shall apply to actions brought by the injured party directly against the insurer, where such direct actions are permitted.

If the law governing such direct actions provides that the policy-holder or the insured may be joined as a party to the action, the same court shall have jurisdiction over them.

Article 11

Without prejudice to the provisions of the third paragraph of Article 10, an insurer may bring proceedings only in the courts of the Contracting State in which the defendant is domiciled, irrespective of whether he is the policy-holder, the insured or a beneficiary.

The provisions of this Section shall not affect the right to bring a counterclaim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 12

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement on jurisdiction:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the policy-holder, the insured or a beneficiary to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section; or

3. which is concluded between a policy-holder and an insurer, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same Contracting State, and which has the effect of conferring jurisdiction on the courts of that State even if the harmful event were to occur abroad, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of the State; or

4. which is concluded with a policy-holder who is not domiciled in a Contracting State, except in so far as the insurance is compulsory or relates to immovable property in a Contracting State; or

5. which relates to a contract of insurance in so far as it covers one or more of the risks set out in Article 12A.

Article 12A

The following are the risks referred to in Article 12 (5):

1. any loss of or damage to:

(a) sea-going ships, installations situated off shore or on the high seas, or aircraft, arising from perils which relate to their use for commercial purposes;

(b) goods in transit other than passengers' baggage where the transit consists of or includes carriage by such ships or aircraft;

2. any liability, other than for bodily injury to passengers or loss of or damage to their baggage;

(a) arising out of the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in (1) (a) above in so far as the law of the Contracting State in which such aircraft are registered does not prohibit agreements on jurisdiction regarding insurance of such risks;

(b) for loss or damage caused by goods in transit as described in (1) (b) above;

3. any financial loss connected with the use or operation of ships, installations or aircraft as referred to in (1) (a) above, in particular loss of freight or charter-hire;

4. any risk or interest connected with any of those referred to in (1) to (3) above.

Section 4

Jurisdiction over consumer contracts

Article 13

In proceedings concerning a contract concluded by a person for a purpose which can be regarded as being outside his trade or profession, hereinafter called 'the consumer', jurisdiction shall be determined by this Section, without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 (5), if it is:

1. a contract for the sale of goods on instalment credit terms; or

2. a contract for a loan repayable by instalments, or for any other form of credit, made to finance the sale of goods; or

3. any other contract for the supply of goods or a contract for the supply of services, and

(a) in the State of the consumer's domicile the conclusion of the contract was preceded by a specific invitation addressed to him or by advertising, and

(b) the consumer took in that State the steps necessary for the conclusion of the contract.

Where a consumer enters into a contract with a party who is not domiciled in a Contracting State but has a branch, agency or other establishment in one of the Contracting States, that party shall, in disputes arising out of the operations of the branch, agency or establishment, be deemed to be domiciled in that State.

This Section shall not apply to contracts of transport.

Article 14

A consumer may bring proceedings against the other party to a contract either in the courts of the Contracting State in which that party is domiciled or in the courts of the Contracting State in which he is himself domiciled.

Proceedings may be brought against a consumer by the other party to the contract only in the courts of the Contracting State in which the consumer is domiciled.

These provisions shall not affect the right to bring a counterclaim in the court in which, in accordance with this Section, the original claim is pending.

Article 15

The provisions of this Section may be departed from only by an agreement:

1. which is entered into after the dispute has arisen; or

2. which allows the consumer to bring proceedings in courts other than those indicated in this Section; or

3. which is entered into by the consumer and the other party to the contract, both of whom are at the time of conclusion of the contract domiciled or habitually resident in the same Contracting State, and which confers jurisdiction on the courts of that State, provided that such an agreement is not contrary to the law of that State.

Section 5

Exclusive jurisdiction

Article 16

The following courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile:

1. (a) in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the Contracting State in which the property is situated;

(b) however, in proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months, the courts of the Contracting State in which the defendant is domiciled shall also have jurisdiction, provided that the tenant is a natural person and neither party is domiciled in the Contracting State in which the property is situated;

2. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of the constitution, the nullity or the dissolution of companies or other legal persons or associations of natural or legal persons, or the decisions of their organs, the courts of the Contracting State in which the company, legal person or association has its seat;

3. in proceedings which have as their object the validity of entries in public registers, the courts of the Contracting State in which the register is kept;

4. in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of patents, trade marks, designs, or other similar rights required to be deposited or registered, the courts of the Contracting State in which the deposit or registration has been applied for, has taken place or is under the terms of an international convention deemed to have taken place;

5. in proceedings concerned with the enforcement of judgments, the courts of the Contracting State in which the judgment has been or is to be enforced.

Section 6

Prorogation of jurisdiction

Article 17

1. If the parties, one or more of whom is domiciled in a Contracting State, have agreed that a court or the courts of a Contracting State are to have jurisdiction to settle any disputes which have arisen or which may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, that court or those courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction. Such an agreement conferring jurisdiction shall be either:

(a) in writing or evidenced in writing, or

(b) in a form which accords with practices which the parties have established between themselves, or

(c) in international trade or commerce, in a form which accords with a usage of which the parties are or ought to have been aware and which in such trade or commerce is widely known to, and regularly observed by, parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned.

Where such an agreement is concluded by parties, none of whom is domiciled in a Contracting State, the courts of other Contracting States shall have no jurisdiction over their disputes unless the court or courts chosen have declined jurisdiction.

2. The court or courts of a Contracting State on which a trust instrument has conferred jurisdiction shall have exclusive jurisdiction in any proceedings brought against a settlor, trustee or beneficiary, if relations between these persons or their rights or obligations under the trust are involved.

3. Agreements or provisions of a trust instrument conferring jurisdiction shall have no legal force if they are contrary to the provisions of Article 12 or 15, or if the courts whose jurisdiction they purport to exclude have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 16.

4. If an agreement conferring jurisdiction was concluded for the benefit of only one of the parties, that party shall retain the right to bring proceedings in any other court which has jurisdiction by virtue of this Convention.

5. In matters relating to individual contracts of employment an agreement conferring jurisdiction shall have legal force only if it is entered into after the dispute has arisen.

Article 18

Apart from jurisdiction derived from other provisions of this Convention, a court of a Contracting State before whom a defendant enters an appearance shall have jurisdiction. This rule shall not apply where appearance was entered solely to contest the jurisdiction, or where another court has exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 16.

Section 7

Examination as to jurisdiction and admissibility

Article 19

Where a court of a Contracting State is seised of a claim which is principally concerned with a matter over which the courts of another Contracting State have exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of Article 16, it shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

Article 20

Where a defendant domiciled in one Contracting State is sued in a court of another Contracting State and does not enter an appearance, the court shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction unless its jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of this Convention.

The court shall stay the proceedings so long as it is not shown that the defendant has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or that all necessary steps have been taken to this end.

The provisions of the foregoing paragraph shall be replaced by those of Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the service abroad of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters, if the document instituting the proceedings or notice thereof had to be transmitted abroad in accordance with that Convention.

Section 8

Lis Pendens related actions

Article 21

Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought in the courts of different Contracting States, any court other than the court first seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

Where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Article 22

Where related actions are brought in the courts of different Contracting States, any court other than the court first seised may, while the actions are pending at first instance, stay its proceedings.

A court other than the court first seised may also, on the application of one of the parties, decline jurisdiction if the law of that court permits the consolidation of related actions and the court first seised has jurisdiction over both actions.

For the purposes of this Article, actions are deemed to be related where they are so closely connected that it is expedient to hear and determine them together to avoid the risk of irreconcilable judgments resulting from separate proceedings.

Article 23

Where actions come within the exclusive jurisdiction of several courts, any court other than the court first seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

Section 9

Provisional, including protective, measures

Article 24

Application may be made to the courts of a Contracting State for such provisional, including protective, measures as may be available under the law of that State, even if, under this Convention, the courts of another Contracting State have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

TITLE III

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 25

For the purposes of this Convention, 'judgment' means any judgment given by a court or tribunal of a Contracting State, whatever the judgment may be called, including a decree, order, decision or writ of execution, as well as the determination of costs or expenses by an officer of the court.

Section 1

Recognition

Article 26

A judgment given in a Contracting State shall be recognized in the other Contracting States without any special procedure being required.

Any interested party who raises the recognition of a judgment as the principal issue in a dispute may, in accordance with the procedures provided for in Section 2 and 3 of this Title, apply for a decision that the judgment be recognized.

If the outcome of proceedings in a court of a Contracting State depends on the determination of an incidental question of recognition that court shall have jurisdiction over that question.

Article 27

A judgment shall not be recognized:

1. if such recognition is contrary to public policy in the State in which recognition is sought;

2. where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence;

3. if the judgment is irreconcilable with a judgment given in a dispute between the same parties in the State in which recognition is sought;

4. if the court of the State of origin, in order to arrive at its judgment, has decided a preliminary question concerning the status or legal capacity of natural persons, rights in property arising out of a matrimonial relationship, wills or succession in a way that conflicts with a rule of the private international law of the State in which the recognition is sought, unless the same result would have been reached by the application of the rules of private international law of that State;

5. if the judgment is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in a non-contracting State involving the same cause of action and between the same parties, provided that this latter judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the State addressed.

Article 28

Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognized if it conflicts with the provisions of Sections 3, 4 or 5 of Title II or in a case provided for in Article 59.

A judgment may furthermore be refused recognition in any case provided for in Article 54B (3) or 57 (4).

In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in the foregoing paragraphs, the court or authority applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the State of origin based its jurisdiction.

Subject to the provisions of the first and second paragraphs, the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin may not be reviewed; the test of public policy referred to in Article 27 (1) may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction.

Article 29

Under no circumstances may a foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 30

A court of a Contracting State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in another Contracting State may stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal against the judgment has been lodged.

A court of a Contracting State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom may stay the proceedings if enforcement is suspended in the State of origin by reason of an appeal.

Section 2

The applicant must give an address for service of process within the area of jurisdiction of the court applied to. However, if the law of the State in which enforcement is sought does not provide for the furnishing of such an address, the applicant shall appoint a representative ad litem.

The documents referred to in Articles 46 and 47 shall be attached to the application.

Article 34

The court applied to shall give its decision without delay; the party against whom enforcement is sought shall not at this stage of the proceedings be entitled to make any submissions on the application.

The application may be refused only for one of the reasons specified in Articles 27 and 28.

Under no circumstances may the foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 35

The appropriate officer of the court shall without delay bring the decision given on the application to the notice of the applicant in accordance with the procedure laid down by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought.

Article 36

If enforcement is authorized, the party against whom enforcement is sought may appeal against the decision within one month of service thereof.

If that party is domiciled in a Contracting State other than that in which the decision authorizing enforcement was given, the time for appealing shall be two months and shall run from the date of service, either on him in person or at his residence. N° extension of time may be granted on account of distance.

Where the judgment was given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, any form of appeal available in the State of origin shall be treated as an ordinary appeal for the purposes of the first paragraph.

The court may also make enforcement conditional on the provision of such security as it shall determine.

Article 39

During the time specified for an appeal pursuant to Article 36 and until any such appeal has been determined, no measures of enforcement may be taken other than protective measures taken against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought.

However, an applicant who requests the enforcement of a decision given by an administrative authority in Denmark or in Iceland in respect of a maintenance order may, in the State addressed, claim the benefits referred to in the first paragraph if he presents a statement from, respectively, the Danish Ministry of Justice or the Icelandic Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the economic requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses.

Article 45

2. where appropriate, a document showing that the applicant is in receipt of legal aid in the State of origin.

Article 48

If the documents specified in Articles 46 (2) and 47 (2) are not produced, the court may specify a time for their production, accept equivalent documents or, if it considers that it has sufficient information before it, dispense with their production.

If the court so requires, a translation of the documents shall be produced; the translation shall be certified by a person qualified to do so in one of the Contracting States.

Article 49

N° legalization or other similar formality shall be required in respect of the documents referred to in Articles 46 or 47 or the second paragraph of Article 48, or in respect of a document appointing a representative ad litem.

The instrument produced must satisfy the conditions necessary to establish its authenticity in the State of origin.

The provisions of Section 3 of Title III shall apply as appropriate.

Article 51

A settlement which has been approved by a court in the course of proceedings and is enforceable in the State in which it was concluded shall be enforceable in the State addressed under the same conditions as authentic instruments.

TITLE V

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 52

In order to determine whether a party is domiciled in the Contracting State whose courts are seised of a matter, the Court shall apply its internal law.

If a party is not domiciled in the State whose courts are seised of the matter, then, in order to determine whether the party is domiciled in another Contracting State, the court shall apply the law of that State.

Article 53

For the purposes of this Convention, the seat of a company or other legal person or association of natural or legal persons shall be treated as its domicile. However, in order to determine that seat, the court shall apply its rules of private international law.

In order to determine whether a trust is domiciled in the Contracting State whose courts are seised of the matter, the court shall apply its rules of private international law.

TITLE VI

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

Article 54

The provisions of this Convention shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted and to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments after its entry into force in the State of origin and, where recognition or enforcement of a judgment or authentic instrument is sought, in the State addressed.

However, judgments given after the date of entry into force of this Convention between the State of origin and the State addressed in proceedings instituted before that date shall be recognized and enforced in accordance with the provisions of Title III if jurisdiction was founded upon rules which accorded with those provided for either in Title II of this Convention or in a convention concluded between the State of origin and the State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

If the parties to a dispute concerning a contract had agreed in writing before the entry into force of this Convention that the contract was to be governed by the law of Ireland or of a part of the United Kingdom, the courts of Ireland or of that part of the United Kingdom shall retain the right to exercise jurisdiction in the dispute.

Article 54A

For a period of three years from the entry into force of this Convention for Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Iceland, Norway, Finland and Sweden, respectively, jurisdiction in maritime matters shall be determined in these States not only in accordance with the provisions of Title II, but also in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 1 to 7 following. However, upon the entry into force of the International Convention relating to the arrest of sea-going ships, signed at Brussels on 10 May 1952, for one of these States, these provisions shall cease to have effect for that State.

A person who is domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued in the courts of one of the States mentioned above in respect of a maritime claim if the ship to which the claim relates or any other ship owned by him has been arrested by judicial process within the territory of the latter State to secure the claim, or could have been so arrested there but bail or other security has been given, and either:

(a) the claimant is domiciled in the latter State; or

(b) the claim arose in the latter State; or

(c) the claim concerns the voyage during which the arrest was made or could have been made; or

(d) the claim arises out of a collision or out of damage caused by a ship to another ship or to goods or persons on board either ship, either by the execution or non-execution of a manoeuvre or by the non-observance of regulations; or

(e) the claim is for salvage; or

(f) the claim is in respect of a mortgage or hypothecation of the ship arrested.

A claimant may arrest either the particular ship to which the maritime claim relates, or any other ship which is owned by the person who was, at the time when the maritime claim arose, the owner of the particular ship. However, only the particular ship to which the maritime claim relates my be arrested in respect of the maritime claims set out under 5. (o), (p) or (q) of this Article.

3.

Ships shall be deemed to be in the same ownership when all the shares therein are owned by the same person or persons.

4.

When in the case of a charter by demise of a ship the charterer alone is liable in respect of a maritime claim relating to that ship, the claimant may arrest that ship or any other ship owned by the charterer, but no other ship owned by the owner may be arrested in respect of such claim. The same shall apply to any case in which a person other than the owner of a ship is liable in respect of a maritime claim relating to that ship.

5.

The expression 'maritime claim' means a claim arising out of one or more of the following:

(a) damage caused by any ship either in collision or otherwise;

(b) loss of life or personal injury caused by any ship or occurring in connection with the operation on any ship;

(c) salvage;

(d) agreement relating to the use or hire of any ship whether by charterparty or otherwise;

(e) agreement relating to the carriage of goods in any ship whether by charterparty or otherwise;

(f) loss of or damage to goods including baggage carried in any ship;

(g) general average;

(h) bottomry;

(i) towage;

(j) pilotage;

(k) goods or materials wherever supplied to a ship for her operation or maintenance;

(l) construction, repair or equipment of any ship or dock charges and dues;

TITLE VII

RELATIONSHIP TO THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION AND TO OTHER CONVENTIONS

Article 54B

1. This Convention shall not prejudice the application by the Member States of the European Communities of the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, signed at Brussels on 27 September 1968 and of the Protocol on interpretation of that Convention by the Court of Justice, signed at Luxembourg on 3 June 1971, as amended by the Conventions of Accession to the said Convention and the said Protocol by the States acceding to the European Communities, all of these Conventions and the Protocol being hereinafter referred to as the 'Brussels Convention'.

2. However, this Convention shall in any event be applied:

(a) in matters of jurisdiction, where the defendant is domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State which is not a member of the European Communities, or where Article 16 or 17 of this Convention confer a jurisdiction on the courts of such a Contracting State;

(b) in relation to a lis pendens or to related actions as provided for in Articles 21 and 22, when proceedings are instituted in a Contracting State which is not a member of the European Communities and in a Contracting State which is a member of the European Communities;

(c) in matters of recognition and enforcement, where either the State of origin or the State addressed is not a member of the European Communities.

3. In addition to the grounds provided for in Title III recognition or enforcement may be refused if the ground of jurisdiction on which the judgment has been based differs from that resulting from this Convention and recognition or enforcement is sought against a party who is domiciled in a Contracting State which is not a member of the European Communities, unless the judgment may otherwiese be recognized or enforced under any rule of law in the State addressed.

Article 56

The Treaty and the conventions referred to in Article 55 shall continue to have effect in relation to matters to which this Convention does not apply.

They shall continue to have effect in respect of judgments given and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments before the entry into force of this Convention.

Article 57

1. This Convention shall not affect any conventions to which the Contracting States are or will be parties and which in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments.

2. This Convention shall not prevent a court of a Contracting State which is party to a convention referred to in the first paragraph from assuming jurisdiction in accordance with that convention, even where the defendant is domiciled in a Contracting State which is not a party to that convention. The court hearing the action shall, in any event, apply Article 20 of this Convention.

3. Judgments given in a Contracting State by a court in the exercise of jurisdiction provided for in a convention referred to in the first paragraph shall be recognized and enforced in the other Contracting States in accordance with Title III of this Convention.

5. Where a convention referred to in the first paragraph to which both the State of origin and the State addressed are parties lays down conditions for the recognition or enforcement of judgments, those conditions shall apply. In any event, the provisions of this Convention which concern the procedures for recognition and enforcement of judgments may be applied.

Article 58

(None)

Article 59

This Convention shall not prevent a Contracting State from assuming, in a convention on the recognition and enforcement of judgments, an obligation towards a third State not to recognize judgments given in other Contracting States against defendants domiciled or habitually resident in the third State where, in cases provided for in Article 4, the judgment could only be founded on a ground of jurisdiction specified in the second paragraph of Article 3.

However, a Contracting State may not assume an obligation towards a third State not to recognize a judgment given in another Contracting State by a court basing its jurisdiction on the presence within that State of property belonging to the defendant, or the seizure by the plaintiff of property situated there:

1. if the action is brought to assert or declare proprietary or possessory rights in that property, seeks to obtain authority to dispose of it, or arises from another issue relating to such property, or

2. if the property constitutes the security for a debt which is the subject-matter of the action.

PROTOCOL 1 on certain questions of jurisdiction, procedure and enforcement

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES HAVE AGREED UPON THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS, WHICH SHALL BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION:

Article I

Any person domiciled in Luxembourg who is sued in a court of another Contracting State pursuant to Article 5 (1) may refuse to submit to the jurisdiction of that court. If the defendant does not enter an appearance the court shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

An agreement conferring jurisdiction, within the meaning of Article 17, shall be valid with respect to a person domiciled in Luxembourg only if that person has expressly and specifically so agreed.

Article Ia1. Switzerland reserves the right to declare, at the time of depositing its instrument of ratification, that a judgment given in another Contracting State shall be neither recognized nor enforced in Switzerland if the following conditions are met:

(a) the jurisdiction of the court which has given the judgment is based only on Article 5 (1) of this Convention; and

(b) the defendant was domiciled in Switzerland at the time of the introduction of the proceedings; for the purposes of this Article, a company or other legal person is considered to be domiciled in Switzerland if it has its registered seat and the effective centre of activities in Switzerland; and

(c) the defendant raises an objection to the recognition or enforcement of the judgment in Switzerland, provided that he has not waived the benefit of the declaration foreseen under this paragraph.

2. This reservation shall not apply to the extent that at the time recognition or enforcement is sought a derogation has been granted from Article 59 of the Swiss Federal Constitution. The Swiss Government shall communicate such derogations to the signatory States and the acceding States.

3. This reservation shall cease to have effect on 31 December 1999. It may be withdrawn at any time.

Article IbAny Contracting State may, by declaration made at the time of signing or of deposit of its instrument of ratification or of accession, reserve the right, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 28, not to recognize and enforce judgments given in the other Contracting States if the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin is based, pursuant to Article 16 (1) (b), exclusively on the domicile of the defendant in the State of origin, and the property is situated in the territory of the State which entered the reservation.

Article II

Without prejudice to any more favourable provisions of national laws, persons domiciled in a Contracting State who are being prosecuted in the criminal courts of another Contracting State of which they are not nationals for an offence which was not intentionally committed may be defended by persons qualified to do so, even if they do not appear in person.

However, the court seised of the matter may order appearance in person; in the case of failure to appear, a judgment given in the civil action without the person concerned having had the opportunity to arrange for his defence need not be recognized or enforced in the other Contracting States.

Article III

In proceedings for the issue of an order for enforcement, no charge, duty or fee calculated by reference to the value of the matter in issue may be levied in the State in which enforcement is sought.

Article IV

Judicial and extrajudicial documents drawn up in one Contracting State which have to be served on persons in another Contracting State shall be transmitted in accordance with the procedures laid down in the conventions and agreements concluded between the Contracting States.

Unless the State in which service is to take place objects by declaration to the Swiss Federal Council, such documents may also be sent by the appropriate public officers of the State in which the document has been drawn up directly to the appropriate public officers of the State in which the addressee is to be found. In this case the officer of the State of origin shall send a copy of the document to the officer of the State applied to who is competent to forward it to the addressee. The document shall be forwarded in the manner specified by the law of the State applied to. The forwarding shall be recorded by a certificate sent directly to the officer of the State of origin.

Article V

The jurisdiction specified in Articles 6 (2) and 10 in actions on a warranty or guarantee or in any other third party proceedings may not be resorted to in the Federal Republic of Germany, in Spain, in Austria and in Switzerland. Any person domiciled in another Contracting State may be sued in the courts:

- of the Federal Republic of Germany, pursuant to Articles 68, 72, 73 and 74 of the code of civil procedure (Zivilprozeßordnung) concerning third-party notices,

- of Spain, pursuant to Article 1482 of the civil code,

- of Austria, pursuant to Article 21 of the code of civil procedure (Zivilprozeßordnung) concerning third-party notices,

- of Switzerland, pursuant to the appropriate provisions concerning third-party notices of the cantonal codes of civil procedure.

Judgments given in the other Contracting States by virtue of Article 6 (2) or 10 shall be recognized and enforced in the Federal Republic of Germany, in Spain, in Austria and in Switzerland in accordance with Title III. Any effects which judgments given in these States may have on third parties by application of the provisions in the preceding paragraph shall also be recognized in the other Contracting States.

Article VaIn matters relating to maintenance, the expression 'court' includes the Danish, Icelandic and Norwegian administrative authorities.

In civil and commercial matters, the expression 'court' includes the Finnish ulosotonhaltija / överexekutor.

Article VbIn proceedings involving a dispute between the master and a member of the crew of a sea-going ship registered in Denmark, in Greece, in Ireland, in Iceland, in Norway, in Portugal or in Sweden concerning remuneration or other conditions of service, a court in a Contracting State shall establish whether the diplomatic or consular officer responsible for the ship has been notified of the dispute. It shall stay the proceedings so long as he has not been notified. It shall of its own motion decline jurisdiction if the officer, having been duly notified, has exercised the powers accorded to him in the matter by a consular convention, or in the absence of such a convention has, within the time allowed, raised any objection to the exercise of such jurisdiction.

Article Vc(None)

Article VdWithout prejudice to the jurisdiction of the European Patent Office under the Convention on the grant of European patents, signed at Munich on 5 October 1973, the courts of each Contracting State shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile, in proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of any European patent granted for that State which is not a Community patent by virtue of the provision of Article 86 of the Convention for the European patent for the common market, signed at Luxembourg on 15 December 1975.

Article VI

The Contracting States shall communicate to the Swiss Federal Council the text of any provisions of their laws which amend either those provisions of their laws mentioned in the Convention or the lists of courts specified in Section 2 of

Title III.

PROTOCOL 2 on the uniform interpretation of the Convention

PREAMBLE

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

HAVING REGARD to Article 65 of this Convention,

CONSIDERING the substantial link between this Convention and the Brussels Convention,

CONSIDERING that the Court of Justice of the European Communities by virtue of the Protocol of 3 June 1971 has jurisdiction to give rulings on the interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels Convention,

BEING AWARE of the rulings delivered by the Court of Justice of the European Communities on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention up to the time of signature of this Convention,

CONSIDERING that the negotiations which led to the conclusion of the Convention were based on the Brussels Convention in the light of these rulings,

DESIRING to prevent, in full deference to the independence of the courts, divergent interpretations and to arrive at as uniform an interpretation as possible of the provisions of the Convention, and of these provisions and those of the Brussels Convention which are substantially reproduced in this Convention,

HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

Article 1

The courts of each Contracting State shall, when applying and interpreting the provisions of the Convention, pay due account to the principles laid down by any relevant decision delivered by courts of the other Contracting States concerning provisions of this Convention.

Article 2

1. The Contracting Parties agree to set up a system of exchange of information concerning judgments delivered pursuant to this Convention as well as relevant judgments under the Brussels Convention. This system shall comprise:

- transmission to a central body by the competent authorities of judgments delivered by courts of last instance and the Court of Justice of the European Communities as well as judgments of particular importance which have become final and have been delivered pursuant to this Convention or the Brussels Convention,

- classification of these judgments by the central body including, as far as necessary, the drawing-up and publication of translations and abstracts,

- communication by the central body of the relevant documents to the competent national authorities of all signatories and acceding States to the Convention and to the Commission of the European Communities.

2. The central body is the Registrar of the Court of Justice of the European Communities.

Article 3

1. A Standing Committee shall be set up for the purposes of this Protocol.

2. The Committee shall be composed of representatives appointed by each signatory and acceding State.

3. The European Communities (Commission, Court of Justice and General Secretariat of the Council) and the European Free Trade Association may attend the meetings as observers.

Article 4

1. At the request of a Contracting Party, the depositary of the Convention shall convene meetings of the Committee for the purpose of exchanging views on the functioning of the Convention and in particular on:

- the development of the case-law as communicated under the first indent of Article 2 (1),

- the application of Article 57 of the Convention.

2. The Committee, in the light of these exchanges, may also examine the appropriateness of starting on particular topics a revision of the Convention and make recommendations.

PROTOCOL 3 on the application of Article 57

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES HAVE AGREED AS FOLLOWS:

1. For the purposes of the Convention, provisions which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments and which are, or will be contained in acts of the institutions of the European Communities shall be treated in the same way as the conventions referred to in Article 57 (1).

2. If one Contracting State is of the opinion that a provision contained in an act of the institutions of the European Communities is incompatible with the Convention, the Contracting States shall promptly consider amending the Convention pursuant to Article 66, without prejudice to the procedure established by Protocol 2.

COUNCIL CONVENTION on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters done at Lugano on 16 September 1988
Official Journal No. C 189, 1990, Item 7
(1990/C 189/07)
REPORT

by Mr P. JENARD
Honorary Director of Administration at the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
and Mr. G. MOLLER
President of the Court of First Instance in Toijala

In addition to the draft Convention and the other instruments drawn up by the government experts, the draft explanatory report was submitted to the Governments of the Member States of the European Communities and of the European Free Trade Association before the Diplomatic Conference held in Lugano from 12 to 16 September 1988. This report takes account of the comments made by certain Governments and of the amendments made by the Diplomatic Conference to the drafts before it. It takes the form of a commentary on the Convention signed in Lugano on 16 September 1988.

LIST OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER 1 GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

1. INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

1. The Lugano Convention, opened for signature on 16 September 1988, is concluded between the Member States of the European Communities and the Member States of the European Free Trade Association (EFTA). It will be referred to in this report as the 'Lugano Convention' although during the preparatory proceedings it was known as the 'Parallel Convention'. It was given that name because it corresponds very closely to the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, which was concluded between the six original Community Member States [FN 1] and adopted consequent upon the accession of new Member States to the Communities [FN 2]. For convenience, that Convention, in its adopted form, will be referred to as the 'Brussels Convention'. Although the Lugano Convention takes not only its structure but also numerous provisions from the Brussels Convention, it is nevertheless a separate instrument.

2. This report does not contain a detailed commentary on all the provisions of the Lugano Convention. Where provisions are identical to those of the Brussels Convention, the reader should refer to the existing reports by Mr P. Jenard on the 1968 Convention, by Mr P. Schlosser on the 1978 Convention on the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom and by Messrs Evrigenis and Kerameus on the 1982 Convention on the accession of Greece [FN 3]. The provisions in force in each of the EFTA Member States on the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments and an account of the relevant conventions concluded by those States with one another or with Member States of the Communities are not included in the body of this report but are given in Annexes I and II. This different layout from previous reports has been adopted so as not to complicate the text.

2. JUSTIFICATION FOR AND BACKGROUND TO THE LUGANO CONVENTION

3. The European Communities and EFTA are at present made up of a great many European countries who share very similar conceptions of constitutional (separation of powers between the legislature, the executive and the judiciary), legal (primacy of the rule of law and the rights of the individual) and economic matters (market economy). The two organizations differ however with regard to their objectives and institutions. That is why we felt it useful to give a brief outline.

A. THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

4. The European Communities differ substantially from the other international or European organizations on account of their particular aims and the originality of their institutional machinery. They pursue the specific objectives assigned to them by the three Treaties establishing them (ECSC, EEC and Euratom) but their ultimate objective is to establish a real European union. The economic dimension of this union in the making is complemented by a political discussion which is expressed through the medium of European Political Cooperation, by means of which the Twelve endeavour to harmonize their foreign policies. The construction of Europe initiated by the six founding States (Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and the Netherlands) took a step forward with the signing first of all of the Treaty of Paris (18 April 1951) which established the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC) and subsequently (on 25 March 1957) of the two Treaties of Rome which laid the foundations of the European Economic Community (EEC) and the European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom). Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom acceded to those three Treaties on 1 January 1973 (the Nine), Greece on 1 January 1981 (the Ten), Spain and Portugal on 1 January 1986 (the Twelve). The European Communities therefore currently comprise twelve European countries which are bound together by jointly undertaken commitments.

5. With the Single European Act, which entered into force on 1 July 1987, a new stage was reached on the path towards a European union. This new Community legal instrument aims in particular at the progressive establishment, over a period expiring on 31 December 1992, of a real internal market providing for the free movement of goods, persons, services and capital. It also aims at promoting significant progress in both the monetary field and new policy sectors (in particular the environment and new technologies). It makes Community decision-making machinery more flexible in a number of fields and, by means of treaty provisions, institutionalizes European political Cooperation.

6. The institutional architecture of the Communities rests on four pillars:

1. The Council of Ministers The Council consists of the representatives of the Member States and each Government delegates one of its members to it, depending on the field of competence and the nature of the subjects under discussion. The Ministers of Foreign Affairs coordinate general Community policy. The Council of Ministers is the Communities' decision-making body. It participates in legislative power and as such is empowered to take binding measures in the form of Regulations or Directives which are directly binding on the Member States and/or their nationals. The Regulations are directly applicable in the Member States, whereas Directives have to be incorporated into national legislation. The Council's decisions are prepared by the Permanent Representatives Committee (Coreper), composed of the Permanent Representatives of the Member States to the European Communities. The Council's decisions are taken unanimously, by a simple majority or by a qualified majority, depending on the legal provisions on which they are based. The Single Act aims at multiplying the cases in which a majority vote becomes standard practice, so as to expedite the proceedings of an enlarged Community. Twice a year the European Council brings together the Heads of State or of Government of the Member States. This body, set up at the highest level on a political basis in 1975, was given Treaty recognition following the adoption of the Single Act. Its main task is to work out guidelines and give the necessary impetus to the development of the Community process.

2. The Commission

The Commission currently consists of 17 members chosen by common agreement by the Governments. The Commission is the most original institution in the Community's institutional machinery. It cannot be likened to a secretariat because the authors of the Treaties chose to make it the prime mover of European integration. It participates actively in the preparation and formulation of the acts of the Council by virtue of its power of initiative.

3. The Court of Justice The role of the Court of Justice is to ensure that Community law is obeyed in the implementation of the three Treaties establishing the European Communities. Its powers are manifold and it has inter alia the power to give rulings in the form of judgments on the validity of the acts of Community authorities and on the interpretation of the Treaties and Community acts. In its decisions, the Court has affirmed the precedence of Community law over Member States' constitutional and legislative provisions. Under the Luxembourg Protocol of 3 June 1971, the Member States of the Communities conferred jurisdiction upon the Court of Justice for giving judgment on the interpretation of the 1968 Brussels Convention, which is of particular concern to us.

4. The European Parliament Since 1979 the Members of the European Parliament have been elected by direct universal suffrage for a five-year term of office. Although the European Parliament has quite extensive powers of political supervision in respect of the action of the Council and the Commission and in the budgetary field, it does not however have legislative powers similar to those of national Parliaments. The Single Act contains new cooperation arrangements designed to involve the Parliament more closely in the exercise of the legislative power conferred jointly upon the Council and the Commission.

7. In conclusion, in the field under review, it should be noted that:

1. the Lugano Convention is linked to the 1968 Brussels Convention which is based on Article 220 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community;

2. with regard to Community acts, legislative power is mainly conferred upon the Council;

3. the European Communities have created a very dense network of relations with the outside world which are embodied in agreements of various kinds, either with States or with organizations.

B. EFTA

8. The European Free Trade Association is a group of six European countries which share with the European Communities the aim of creating a dynamic, homogeneous European economic area embracing the Member States of the EEC and EFTA. That aim was laid down in the Luxembourg Declaration adopted on 9 April 1984 by the Ministers of all EEC and EFTA Member States. EFTA's goal is the removal of import duties, quotas and other obstacles to trade in Western Europe and the upholding of liberal, non-discriminatory practices in international trade. Set up in 1960, the Association now has six member countries: Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. EFTA's establishment and evolution form part of the story of economic integration in Western Europe. Its founder members, which included Denmark, Portugal and the United Kingdom, adopted as their first objective the introduction of free trade between themselves in industrial goods. This objective was realized three years ahead of schedule at the end of 1966.

9. The trade between the EFTA countries accounts for only 13 to 14 % of their overall trade. Much more important is their trade with the EEC which is the source of more than half of their imports and the destination of more than half of their exports. The EFTA countries are also important trading partners for the EEC, providing markets for between a fifth and a quarter of EEC exports (excluding trade between the EEC countries). The closeness of the commercial links between the EFTA and the EEC countries was one of the reasons for the attempt in the 1950s to negotiate a free trade area embracing the original six-nation EEC and the other Western European countries. The attempt failed. But when seven of these countries resolved to strengthen their own links by founding EFTA they saw the Association as, among other things, a means of preparing the way for the eventual fulfilment of their hopes of a single European market. Thus EFTA was born with the ambition of bringing about a larger market including all the countries of Western Europe. This was the second objective of EFTA's founder members. This second goal was in effect achieved in the 1970s through negotiations which brought each of the present EFTA countries into a new relationship with the EEC, and at the same time the EEC was enlarged by the entry of two former EFTA countries, Denmark and the United Kingdom, and of Ireland. Free trade agreements came into force between the enlarged EEC and Austria, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland on 1 January 1973, and the EEC and Iceland on 1 April 1973. Similar agreements came into force between Norway and the EEC on 1 July 1973 and between Finland and the EEC on 1 January 1974. Under these agreements the import duties on almost all industrial products were abolished from July 1977. These free trade agreements also apply to trade between the EFTA countries and three countries which joined the EEC at later dates: Greece from 1 January 1981, Portugal and Spain from 1 January 1986. As mentioned above, the extension and intensification of EEC-EFTA cooperation have given rise since 1984 to talks between the two groups of States in many areas connected, directly or indirectly, with the EEC's ambitious programme for the creation of a genuine internal market in 1992. They concern matters such as technical barriers to trade, competition rules, intellectual property rights, product liability, etc. The negotiations for the Lugano Convention came within that context.

C. JUSTIFICATION FOR THE CONVENTION

10. According to a report produced by Mr Johnsen for the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (document 5774 of 9 September 1987 FDO C5774), 'the Member States of EFTA and the EEC now make up a vast market of 350 million European consumers. With a few exceptions, industrial products circulate within this area without being subject to custom duties or quantitative restrictions. It is the largest market in the world, surpassing the United States market (240 million) and the Japanese market (120 million).' It thus became apparent that this economic cooperation between the two groupings of European States ought to be strengthened through a convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments. In this connection, the Brussels Convention was considered to embody a number of principles which could serve to strengthen judicial and economic cooperation between the States involved. The aim of the Brussels Convention is to simplify the formalities needed for mutual recognition and enforcement of court decisions. For this reason the Convention begins by specifying the rules of jurisdiction regarding the courts before which proceedings are to be brought in civil and commercial matters relating to property. The Convention goes on to lay down a procedure for the enforcement of judgments given in another Member State which is simpler than traditional arrangements and swift because the initial stages are non-adversarial. The Brussels Convention and the 1971 Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice have both assumed considerable practical importance: hundreds of decisions based on the Convention have been given in the Member States and there is a series of interpretative judgments of the Court (see Chapter VI). Because of the magnitude of trade between the EEC Member States and EFTA, it was to be expected that the need would arise for a judgment given in a Community Member State to be enforced in an EFTA country, or for a judgment given in an EFTA member country to be enforced in a Member State of the European Communities. D. BACKGROUND TO THE CONVENTION

11. In 1973, when discussions over the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom to the Brussels Convention were under way, the Swedish Government indicated its interest in the creation of contractual links between the Community Member States on the one hand, and Sweden plus other countries which might be interested on the other hand, with a view to facilitating the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. In 1981, the Swiss Mission to the European Communities took up the Swedish Government's initiative and inquired of the competent authorities of the Commission whether and on what terms the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters between the Member States of the Communities and Switzerland could be facilitated along the lines of the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968. The inquiry was renewed in April 1982 to Mr Thorn, President of the Commission, by Mr Furgler, Member of the Swiss Federal Council. In January 1985, acting on the instructions of the Council of the European Communities, an ad hoc working party met to examine, on the basis of a paper submitted by the Commission, the possibility of organizing negotiations with the EFTA countries with a view to extending the Brussels Convention. With the assistance of the Council Secretariat and the Commission departments, preliminary talks were entered into with the Member States of EFTA in order to establish whether an extension of the Brussels Convention could be envisaged. It emerged that Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Finland, and subsequently Iceland, were in favour of opening negotiations on the drafting of a parallel Convention to the Brussels Convention. At the end of this exploratory stage, the representatives of the Governments of the EEC Member States, meeting in the permanent Representatives Committee in May 1985, noted that all the conditions obtained for negotiations to be initiated. They therefore agreed to issue an invitation to the EFTA Member States to take part in such negotiations. A working party made up of governmental experts from the Member States of the European Communities and experts appointed by the EFTA Member States was set up to this end. The working party met for the first time on 8 and 9 October 1985 under the alternating chairmanship of Mr Voyame, Director at the Ministry of Justice of the Swiss Confederation, and Mr Saggio, Counsellor at the Italian Court of Appeal. A delegation sent by the Austrian Government attended the negotiations in an observer capacity, as did representatives of The Hague Conference. The working party also appointed two rapporteurs, Mr P. Jenard, at the time Director of Administration at the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, for the Member States of the European Communities and Mr Moller, at that time Counsellor on Legislation to the Finnish Ministry of Justice and now President of the Court of First Instance in Toijala, for the EFTA Member States. The working party's discussions lasted two years, during which a preliminary draft Convention was prepared for use as the basic document for a diplomatic conference. An overall assessment of the results achieved by the working party can be nothing if not positive, since wide consensus was reached with regard to the draft Convention, to the Protocols which supplement it and are an integral part thereof, and to three Declarations. At all events, the conclusion of a multilateral Convention between a number of States offers better prospects of legal certainty and practical convenience than a series of bilateral, and inescapably divergent, agreements. The Convention also opens the way towards implementation of a common system of interpretation, a point which is specifically mentioned in Protocol 2. Another possibility might have been for the EFTA Member States to accede to the Brussels Convention. This possibility was not followed up because, being based on Article 220 of the Treaty of Rome and being the subject of the Protocol of 3 June 1971 which entrusted the Court of Justice of the European Communities with the power to interpret the Convention, the Brussels Convention is a Community instrument and it would have been difficult to ask non-Member States to become signatories.

12. The draft Convention and the other instruments drawn up by the working party were submitted to a diplomatic conference held, at the invitation of the Swiss Federal Government, in Lugano from 12 to 16 September 1988. All the Member States of the European Communities and of the European Free Trade Association were represented at this conference. Certain amendments were made to the drafts prepared by the working party. In accordance with the Final Act of the conference (see Annex III), the representatives of all the States concerned adopted the final texts of the Convention, the three Protocols and the three Declarations. On 16 September 1988, the date of opening for signature, the required signatures were appended by the representatives of 10 States, that is, for the Member States of the European Communities, Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg and Portugal, and for the Member States of EFTA, Iceland, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The Convention was signed by Finland on 30 November 1988 and by the Netherlands on 7 February 1989.

3. IDENTITY OF STRUCTURE BETWEEN THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION AND THE LUGANO CONVENTION - FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

13. The two Conventions are based on identical fundamental principles which can be summarized as follows: First principle: The scope of the two Conventions as determined ratione materiae is confined to civil and commercial matters relating to property. The two Conventions have the same Article 1. Second principle: Both Conventions fall into the 'double treaty' category, that is to say they contain rules of direct jurisdiction. These rules are applicable in the State in which the initial proceedings are brought and serve to determine the court vested with jurisdiction, whereas 'simple treaties' merely contain rules of indirect jurisdiction which do not apply until the stage of recognition and enforcement has been reached. Third principle: A defendant's domicile is the point on which the rules on jurisdiction hinge. For the purposes of the 1978 Accession Convention, the United Kingdom and Ireland adjusted their legislation to align their concept of domicile on that of many continental countries [FN 4]. Proceedings against any person domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State must, save where the Conventions provide otherwise, be brought before the courts of that State. Under no circumstances may rules of exorbitant jurisdiction be invoked as arguments (Articles 2 and 3). However, where a defendant is not domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State jurisdiction continues to be determined in each State by the law of that State. Furthermore, persons domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State may, regardless of their nationality, avail themselves of the rules of jurisdiction which apply in that State, including exorbitant jurisdiction (Article 4), in the same way as nationals of that State. Fourth principle: Both Conventions contain precise and detailed rules of jurisdiction specifying the instances in which a person domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued in the courts of another Contracting State. In this respect, the structures of the two Conventions are again identical, these rules being contained in the following sections. (a) Additional rules of jurisdiction Title II, Section 2 (Articles 5 and 6) contains additional rules of jurisdiction in that the courts therein specified are not mentioned in Article 2. The section relates to proceedings which can be considered as having a particularly close link with the court before which proceedings are brought. The rules of jurisdiction set out in this section are special because, in general, both Conventions directly specify which court has jurisdiction. As will be seen below, there are certain differences between the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention with regard to the provisions contained in this section (see Article 5 (1) and Article 6 (4), points 36 to 44, 46 and 47). (b) Mandatory rules Both Conventions contain mandatory rules on jurisdiction in matters relating to insurance (Section 3) and consumer contracts (Section 4), the primary objective of which is to protect the weaker party. The rules are mandatory in that the parties are not permitted to depart from them before a dispute has arisen. These sections are the same in both Conventions. (c) Exclusive jurisdiction Both Conventions contain rules of exclusive jurisdiction (Section 5, Article l6): (a) in some cases, disputes must be brought before the courts of a given State (rights in rem in, or tenancies of, immovable property; validity, nullity or dissolution of companies; validity of entries in public registers; registration or validity of patents, trade marks and designs; proceedings concerned with the enforcement of judgments); (b) the parties are not permitted to waive the jurisdiction of the competent courts, either by an agreement conferring jurisdiction even if entered into after a dispute has arisen (Article 17), or by submission to the jurisdiction (Article

18); (c) a court of a State other than the State whose courts have exclusive jurisdiction must declare, of its own motion, that it has no jurisdiction (Article 19); (d) breach of the rules constitutes grounds for refusing recognition and enforcement (Articles 28 and 34); (e) the rules apply whether or not the defendant is domiciled in a Contracting State. The only difference between the two Conventions relates to tenancies of immovable property (see points 49 to 54). (d) Prorogation of jurisdiction The two Conventions also contain rules of prorogation of jurisdiction by agreement or tacitly (Title II, Section 6, Articles 17 and 18). The Conventions differ in the case of Article 17 (prorogation by agreement see points 55 to 61) but not in the case of Article 18 (submission to jurisdiction). (e) Lis pendens and related actions Both Conventions contain provisions on the case of a lis pendens (Article 21) and related actions (Article 22) in Section 8, the aim of which is to avoid conflicting judgments. The wordings differ slightly here with regard to a lis pendens (see point 62). Fifth principle: The defendant's rights must have been respected in the State of origin. Both Conventions provide in the first paragraph of Article 20, the importance of which should be emphasized, that if a defendant does not enter an appearance the court must declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction unless its jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of the Convention. The second and third paragraphs of Article 20 cover the problem of notification of legal documents to the defendant, the court being obliged to stay its proceedings so long as it has not been shown that the defendant was able to receive the document instituting the proceedings in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence. This Article has not been amended. Sixth principle: Grounds for refusing recognition and enforcement are limited. Pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 26 of both Conventions, judgments given in a Contracting State must be recognized in the other Contracting States without any special procedure being required. In other words, judgments are entitled to automatic recognition: the Conventions establish the presumption in favour of recognition and the only grounds for refusal are those listed in Articles 27 and 28. There are two conditions which agreements such as this usually contain but which these two Conventions omit: recognition does not require that the foreign judgment should have become res judicata, and the jurisdiction of the court in the State of origin is no longer examined by the court of the State in which enforcement is being sought. In this respect there are some differences between the two Conventions with regard to Article 28 (see points 16 and 82). Seventh principle: The enforcement procedure is unified and simplified. It is unified in that, in every Contracting State, the procedure is initiated by submission of an application. It is simplified in particular with reference to the appeals procedure. The Lugano Convention makes a number of technical adjustments as against the 1968 Convention (see points 68 to 70). Eighth principle: The Conventions govern relations with other international Conventions. On this point, and with regard to Conventions concluded on particular matters, there are a few differences between the two Conventions (see points 79 to 82). Ninth principle: Steps are taken to ensure that interpretation of the two Conventions is uniform. Interpretation of the 1968 Convention is entrusted to the Court of Justice by the Luxembourg Protocol of 3 June 1971. Interpretation of the Lugano Convention is governed by Protocol 2 to that Convention (see points 110 to 119). CHAPTER II RESPECTIVE SCOPE OF THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION AND THE LUGANO CONVENTION (Article 54b) remain separate Conventions.

15. The respective application of the two Conventions is governed by Article 54b. The first point to note is that this Article primarily concerns the courts of member countries of the European Communities, these being the only courts which may be required to deliver judgments pursuant to either Convention. Courts in EFTA Member States are not bound by the Brussels Convention since the EFTA States are not parties to that Convention. However, Article 54b is relevant for the courts of EFTA countries since it was felt advantageous that Article 54b should, for reasons of clarity, contain details relating to the case of a lis pendens, related actions and recognition and enforcement of judgments. The philosophy of Article 54b is as follows: According to paragraph 1, the Brussels Convention continues to apply in relations between Member States of the European Communities. This applies in particular where: (a) a person, of whatever nationality, domiciled in one Community State, e.g. France, is summoned to appear before a court in another such State, e.g. Italy. The plaintiffs nationality and domicile are immaterial; (b) a judgment has been delivered in one European Community Member State, e.g. France, and must be recognized or enforced in another such State, e.g. Italy. The Brussels Convention also applies where a person domiciled outside the territory of a European Community Member State and outside the territory of any other State party to the Lugano Convention, e.g. in the United States, is summoned to appear before a court in a European Community Member State (Article 4 of the Brussels Convention). In each of these three instances, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has jurisdiction under the 1971 Protocol to rule on problems which may arise with regard to the interpretation of the Brussels Convention.

16. However, under paragraph 2, the court of a European Community Member State must apply the Lugano Convention where: (1) a defendant is domiciled in the territory of a State which is party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA member or is deemed to be so domiciled under Articles 8 or 13 of the Convention. For instance, if a person domiciled in Norway is summoned before a French court, jurisdiction will be vested in that court only in the cases for which the Lugano Convention provides. In particular the rules of exorbitant jurisdiction provided for in Article 4 of the Brussels Convention may not be relied on as against that person; (2) the courts of an EFTA Member State possess exclusive jurisdiction (Article 16) or jurisdiction by prorogation (Article 17). The courts of Member States of the European Communities may not, for instance, be seised of a dispute relating to rights in rem in immovable property situated in the territory of a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State, notwithstanding Article 16 (1) of the Brussels Convention, which will apply only if the immovable property is situated in the territory of a State party to the 1968 Convention; (3) recognition or enforcement of a judgment delivered in a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State is being sought in a Community Member State (paragraph 2 (c)). Paragraph 2 also provides that the Lugano Convention applies where a judgment delivered in a Community Member State is to be enforced in an EFTA Member State party to the Lugano Convention. This does not resolve potential conflicts between the two Conventions, but it does define their respective scope. Obviously if a judgment has been delivered in a State party to the Lugano Convention and an EFTA Member State and is to be enforced either in a Community Member State or in an EFTA Member State, the Brussels Convention does not apply; (4) Article 54b also contains provisions relating to a lis pendens (Article 21) and related actions (Article 22). Under Article 54b (2) (b) a court in a Community Member State must apply these Articles of the Lugano Convention if a court in an EFTA Member State is seised of the same dispute or a related claim. Apart from the greater clarity which they bring, these provisions serve a double purpose: to remove all uncertainty, and to ensure that judgments delivered in the different States concerned do not conflict; (5) Article 54b (3) provides that a court in an EFTA Member State may refuse recognition or enforcement of a judgment delivered by a court in a Community Member State if the grounds on which the latter court has based its jurisdiction are not provided for in the Lugano Convention and if recognition or enforcement is being sought against a party who is domiciled in any EFTA Contracting State. These grounds for refusal are additional to those provided for in Article 28, and arise essentially from a guarantee sought by the EFTA Member States. The cases involved can be expected to arise relatively seldom, since the Conventions are so similar in respect of their rules of jurisdiction. The possibility nevertheless remains. The case would arise in the event of a judgment on a contract of employment delivered by a court in a Community Member State which had erroneously based its jurisdiction with regard to a person domiciled in an EFTA Member State either on Article 4 or Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention, i.e. in a manner inconsistent with Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention, which includes a specific provision on contracts of employment, or on an agreement conferring jurisdiction which predated the origin of the dispute (Article 17). However, in the interests of freedom of movement of judgments, the judgment will be recognized and enforced provided that this can be done in accordance with the rules of common law of the State addressed, in particular its common law rules on the jurisdiction of foreign courts; (6) for convenience, we have used the term 'EFTA Member States' in the above examples. Obviously, the same arrangements would apply to States which are not members of either the EEC or EFTA but accede to the Lugano Convention (see Article 62 (1) (b)).

17. The question remained unresolved as to how the Lugano Convention would apply between Community Member States one of which was not a party to the Brussels Convention such as, for instance, Spain or Portugal, while both were parties to the Lugano Convention. The issue would, for example, arise should both Belgium and Spain become parties to the Lugano Convention before the Treaty on the accession of Spain to the Brussels Convention has been concluded or has entered into force and should enforcement of a judgment delivered in one of these States be requested in the other. In the rapporteurs opinion, the Lugano Convention would, as a source of law, apply in the case in point pending entry into force between Belgium and Spain of the Treaty on the accession of Spain to the Brussels Convention.

CHAPTER III PROVISIONS WHICH DISTINGUISH THE LUGANO CONVENTION FROM THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION 1. SUMMARY OF THESE PROVISIONS

18. The amendments are not numerous. Before considering them in detail it might be helpful to list the Articles in the Lugano Convention which differ from the corresponding Articles in the Brussels Convention. Article 3 This Article adds the rules of exorbitant jurisdiction current in the EFTA Member States and in Portugal. It should be noted that no such rules exist in Spain. Article 5 (1) A special provision has been inserted covering matters relating to contracts of employment. Article 6 A new paragraph 4 relates to the combination of proceedings in rem with proceedings in personam. Article 16 Matters relating to tenancies in immovable property are the subject of a new provision (paragraph 1 (b)) and of a reservation (Protocol No 1, Article 1b). Article 17 This Article has been amended with regard to the reference to commercial practices and contracts of employment. Article 21 The reference in this Article to lis pendens has been somewhat amended. Article 28 This Article now contains further grounds for refusing recognition and enforcement. Articles 31 to 41 Technical modifications have been made to some of these Articles with regard to procedure for enforcement and modes of appeal. Article 50 The wording of this Article, which concerns authentic instruments, has been slightly altered. Article 54 This Article has been clarified with regard to the transitional provisions. Article 54A This Article is based on Article 36 of the 1978 Accession Convention and contains additions. Article 54B This is a new Article governing the respective scope of the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention. Article 55 This Article concerns relations with other conventions and refers only to conventions to which EFTA Member States are party. Article 57 This Article governs implementation of conventions concluded with regard to particular matters and differs appreciably from Article 57 of the Brussels Convention. Articles 60 to 68 (Final provisions) These Articles have been amended.

19. Protocol 1 Article 1a This new Article contains a reservation requested by the Swiss delegation. Article 1b This new Article contains a reservation resulting from the amendment of Article 16 (1) relating to tenancies in immovable property. Article V This Article covers actions on a warranty or guarantee and contains additions covering current legislation in several States. Article Va The Article covers maintenance matters in particular and contains additions to take account of the situation in several States. Article Vb This Article covers disputes between the master and a member of the crew of a vessel and again contains additions to take account of the laws in a number of States.

20. Protocol 2 This Protocol has been added in order to ensure that, as far as possible, the Lugano Convention and the provisions therein which are identical to the Brussels Convention are interpreted uniformly.

21. Protocol 3 This Protocol deals with the problem of Community acts.

22. Declarations First Declaration: supplementary to Protocol 3. Second and Third Declarations: supplementary to Protocol 2 on the uniform interpretation of the Lugano Convention. 2. DETAILED EXAMINATION TITLE I SCOPE OF THE LUGANO CONVENTION (Article 1)

23. Since this differs in no respect from the Brussels Convention, the reader is referred to the Jenard and Schlosser reports. TITLE II JURISDICTION (Articles 2 to 24) Section 1 General provisions (Articles 2 to 4)

(a) Introductory remarks

24. The proposed adaptations to Articles 2 to 4 are confined to mentioning, in the second paragraph of Article 3, certain exorbitant jurisdictions in the legal systems of the EFTA Member States and of Portugal. A brief explanation of the proposed additional provisions (see point 1) precedes, as in the Schlosser report, two more general remarks on the relevance of these provisions to the whole structure of the Lugano Convention.

(b) Exorbitant jurisdictional bases in force in the EFTA Member States and Portugal

1. Austria

25. Article 99 of the Law on Court Jurisdiction (Jurisdiktionsnorm) provides that any person neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in Austria may, in matters relating to property, be sued in the court for any place where he has assets or where the disputed property is located. The value of the assets located in Austria may, however, not be considerably lower than the value of the matter in dispute. Foreign establishments, foundations, companies, cooperatives and associations may, according to the abovementioned Article (paragraph 3), also be sued in the court for the place where they have their permanent representation for Austria or an agency.

2. Finland

26. The second sentence of Article 1 of Chapter 10 of the Finnish Code of Judicial Procedure provides that a person who has no habitual residence in Finland may be sued in the court of the place where the documents instituting the proceeding were served on him or in the court of the place where he has assets. The third sentence of the same Article provides that a Finnish national who is staying abroad may also be sued in the court for the place where he had his last residence in Finland. The fourth sentence of the same Article provides that a foreign national, having neither domicile nor residence in Finland may, unless there is a special provision to the contrary as to nationals of a particular State, be sued in the court for the place where the documents instituting the proceedings were served on him or in the court for the place where he has assets.

3. Iceland

27. Article 77 of the Icelandic Civil Proceedings Act provides that in matters relating to property obligations to Icelandic citizens, firms etc. any person not domiciled in that country may be sued in the court for the place where the person was when the documents instituting the proceedings were served on him or where he has assets.

4. Norway

28. Article 32 of the Norwegian Civil Proceedings Act provides that any person not domiciled in Norway may be sued, in matters relating to property, in the court for the place where he has assets or where the disputed property is located at the time when the documents instituting the proceedings were served on him.

5. Sweden

29. The first sentence of Section 3 of Chapter 10 of the Swedish Code of Judicial Procedure provides that anyone without a known domicile in Sweden may be sued, in matters concerning payment of a debt, in the court for the place where he has assets.

6. Switzerland

30. Article 40 of the Federal Law on Private International Law states that if there is no other provision on jurisdiction in Swiss law an action concerning sequestration may be brought before the court for the place where the goods were attached in Switzerland.

7. Portugal

31. Article 65 of Chapter II of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a foreign national may be sued in a Portuguese court where: - (paragraph 1 (c)) the plaintiff is Portuguese and, if the situation were reversed, he could be sued in the courts of the State of which the defendant is a national,

- (paragraph 2) under Portuguese law, the court with jurisdiction would be that of the defendant's domicile, if the latter is a foreigner who has been resident in Portugal for more than six months or who is fortuitously on Portuguese territory provided that, in the latter case, the obligation which is the subject of the dispute was entered into in Portugal. Article 65a (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure confers exclusive jurisdiction on Portuguese courts for actions relating to employment relationships if any of the parties is of Portuguese nationality. Article 11 of the Code of Labour Procedure gives jurisdiction to Portuguese labour courts for disputes concerning a Portuguese worker where the contract was concluded in Portugal.

(c) The relevance of the second paragraph of Article 3 to the whole structure of the Lugano Convention

1. Scope of the second paragraph of Article 3

32. The rejection as exorbitant of jurisdictional bases hitherto considered to be important in the various States should not, any more than the second paragraph of Article 3 of the 1968 Brussels Convention, mislead anyone as regards the scope of the first paragraph of Article 3. Only particularly extravagant claims to international jurisdiction for the courts of a Contracting State are expressly underlined. Other rules founding jurisdiction in the national laws of the Contracting States also remain compatible with the Lugano Convention only to the extent that they do not offend against Article 2 and Articles 4 to 18. Thus, for example, the jurisdiction of Swedish courts in respect of persons domiciled in a Contracting State can no longer be based, in contractual matters, on the fact that the contract was entered into in Sweden.

2. Impossibility of founding jurisdiction on the location of property

33. With regard to Austria, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Iceland, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom, the list in the second paragraph of Article 3 contains provisions rejecting jurisdiction derived solely from the existence of property in the territory of the State in which the court is situated. Such jurisdiction cannot be invoked even if the proceedings concern a dispute over rights of ownership, or possession or the capacity to dispose of the specific property in question.

34. With regard to Switzerland, the list in the second paragraph contains a provision rejecting jurisdiction derived solely from an attachment of property located in Switzerland. There is, however, no obstacle for Swiss courts pursuant to Article 24, to grant such provisional, including protective, measures as may be available under the law of Switzerland, even if, under the Convention, the courts of another Contracting State have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

35. As regards persons who are domiciled outside the Contracting States, the provisions which hitherto governed the jurisdiction of courts in the Contracting States remain unaffected. Even the rules on jurisdiction mentioned in the second paragraph of Article 3 may continue to apply to such persons. Judgments delivered by courts which thus have jurisdiction must also be recognized and enforced in other Contracting States unless one of the exceptions in paragraph 5 of Article 27 or in Article 59 of the Convention applies. The latter provision is the only one concerning which the list in Article 3 second paragraph is not only of illustrative significance, but has direct and restrictive importance.

Section 2 Special jurisdiction (Articles 5 and 6)

(a) Article 5 (1) - Contract of employment

36. The domicile of the defendant constitutes the basic rule of both the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention. However, Section 2 (Articles 5 and 6) of Title II on jurisdiction contains a number of supplementary provisions. Under these provisions, the plaintiff may choose to bring the action in the court specified in Section 2, or in the courts of the State in which the defendant is domiciled (Article 2). Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention provides that the defendant may be sued in 'matters relating to a contract, in the courts for the place of performance of the obligation in question'.

37. This paragraph is applicable with regard to a contract of employment (see Jenard report, p. 24 and Chapter VI: judgment of the Court of Justice of 13 November 1979 in Sanicentral v. Collin, according to which employment legislation comes within the Convention's scope). When asked to give a ruling on this matter, the Court of Justice ruled that the obligation to be taken into account in the case of claims based on different obligations arising under a contract of employment as a representative binding a worker to an undertaking was the obligation which characterized the contract, i.e. that of the place where the work was carried out (judgment of the Court of 26 May 1982 in Ivenel v. Schwab, see Chapter VI). This ruling was based, amongst other things, on Article 6 of the Rome Convention on the law applicable to contractual obligations (OJ No L 266, 1980, p. 1), which provides that in matters relating to an employment contract, the contract 'is to be governed, in the absence of choice of the applicable law, by the law of the country in which the employee habitually carries out his work in performance of the contract, unless it appears that the contract is more closely connected with another country'. In the above judgment, the Court commented that the aim of this provision was to secure adequate protection for the party who from the socioeconomic point of view was to be regarded as the weaker in the contractual relationship (see also Giuliano-Lagarde report, OJ No C 282, 1982, p. 25). In another ruling, the Court of Justice observed that contracts of employment, like other contracts for work other than on a self-employed basis, differed from other contracts - even those for the provision of services - by virtue of certain particularities: they created a lasting bond which brought the worker to some extent within the organizational framework of the business of the undertaking or employer, and they were linked to the place where the activities were pursued, which determined the application of mandatory rules and collective agreements (judgment of 15 January 1987 in Shenavai v. Kreischer, see Chapter VI). During negotiation of the Lugano Convention the EFTA Member States requested that, in respect of Article 5 and Article 17 (for this last Article, see point 60), matters relating to employment contracts should be the subject of a separate provision. This request was granted.

38. Under the new Article 5 (1) on matters relating to contracts of employment, the place of performance of the obligation in question is deemed to be that where the employee habitually carries out his work. If he does not habitually carry out his work in any one country, the place is that in which is situated the place of business through which he was engaged. It should be noted that such an issue is currently before the Court of Justice (see Chapter VI, Six Constructions v. Humbert case). As we have seen, this provision is in line with the previous judgments of the Court of Justice corresponding quite closely to Article 6 of the Rome Convention [FN 5].

39. The stipulation in Article 5 (1) gives rise to the following comments: According to the general structure of the Lugano Convention, the following have jurisdiction where there are disputes between employers and employees: - the courts of the State in which the defendant is domiciled (Article 2), - the courts specified in Article 5 (1). If an employee habitually carries out his work in the same country, but not in any particular place, the internal law of that country will determine the court which has jurisdiction, - courts on which jurisdiction has been conferred by an agreement entered into after the dispute has arisen (see Article 17 (5)), - courts whose jurisdiction is implied by submission (Article 18). However, these rules do not apply unless the dispute contains an extraneous element. The Conventions only lay down rules of international jurisdiction (see preamble). They have no effect if the contract (domicile of the employer, domicile of the employee and place of work) is actually situated in a single country. In this connection, the employee's nationality must not be taken into account, as the employee must be treated in the same way as other employees. On the other hand, if the defendant is domiciled outside the territory of one of the Contracting States, Article 4 is applicable.

40. Where the defendant does not habitually carry out his work in any one country, the courts of the place in which the place of business through which he was engaged is situated will have jurisdiction. This system is in keeping with that laid down by Article 6 (2) (b) of the Rome Convention on the law applicable to contractual obligations. The purpose of the provision is to avoid increasing the number of courts with jurisdiction in disputes between employers and employees where the employee is required to carry out his work in several countries. In addition, for States parties to the Rome Convention and the Lugano Convention, jurisdiction will be congruent with the applicable law. The same applies in some States which are not parties to the Rome Convention.

41. The question whether a contract of employment exists is not settled by the Convention. If the judge to whom the matter has been referred gives an affirmative reply to this question, he will have to apply the second part of Article 5 (1), which constitutes a specific provision. Although there is as yet no independent concept of what constitutes a contract of employment, it may be considered that it presupposes a relationship of subordination of the employee to the employer (see Chapter VI, judgments in Shenavai v. Kreischer, cited earlier, and in Arcado v. Haviland of 8 March 1988).

42. Article 5 (1) refers only to individual employment relationships, and not to collective agreements between employers and workers' representatives.

43. The term 'place of business' is to be understood in the broad sense; in particular, it covers any entity such as a branch or an agency with no legal personality.

44. In conclusion, it may be considered that although the texts of the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention are not identical, they do converge, particularly by reason of the interpretation by the Court of Justice of Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention.

(b) Article 6 (1) - Co-defendants

45. No change has been made to the text of the Brussels Convention which provides that 'a person domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued, where he is one of a number of defendants, in the courts for the place where any one of them is domiciled'. However, this provision was taken over verbatim only in the light of the comments made in the Jenard report on the 1968 Convention (OJ No C 59/79, p. 26) to the effect that 'in order for this rule to be applicable there must be a connection between the claims made against each of the defendants, as for example in the case of joint debtors. It follows that action cannot be brought solely with the object of ousting the jurisdiction of the courts of the State in which the defendant is domiciled.' A few days after the diplomatic conference ended, the Court of Justice delivered a judgment along these lines (judgment of 27 September 1988 in Kalfelis v. Schroder, see Chapter VI, OJ No C 281, 4. 11. 1988, p. 18).

(c) Article 6 (4) - Combination of actions in rem and in personam

46. When a person has a mortgage on immovable property the owner of that property is quite often also personally liable for the secured debt. Therefore it has been made possible in some States to combine an action concerning the personal liability of the owner with an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property. This presupposes of course that the court for the place where the immovable property is situated also has jurisdiction as to actions concerning the personal liability of the owner. It was agreed that it was practical that an action concerning the personal liability of the owner of an immovable property could be combined with an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property in those States where such a combination of actions was possible. Therefore it was deemed appropriate to include in the Convention a provision according to which a person domiciled in a Contracting State also may be sued in matters relating to a contract, if the action may be combined with an action against the same defendant in matters relating to rights in rem in immovable property, in the court of the Contracting State in which the property is situated. To illustrate, let us assume that a person domiciled in France is the owner of an immovable property situated in Norway. This person has raised a loan which is secured through a mortgage on his immovable property in Norway. In the eventuality of the loan not being repaid when due, if the creditor wishes to bring an action for the enforced sale of the immovable property, the Norwegian court has exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 (1). However, under the present provision, this court also has jurisdiction as to an action against the owner of the property concerning his personal liability for the debt, if the creditor wishes to combine the latter action with an action for the enforced sale of the property.

47. It is evident that this jurisdictional basis cannot exist by itself.

It must necessarily be supplemented by legal criteria which determine on which conditions such a combination is possible. Thus the provisions already existing in or which in the future may be introduced into the legal systems of the Contracting States with reference to the combining of the abovementioned actions remain unaffected by the Lugano Convention. It goes without saying however that the combination of the two actions which this paragraph deals with have to be instituted by the 'same claimant'. The same claimant includes of course also a person to whom another person has transferred his rights or his successor. Sections 3 and 4 Jurisdiction in matters relating to insurance (Articles 7 to 12a) and over consumer contracts (Articles 13 to 15)

48. Since no amendments have been made to these sections, reference should be made to the Jenard and Schlosser reports.

Section 5
Exclusive jurisdiction

Article 16 (1) - Tenancies

49. Under Article 16 (1) of the Brussels Convention, only courts of the Contracting State in which the immovable property is situated have jurisdiction concerning rights in rem in, or tenancies of, immovable property. Thus the wording covers not only all disputes concerning rights in rem in immovable property, but also those relating to tenancies of such property. According to the Jenard report (p. 35), the Committee which drafted the Brussels Convention intended to cover disputes between landlord and tenant over the existence or interpretation of tenancy agreements, compensation for damage caused by the tenant, eviction, etc. The rule was, according to the same report, not intended by the Committee to apply to proceedings concerned only with the recovery of rent, since such proceedings can be considered to relate to a subject-matter which is quite distinct from the rented property itself. The working party which drafted the Convention on the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Brussels Convention and to the Protocol on its interpretation by the Court of Justice was, however, according to the Schlosser report (paragraph 164), unable to agree whether actions concerned only with rent, i.e. dealing simply with recovery of a debt, are excluded from the scope of Article 16 (1). As stated in the Jenard report, the reference to tenancies in Article 16 (1) of the Brussels Convention includes tenancies of dwellings and of premises for professional or commercial use, and agricultural holdings. According to the Schlosser report, the underlying principle of the provision quite clearly does not require its application to short-term agreements for use and occupation such as, for example, holiday accommodation [sic].

50. The Court of Justice of the European Communities has ruled that Article 16 (1) does not cover disputes relating to transfer of an usufructuary right in immovable property (judgment of 14 December 1977 in Sanders v. Van der Putte, see Chapter VI). The Court held that Article 16 (1) must not be interpreted as including an agreement to rent under a usufructuary lease a retail business carried on in immovable property rented from a third person by the lessor. However, departing from the intentions of the authors of the 1968 Convention, the Court of Justice recently ruled that the exclusive jurisdiction provided for in Article 16 (1) also applies to proceedings in respect of the payment of rent, and that this includes short-term lettings of holiday homes (judgment of 18 January 1985 in Rosler v. Rottwinkel, see Chapter VI). The Court held that this exclusive jurisdiction applies to all lettings of immovable property, even for short term and even where they relate only to the use and occupation of a holiday home and that this jurisdiction covers all disputes concerning the obligations of the landlord or the tenant under a tenancy, in particular those concerning the existence of tenancies or the interpretation of the terms thereof, their duration, the giving up of possession to the landlord, the repairing of damage caused by the tenant or the recovery of rent and of incidental charges for the consumption of water, gas and electricity. This decision seems at least partially to be in contradiction with what, according to the Jenard and Schlosser reports, was the intention of those who drafted the Brussels Convention.

51. Having regard especially to the ruling given by the Court of Justice in the case of Rosler v. Rottwinkel, the EFTA Member States insisted on the inclusion of a special provision concerning short-term tenancies of immovable property in the Lugano Convention. As an alternative, these States put forward the idea of excluding tenancies totally from the scope of the Convention or particularly from Article 16. The working party agreed that it was inappropriate to exclude tenancies altogether from the scope of the Convention, in view of the importance of this matter. As to the proposal for excluding tenancies from Article 16 especially, the delegations of the Community Member States found such a solution totally unacceptable as the normal jurisdiction rules of the Convention would have been applicable to tenancies of immovable property, which was alien to the whole philosophy existing in this respect at least in the Community States. Thus the working party decided to include in Article 16 (1) a new subparagraph

(b) containing a special provision concerning short-term tenancies.

52. The result of this change is that, where tenancies are concerned, there will be two exclusive jurisdictions, which might be described as alternative exclusive jurisdictions. Under subparagraph (a), the courts of the Contracting State in which the immovable property is situated will always have jurisdiction without restriction. However, under subparagraph (b), in proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months - which covers particularly holiday lettings - the plaintiff may also apply to the courts of the Contracting State in which the defendant is domiciled. This option is open to him only if the tenant (and not the owner) is a natural person and if, in addition, neither party is domiciled in the Contracting State in which the property is situated. Legal persons holding tenancies were excluded since they are generally engaged in commercial transactions. Furthermore, where one of the parties is domiciled in the Contracting State in which the property is situated, it was considered appropriate to retain the rule in Article 16 (1) which lays down the principle of the jurisdiction of the courts of that State.

53. Article 16 (1) (b) did, however, create serious political difficulties for certain Community Member States. In order to overcome these difficulties, the working party agreed that this provision be accompanied by the possibility of a reservation. By means of this, any Contracting State may declare that it will neither recognize nor enforce a judgment in respect of a case concerning tenancies of immovable property, if the immovable property concerned is situated on its territory even if the tenancy is such as referred to in Article 6 paragraph 1 and the jurisdiction of the court which has given the judgment has been based on the domicile of the defendant. This reservation is given in Article Ib of Protocol No 1. This possibility of a reservation only concerns such cases in which the immovable property is situated in the State where recognition and enforcement are sought. If, thus, for instance, Spain makes use of this possibility, that does not mean that Spain is entitled to refuse the recognition or enforcement of a judgment given in proceedings which had as their object a tenancy referred to in Article 16 (1) (b) if the immovable property is situated in another State e.g. Italy, and the judgment is given by a court in a third State, where the defendant has his domicile, e.g. Sweden. Whether the State where the immovable property is situated has made use of the reservation is in this case completely irrelevant. It was however understood that any State which wishes to use this reservation may make a narrower reservation than that provided for. Thus a State may, for instance, declare that the reservation is limited to the case where the landlord is a legal person.

54. Article 16 (1) applies only if the property is situated in the territory of a Contracting State. The text is sufficiently explicit on this point. If the property is situated in the territory of a third State, the other provisions of the Convention apply, e.g. Article 2 if the defendant is domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State, and Article 4 if he is domiciled in the territory of a third State, etc.

Section 6
Prorogation of jurisdiction (Articles 17 and 18)

(a) Article 17 - Prorogation by an agreement

55. 1. Paragraph 1 of this Article essentially concerns the formal requirements for agreements conferring jurisdiction. The question of whether an agreement on jurisdiction has been validly entered into (e.g. lack of due consent) is to be regulated by the applicable law (judgment of the Court of Justice of 11 November 1986 in Iveco Fiat v. Van Hool, see Chapter VI). As to whether such an agreement can be validly entered into in specific matters it should be pointed out that the Court of Justice (judgment of 13 November 1979 in Sanicentral v. Collin, see Chapter VI) ruled that in matters governed by the Convention national procedural law was set aside in favour of the Convention's provisions.

56. According to the original version of Article 17 of the Brussels Convention, an agreement conferring jurisdiction must be in writing or evidenced in writing. In the light of the interpretation of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in some of its first judgments concerning Article 17 of the Brussels Convention (see Chapter VI), the working party preparing the 1978 Convention on the accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Brussels Convention and to the Protocol of 3 June 1971 on its interpretation by the Court of Justice was of the opinion that these formal requirements did not cater adequately for the customs and needs of international trade. Therefore a relaxation of these formal requirements as far as agreements on jurisdiction in international trade or commerce are concerned was felt necessary. According to Article 17 of the Brussels Convention as amended by the 1978 Accession Convention, an agreement conferring jurisdiction may in international trade or commerce be in a form which accords with practices in that trade or commerce of which the parties are or ought to have been aware.

57. During the negotiations on the Lugano Convention, the EFTA Member States, however, felt that this provision was too vague and might create legal uncertainty. Those States feared that Article 17 (1), as far as agreements on jurisdiction in international commerce or trade are concerned, might make it possible to consider an agreement established by the mere fact that no protest has been launched against a jurisdiction clause in certain unilateral statements by one party, for instance in an invoice or in terms of trade presented as a confirmation of the contract. Therefore the EFTA Member States proposed the following amendment of the second sentence of Article 17 (1): Such an agreement conferring jurisdiction shall be either (a) in writing (or clearly evidenced in writing) including an exchange of letters, telegrams and telexes (or other modern means of technical communications), or (b) included or incorporated by reference in a bill of lading or a similar transport document.' The representatives of the Community Member States found however that this proposal would not only lead to an excessive amount of rigidity but would also be in contradiction with the rulings of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, according to which it should be possible to take into account particular practices (judgment of 14 December 1976 in Segoura v. Bonakdarian, see Chapter VI).

58. Article 17 (1) (a) of the Lugano Convention is based on Article 9 paragraph 2 of the 1980 United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (the so-called Vienna Convention). Since the Member States of the EEC and the EFTA States may become parties to that Convention, the working party found it desirable to align in this respect the text of Article 17 on the text of Article 9 paragraph 2 of the Vienna Convention. The provision can be seen as a compromise between the two groups of States. First, according to Article 17 (1) (b) of the Lugano Convention, an agreement conferring jurisdiction fulfils the formal requirements if it is in a form that accords with practices which the parties have established between themselves. This is not provided for in the wording of Article 17 of the Brussels Convention. In the light of the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities (see Chapter VI), this seems, however, to be the understanding of Article 17 of the Brussels Convention. The working party was of the opinion that this understanding should be explicitly reflected in the text of the Lugano Convention. Secondly, in international trade or commerce an agreement conferring jurisdiction fulfills the formal requirements if it is in a form that accords with a usage of which the parties are or ought to have been aware and which in such trade is widely known to, and regularly observed by, parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned. Thus, even in international trade or commerce, it is not sufficient that an agreement conferring jurisdiction be in a form which accords with practices (or a usage) in such trade or commerce of which the parties are or ought to have been aware. It is moreover required that the usage shall be, on the one hand, widely known in international trade or commerce and, on the other, regularly observed by parties to contracts of the type involved in the particular trade or commerce concerned. In particular, having regard to the words 'internationale Handelsbrauche' and 'usages' which are used in the German and French versions of Article 17 of the Brussels Convention, it seems that there are at least no major differences in substance between the provisions concerned in the two Conventions. In order to ensure a uniform interpretation it was, however, felt by the EFTA States that the present wording of paragraph 1 (c) was necessary in the Lugano Convention.

59. Article 17 of the Brussels Convention has given rise to a considerable number of judgments by the Court of Justice of the European Communities. In this connection, readers are referred to Chapter VI.2, point 12 'Article 17', paragraphs 1 to 12. However, it should be mentioned in this context that the Court of Justice has ruled that an agreement between the parties with regard to the place of performance, which constitutes a ground of jurisdiction pursuant to Article 5 (1), is sufficient to confer jurisdiction without being subject to the formal requirements laid down in Article 17 for prorogation of jurisdiction (judgment of 17 January 1980 in Zelger v. Salinitri, see Chapter VI).

60. 2. Article 17 (5) was proposed by the EFTA Member States. It provides that in matters relating to contracts of employment an agreement conferring jurisdiction within the meaning of the first paragraph shall have legal force only if it is entered into after the dispute has arisen. The background of this provision is the same as that for Article 5 (1), i.e. the protection of the employee, who from the socioeconomic point of view is regarded as the weaker in the contractual relationship. It seemed desirable that it should not be possible for the protection intended to be given to employees by virtue of Article 5 (1) to be taken away by prorogation agreements entered into before the dispute arose. As in the case of Article 5 (1) this provision applies only to individual employment relationships and not to collective agreements concluded between employers and employees' representatives.

61. During the Diplomatic Conference, stress was laid on the difference between the Brussels and Lugano Conventions as regards agreements conferring jurisdiction with respect to contracts of employment, and a number of problems were highlighted. The example given was that of an agreement conferring jurisdiction which, at the time, was concluded between parties domiciled in the territory of two States which had ratified the Brussels Convention. Under that Convention, prorogation of jurisdiction by agreement may, as regards a contract of employment, be effected before the dispute arises. What happens if, at a later stage, one of the parties transfers his domicile to an EFTA Member State? What would be the attitude either of the court in a Community Member State to which a dispute is referred on the basis of that agreement conferring jurisdiction, or of a court in an EFTA Member State to which a dispute is referred despite the agreement? The question was left open and, although the solutions adopted by the Brussels and the Lugano Conventions are not without their merits, might possibly be resolved in the Convention on the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Brussels Convention by aligning the Brussels Convention on the Lugano Convention. (b) Article 18 - Submission to jurisdiction

62. Discrepancies have been noted between the various versions of the Brussels Convention. A number of versions, for example the English and the German ones, provide that the rule whereby the court of the Contracting State has jurisdiction does not apply where appearance was entered 'solely' to contest the jurisdiction, which restriction is not included in the French text. However, no amendment was made to the various texts in view of a judgment given by the Court of Justice to the effect that Article 18 applies under certain conditions where the defendant contests the court's jurisdiction and also makes submissions on the substance of the action (judgment of 24 June 1981 in Elefanten Schuh v. Jacqmain, see Chapter VI).

Examination as to jurisdiction and admissibility (Articles 19 and 20)

63. Although these Articles correspond to Articles 19 and 20 of the Brussels Convention, Article 20 requires some comment, given that it is a particularly important provision where the defendant fails to enter an appearance (see Jenard report, page 39). A judge required to apply the Lugano Convention must declare of his own motion that he has no jurisdiction unless his jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of Sections 2 to 6 of Title II of that Convention. For example, a French judge before whom a person domiciled in Norway is required to appear on the basis of Article 14 of the Code Civil (jurisdiction derived from the French nationality of the applicant) must declare of his own motion that he has no jurisdiction if the defendant fails to enter an appearance. Likewise, the judge must declare of his own motion that he has no jurisdiction unless his jurisdiction is derived from the provisions of an international convention governing jurisdiction in particular matters, as stipulated in Article 57 (2). In this connection reference should be made to the comments on Article 57. It should be noted that almost all the Community and EFTA Member States are currently parties to the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965 on the service abroad of judicial and extra-judicial documents in civil or commercial matters since, at June 1988, the sole exceptions are Austria, Ireland, Iceland and Switzerland.

Section 8
Lis pendens - related actions (Articles 21 to 23)

64. Article 21 Only this Article has been amended in Section 8. Article 21 of the Brussels Convention provides that in case of a lis alibi pendens, any court other than the court first seised must of its own motion decline jurisdiction in favour of that court and may stay its proceedings if the jurisdiction of the other court is contested. The representatives of the EFTA Member States thought this solution was too radical. They observed that an action often had to be brought in order to comply with a time limit or stop further time from running, and that opinions differed as to whether a time limit had been complied with where an action had been brought before a court lacking jurisdiction internationally. Thus, in their view, if an action was brought before a judge who would have had jurisdiction, but was not the first to be seised, that judge would of his own motion have to decline jurisdiction in favour of the court first seised. However, that court might perhaps decide that it did not have jurisdiction. In that case, both actions would have been dismissed with the result that the time limits might have run out and the action be time barred. These remarks have been taken into consideration. Article 21 has been amended so that the court other than the court first seised will of its own motion stay its proceedings until the jurisdiction of the other court has been established. A court other than the one first seised will not decline jurisdiction in favour of the court first seised until the jurisdiction of the latter has been established (see Schlosser report, paragraph 176). The Court of Justice has ruled that the term lis pendens used in Article 21 covers a case where a party brings an action before a court in a Contracting State for a declaration that an international sales contract is inoperative or for the termination thereof whilst an action by the other party to secure performance of the said contract is pending before a court in another Contracting State (judgment of 8 December 1987 in Gubisch v. Palumbo).
Section 9

65. Article 24 - Provisional, including protective. measures As this provision has not been amended, reference should be made to the Jenard report, page 42 and the Schlosser report, paragraph 183.

TITLE III
RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT
(Articles 25 to 49)
Section 1
Recognition (Articles 26 to 30)

(a) Article 27 (5)

66. Article 27 (5) refers only to cases where the judgment recognition of which is requested is irreconcilable in the State addressed with an earlier judgment given in a non-Contracting State and recognizable in the State addressed. The case of a judgment given in a Contracting State which is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another Contracting State and recognizable in the State addressed is not specifically dealt with, nor is it covered in the Brussels Convention. It was felt that such cases would be extremely exceptional given the mechanisms provided for in Title II and in particular Articles 21 and 22 with a view to avoiding contradictory decisions. Should such a case, however, arise it would be for the court in the State addressed to apply its rules of procedure and the general principles arising out of the Convention and to refuse to recognize and enforce the judgment given after the first judgment had been recognized. It might, indeed, be argued that, since it has already been recognized in the State addressed, the first judgment should produce the same effects there as a judgment given by the courts in that State, the situation covered by Article 27 (3).

(b) Article 28

67. Two grounds for refusal have been added. They concern the cases provided in Articles 54B and 57; reference should be made to the comments on those Articles. Section 2

Enforcement (Articles 31 to 45)

(a) Article 31

68. Under the first paragraph of this Article in the Brussels Convention, 'A judgment given in a Contracting State and enforceable in that State shall be enforced in another Contracting State when, on the application of any interested party, the order for its enforcement has been issued there'. Since United Kingdom law does not have the exequatur system for foreign judgments, paragraph 2 of this Article provides that such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland, or in Northern Ireland where, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom (see Schlosser report, paragraphs 208 et seq.).

69. In Switzerland, a distinction must be drawn between judgments ordering the payment of a sum of money and those ordering performance other than the payment of money. The enforcement of judgments ordering he payment of a sum of money is governed by Articles 69 et seq. of the federal law on suit for bankruptcy debts (LP). Articles 80 and 81 LP require, for the purposes of enforcement, the production of an enforceable judgment in a civil case. In the case of foreign judgments, involving an order for payment of money, an order for its enforcement is necessary only if the judgment was given in a State which has not concluded a treaty on recognition and enforcement with Switzerland. If such a treaty exists, a foreign judgment involving an order for payment of money is enforceable in the same way as a Swiss judgment. The only objections which can be raised are those provided for in the convention in question (third paragraph of Article 81 LP). A foreign judgment ordering performance other than the payment of money is enforced under cantonal law, even if there is a treaty with the State concerned. In general, the cantonal rules governing orders for enforcement are then applicable. With the convention in mind, Switzerland declared that it intends to continue to grant the preferential treatment it gives to judgments involving an order for payment of money. The working party agreed that the wording of Article 31 (1) of the Brussels Convention had been chosen to comply with the legal system of the original six Member States of the European Communities and acknowledged that this wording could create problems for States with different enforcement procedures than those existing in these six States. Therefore and in order to take account, in particular, of the Swiss position the words the order for its enforcement has been issued' in the first paragraph of Article 31 of the Brussels Convention have been replaced in the Lugano Convention by the words it has been declared enforceable'.

(b) Articles 32 to 45

70. The formal adjustments to Articles 32 to 45 relate exclusively to the courts having jurisdiction and possible types of appeal against their decisions. For applications for a declaration of enforceability of judgments only one court has been given jurisdiction in Iceland and in Sweden. In Sweden, this is due to the practice according to which the 'Svea hovratt' is competent to declare enforceable foreign judgments and arbitral awards. If the judgment debtor wishes to argue against the authorization of enforcement, he must lodge his application to set the enforcement order aside not with the higher court, as in most other Contracting States, but as in Austria, Belgium, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, with the same court as declared the judgment enforceable. The proceedings will take the form of an ordinary contentious civil action. This applies also regarding the appeal which the applicant may lodge if his application is refused.

Section 3
Common provisions (Articles 46 to 48)

71. Since no amendments have been made to the provisions of this section, reference should be made to the Jenard report (pp. 54 to 56) and the Schlosser report (paragraph 225).

TITLE IV
AUTHENTIC INSTRUMENTS AND COURT SETTLEMENTS
(Articles 50 and 51)

Article 50 - Authentic instruments

72. The representatives of the EFTA Member States were able to agree to the text of Article 50, although the concept of an authentic instrument is contained only in Austria's legislation. However, they did request that the report should specify the conditions which had to be fulfilled by an authentic instrument in order to be regarded as authentic within the meaning of Article 50 (see Schlosser report, paragraph 226).

The conditions are as follows:

- the authenticity of the instrument should have been established by a public authority,

- this authenticity should relate to the content of the instrument and not only, for example, the signature,

- the instrument has to be enforceable in itself in the State in which it originates. Thus, for example, settlements occurring outside courts which are known in Danish law and enforceable under that law (udenretlig forlig) do not fall under Article 50. Likewise, commercial bills and cheques are not covered by Article 50. As in Article 31 (see point 69), the phrase 'have an order for its enforcement issued there' has been replaced by the words 'be declared enforceable'. It should be noted that the application of Article 50 of the Brussels Convention appears to be relatively uncommon.

TITLE V
GENERAL PROVISIONS
Article 52 - Domicile

73. The third paragraph of Article 52 of the Brussels Convention relates to persons whose domicile depends on that of another person or on the seat of an authority. It adopts a common rule of conflicts based on the personal status of the person making the application, in the case in point, the national law of the person. The EFTA Member States challenged this rule, particularly in view of the developments regarding the domicile of married women that have taken place since the 1968 Convention was drawn up. It was decided to delete the third paragraph. It follows that in order to determine whether the defendant is a minor or legally incapacitated, the judge will apply the law specified by the conflicts rules applied in his country. In the affirmative case, either the first paragraph or the second paragraph of Article 52, depending on the case, will be applied to determine the legal domicile. Thus, to determine whether a minor is domiciled in the territory of the State whose courts are seised of a matter, the judge will apply his internal law. When the minor is domiciled in the territory of the State whose courts are seised of the matter, the judge will, in order to determine whether the minor is domiciled in another Contracting State, apply the law of that State.

TITLE VI
TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS
(Articles 54 and 54a)

(a) Article 54 - Temporal application

74. The adjustments made to this Article are only technical ones, given that the procedures for entry into force of the two Conventions are not identical, but that no substantive changes have been made (see Jenard report, pp. 57 and 58 and Schlosser report, paragraphs 228 to 235).

(b) Article 54a (Maritime claims)

75. Article 54a corresponds to Article 36 of the 1978 Accession Convention (see Schlosser report, paragraphs 121 et seq.). Paragraph 5 of this Article defines the expression 'maritime claim'. A maritime claim, according to this definition, is inter alia a claim arising out of dock charges and dues (point (1)). The German version of this Convention as well as of the Brussels Convention uses the word 'Hafenabgaben' for dock charges and dues. This should however not mislead anybody into thinking that port charges, dues or tolls or similar public fees are regarded as dock charges or dues for the purposes of this Article.

TITLE VII
RELATlONSHIP TO THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION AND OTHER CONVENTIONS

(a) Article 54b (Relationship to the Brussels Convention)

76. Reference should be made to the comments in Chapter II. (b) Articles 55 and 56 (Conventions concerning the EFTA Member States)

77. Article 55 lists conventions concluded between the EFTA Member States and conventions concluded between EFTA Member States and Community Member States (see Annex II). Conventions between Community Member States have not been included since they are already covered by Article 55 of the Brussels Convention and, where Spain and Portugal are concerned, will be covered by the Conventions on Accession to the Brussels Convention.

78. Article 56 has not been amended.

(c) Article 57 (Conventions in relation to particular matters)

79. It may be said that the problem of conflicts of law, together with the problem of conflicts of jurisdiction, are the chief concern of private international law. However, the problem of conflicts of convention also requires attention, since nowadays, with so many international organizations drawing up international conventions, the number which deal directly or indirectly with the same subject is considerable. As for solving the problem, several systems could perfectly well be contemplated under international law. Some are based on the principle specialia generalibus derogant, others on the rule of antecedence. Lastly, yet others advocate taking the effectiveness criterion into consideration. For example, where a judgment is to be recognized and enforced, the conventions which exist might be considered and the one selected which, translating the aim sought by the authors of the conventions, gives the party to whom judgment has been delivered in one country the best possibility of getting it recognized and enforced in another. As noted by Professor Schlosser in his report (paragraphs 238 to 246), this question was dealt with at length during the negotiations on the 1978 Accession Convention. The solution was enshrined in Article 25 of that Convention.

80. The problem was taken up again during negotiation of the Lugano Convention. The same basic principle has been adopted in both Conventions: namely, that the Convention will not affect any conventions to which the Contracting States are or will be parties and which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments [FN 6]. The arrangements adopted are set out in Article 57. They may be examined on two levels: firstly, the level of jurisdiction, and secondly, that of recognition and enforcement.

81. Regarding jurisdiction, the two Conventions, i.e. the 1968 Convention as amended by the 1978 Convention, and the Lugano Convention, both contain similar provisions. Article 57 (2) of the Lugano Convention, like Article 25 (2) of the 1978 Accession Convention, provides that the Convention will not prevent a court of a Contracting State which is party to a convention relating to a particular matter from assuming jurisdiction in accordance with that convention, even where the defendant is domiciled in a State party to the Lugano Convention, but not to, the convention on the particular matter. In this respect, Article 57 provides another exception to Article 2, which lays down the principle that the defendant must be sued in the courts of his domicile. Take the following example: The International Convention for the unification of certain rules relating to international carriage by air, signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929, has not been ratified by Luxembourg. The carrier is domiciled in Luxembourg, but the Warsaw Convention provides that the court with jurisdiction is that of the place of 'destination' (a court not adopted as such by the Lugano Convention, nor, for that matter, by the Brussels Convention). Article 57 enables the applicant to sue the Luxembourg carrier in the court of a State party to the Lugano Convention and to the Warsaw Convention, since that court is allowed under that Convention. Exactly the same arrangement is adopted in the Brussels Convention. It is the special convention which prevails, in the interests, as stated by Professor Schlosser in his report on the 1978 Convention (paragraph 240 (b)), of 'simplicity and clarity of the legal position' and, let us add, so as not to fail to recognize the rights that nationals of third States might hold under the special convention. However, the court seised will have to apply Article 20 of the Lugano Convention in order to ensure respect for the rights of the defence. In the case in point, if the defendant fails to enter an appearance, the judge must of his own motion examine whether he does indeed have jurisdiction under the special convention and whether the defendant has been sued properly, and in sufficient time to enable him to arrange his defence.

82. Regarding recognition and enforcement, the arrangements in the Brussels Convention (as adjusted on this point by the 1978 Convention) and the Lugano Convention are not the same. Unlike the Brussels Convention, the Lugano Convention provides that recognition or enforcement may be refused if the State addressed is not a contracting party to the special convention and if the person against whom recognition or enforcement is sought is domiciled in that State. The reason for this difference is that the Brussels Convention applies between Member States of the same Community, while the Lugano Convention is not based on a similar principle. The EFTA Member States therefore requested that the courts of the State addressed should be able to refuse recognition or enforcement if the person against whom they were sought was domiciled in that State, on the grounds that such a guarantee should be granted the defendant, particularly for fear that the special convention might contain grounds for jurisdiction considered as exorbitant by the State addressed in accordance with the law of that State. It must be emphasized that this ground for refusal is an exception, given that paragraph 3 establishes the principle of recognition and enforcement. It does not therefore apply automatically, but is left to the discretion of the judge in the State addressed under the law of that State. It goes without saying that a judgment delivered in an EFTA Member State on the basis of a rule of jurisdiction provided for in a special convention might be refused recognition or enforcement, under the same terms, in a Community Member State.

83. In the opinion of the rapporteurs, although the question is not expressly dealt with in the text of Article 57, if a court in a Contracting State having jurisdiction under a special convention is seised first, the rules on lis pendens and related actions in Articles 21 and 22 are applicable. Hence, for instance, in the case of lis pendens, the courts of another Contracting State would, even though that State was not party to the special convention, have to stay their proceedings of their own motion if seised subsequently. The jurisdiction of the court first seised is recognized by the Lugano Convention through the conjunction of Articles 21 and 57, with the latter recognizing the jurisdiction of the court first seised on the basis of a special convention.

84. For the purposes of the Lugano Convention, Community acts are to be treated in the same way as special conventions. Reference should be made here to the comments on Protocol 3.

TITLE VIII
FINAL PROVISIONS
(Articles 60 to 68)

(a) introductory remarks

85. Although final provisions are usually fairly standard, those in the present Convention are somewhat different and therefore require quite detailed comment. This is a Convention which first and foremost requires the Contracting States to have extremely similar thinking on constitutional and economic matters (see Chapter I.2, point 3). Moreover, the Convention was negotiated between States all of which belong to European organizations, either the European Communities or EFTA. The drafters of the Convention had to deal with several questions. The first was the general one of deciding which States could become parties to the Convention. Other more specific questions were: What was the position of those States which, after the opening of the Convention for signature, became members either of the European Communities or EFTA? What was the position of third States, i.e. countries which did not belong to either of these two organizations but wished to become parties to the Convention? What was the territorial application of the Convention? What, finally, was the position if one of the territories for whose international relations a Contracting State was responsible were to become independent? Each of these questions was examined in detail and a series of solutions was found [FN 7].

(b) Article 60 - States which may become parties to the Convention

86. Article 60 deals with this question, while Articles 61 and 62 define the relevant procedures involving either signature and ratification (Article 61) or accession (Article 62). The following may in any case become parties to the Convention:

1. States which, at the date of the opening of the Convention for signature, are members either of the European Communities or of EFTA;

2. States which, after that date, become members of one or other of the two organizations. In view of the origins of the Convention, this solution was virtually self-evident since neither of the two organizations could remain fixed in time;

3. third States. This was undoubtedly the most delicate question. There are, in addition to Member States of the two organizations, States which share the same fundamental conceptions even though they are not European. As we shall see in the comments on Article 62, provision has been made for fairly strict conditions for the accession of such States to the Convention. In brief, although the Convention reflects a desire for openess, its approach is clearly a cautious one.

(c) Article 61 - Signature, ratification and entry into force

87. According to Article 61, the Lugano Convention shall be opened for signature by those States which were members of one or other of the two organizations on the date - 16 September 1988 - on which it was opened for signature. This was agreed because it was at the diplomatic conference that the final text was drawn up and adopted by the persons empowered to do so by their States. On that date, the Convention was signed by 10 States: for the Community Member States: Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg and Portugal, and for the EFTA Member States: Iceland, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The Convention was subsequently signed by Finland on 30 November 1988 and by the Netherlands on 7 February 1989. The Convention may be signed at any subsequent time by the other six States (Federal Republic of Germany, Spain, France, Ireland and the United Kingdom on the one hand and Austria on the other).

88. Pursuant to Article 61 (3), the Convention shall enter into force when it has been ratified by one Community Member State and one Member State of EFTA. Since this is a multilateral Convention, such a method of entry into force might seem somewhat surprising. The intention was deliberately to speed up entry into force of the Lugano Convention. For persons domiciled in a Member State of EFTA, the Convention offers a number of guarantees when they are sued in the courts of a Community Member State. Thus, for example, Article 4 of the Brussels Convention will cease to apply to such persons. Moreover, persons domiciled in a Community Member State will not be able to be sued in the courts of a Member State of EFTA on the basis of exorbitant rules of jurisdiction. Furthermore, ratification procedures can be quite slow and this would delay the entry into force of a multilateral Convention where a certain number of ratifications are required. Examples of this are the 1968 Convention, which only entered into force in 1973, and the 1978 Accession Convention, which only entered into force between the six original Member States and Denmark on 1 October 1986, the United Kingdom on 1 January 1987 and Ireland on 1 June 1988. The Convention on the accession of Greece of 25 October 1982 entered into force on 1 April 1989 with regard to Belgium, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands and on 1 October 1989 with regard to the United Kingdom. In brief, it is sufficient therefore for one Community Member State and one EFTA Member State to ratify the Lugano Convention in order to bring it into force between those two States as from the first day of the third month following the deposit of the second instrument of ratification.

(d) Articles 62 and 63 - Accession

1. New Member States

89. Those States which, after the opening of the Convention for signature, become members of either the Communities or EFTA may accede to the Convention. Under Article 62 (4), a Contracting State may, however, consider that it is not bound by such an accession. This clause was adopted in view of the fact that a Member State of one of the two organizations has no say in the accession of new States to the other organization and, for reasons of its own, might feel it cannot have ties with that new State which are as close as those created by the Lugano Convention. This is a safeguard clause which also applies to third States.

2. Third States

90. A cautious attitude to such States is reflected in specific conditions. Firstly, their wish to accede to the Lugano Convention must be 'sponsored' by a Contracting State, i.e. a State which has either ratified the Convention or acceded to it, which will inform the depositary State of the third State's intention. Secondly, the third State will have to inform the depositary State of the contents of any declarations it intends to make in order to apply the Convention and of any details it would like to furnish in order to apply Protocol No 1, and the depositary State will then communicate that information to the other signatory States and States which have acceded. Negotiations may be held on this subject: they may not, in any circumstances, call into question the provisions of the Lugano Convention itself. The device envisaged therefore differs from that in Article 63 of the Brussels Convention, which stipulates that a new Member State of the European Economic Community may ask for 'necessary adjustments' to be the subject of a special convention. This procedure, which was followed notably when drawing up the 1978 Accession Convention, is not therefore applicable in the present case. Thirdly, the States referred to in Article 60 (a) and (b) must, when they have thus been informed of the declarations and details envisaged by the State applying for accession, decide unanimously whether that State should be invited to accede. The States referred to in Article 60 (a) and (b) are either those States which were members of one or other of the two organizations on the date on which the Convention was opened for signature, i.e. 16 September 1988, or States which became members of one or other of the two organizations after that date. The agreement of any third States which have acceded to the Convention is not therefore required. This was agreed because the Convention is essentially a Convention between Community and EFTA Member States and consequently it did not seem advisable to give a third State which has become a party to the Convention the right to veto the accession of another third State. Fourthly, once the decision has been taken to look at the application of a third State, negotiations can be started, either at that State's request or at the request of other States concerned, regarding the details it intends to furnish for the purposes of Protocol No 1. Finally, it should be noted that a last safeguard clause allows any Contracting State (pursuant to paragraph 4) to refuse application of the Convention in its relations with a third State which has acceded to the Convention. This system, which is based on various Conventions drawn up pursuant to The Hague Conference on Private International Law, takes account of the (possibly political) problems which might arise between a Contracting State and a third State.

(e) Territorial application

91. Article 60 of the 1968 Convention and Article 27 of the 1978 Convention deal with the territorial application of those Conventions, limiting it to the European territory of the Contracting States, subject to clearly defined exceptions.

92. In the negotiations leading up to the Lugano Convention it was found that application of the Convention to non-European territories forming an integral part of the national territory of Contracting States or for whose international relations the latter assume responsibility needed to be envisaged on a broader basis. A number of these territories are frequently important financial centres having close relations with Contracting States. Given the speed with which means of communication are developing, assets could be transferred to such territories, and if the Convention could not be applied to them, this would create a situation which would defeat the desired aim, since judgments given in a State which was party to the Convention could not be enforced in such territories under these provisions.

93. It was agreed at the diplomatic conference that it would be better if, like many other international conventions, the Convention contained no provision on territorial application. The limitation to European territories laid gown in principle in the 1968 and 1978 Conventions is thus not included in the Lugano Convention.

94. However, it was clear from the negotiations that in the absence of any specific clause the Lugano Convention applies automatically to: - the entire territory of the Kingdom of Spain, - the entire territory of the Portuguese Republic, - in the case of France: all territories which are an integral part of the French Republic (see Article 71 et seq. of the Constitution), including therefore the French Overseas Departments (Guadeloupe, Martinique, Guiana, Reunion), the Overseas Territories (Polynesia, New Caledonia, Southern and Antartic Territories) and the individual territorial collectivities (Saint Pierre and Miquelon, Mayotte).

95. The situation is slightly different where Denmark and the Netherlands are concerned. Denmark: With a view to ratification of the Lugano Convention, Denmark made known its wish to reserve the right to extend the scope of the Convention at a later stage to the Faroe Islands and Greenland which are part of the Kingdom of Denmark but enjoy autonomy in their internal affairs (Law No 137 of 23 March 1948 for the Faroe Islands and No 577 of 29 November 1978 for Greenland) and which must be consulted on draft laws affecting their territories. In the light of the outcome of such consultations, Denmark will be able to state, in a declaration to be addressed at any time to the depositary State, what the situation is with respect to the application of the Convention to these territories. The Netherlands: Since 1 January 1986, the Kingdom of the Netherlands consists of three countries, namely: the Netherlands, the Netherlands Antilles (the islands of Bonaire, Curacao, Sint Marten (Netherlands part of the island), Sint Eustatius and Saba) and Aruba. Following the necessary consultations, the Netherlands, just like Denmark in the case of the Faroe Islands and Greenland, will be able to state in a declaration which may be addressed at any time to the depositary State, what the situation is with respect to the application of the Convention to the Netherlands Antilles and to Aruba.

96. On the other hand, other Contracting States (the United Kingdom and Portugal in the case of Macao and Timor-Leste) comprise entities which are separate from the metropolitan territory. International agreements cannot be concluded on behalf of these entities other than by the United Kingdom and Portugal. United Kingdom: During the negotiations, the United Kingdom, like the other States, provided a full list of non-European territories for whose international relations it is responsible [FN 8]. For the European territories, see Schlosser report, paragraph 252. This list of non-European territories is included in the acts of the diplomatic conference. The United Kingdom also gave an indication of the territories to which it might consider making the Convention actually apply. It was agreed that provision of such information did not imply any binding obligation that other extensions could not be made, but the information provided was intended to assist the other States in assessing the practical consequences for them of an extension of the application of the Convention. For this purpose, the United Kingdom indicated that, of its non-European territories, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, Turks and Caicos Islands and Hong Kong were ones to which there might be a real prospect of the Convention being extended. Portugal: The question of extending the Convention to Macao and Timor-Leste has not yet been settled.

(f) Territories which become independent

97. The question of what would happen regarding application of the Lugano Convention to territories gaining independence was also considered. The Convention contains no provisions on this subject. Such a clause is not usual in international Conventions. On the other hand, this is a familiar problem in public international law and it is generally accepted that, if a country gains independence, any Contracting State is free to decide whether or not it is bound by the Convention in question in respect of the new State and vice versa (on this point, see Schlosser report, paragraph 254). In any event, a State which has become independent may, if it wishes to become a party to the Lugano Convention, make use of the accession procedure provided for third States in Article 62 of the Lugano Convention (see point 90).

CHAPTER IV
PROTOCOLS

98. Under Article 65, the three supplementary Protocols form an integral part of the Convention.

PROTOCOL 1 ON CERTAIN QUESTIONS OF JURISDICTION, PROCEDURE AND ENFORCEMENT

1. Introductory remarks

99. This Protocol corresponds to the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention. The provisions contained in Articles I, II, III and Vd of that Protocol are reproduced unmodified in Protocol 1 to the Lugano Convention. The provisions contained in Article Vc of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention are not reproduced in this Protocol. Those provisions were inserted into the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention only to make it clear that the concept of 'residence' in the English text of the Convention for the European patent for the common market, signed at Luxembourg on 15 December 1975, should be deemed to have the same scope as the concept of 'domicile' in the Brussels Convention. Such provisions were, however, redundant in the Lugano Convention. The other provisions of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention are reproduced in this Protocol with minor amendments most of which are due to the law in force in various EFTA Member States. Furthermore, the Protocol contains two Articles (Ia and Ib) which have no equivalent in the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention.

2. Article Ia - Swiss reservation

100. This Article contains a reservation asked for by Switzerland. It provides that Switzerland may declare, at the time of depositing its instrument of ratification, that a judgment given in another Contracting State shall neither be recognized nor enforced in Switzerland if the jurisdiction of the court which has given the judgment is based only on Article 5 (1) (place of performance of contract) of the Lugano Convention and if certain other conditions are met. As this head of jurisdiction is regarded by many States as the most commercially significant of all the special bases of jurisdiction in the Lugano Convention, the terms of this part of Protocol No 1 were the subject of close discussion. For Switzerland the need for a reservation arose from the provisions of Article 59 of the Swiss Federal Constitution [FN 9] which reserves the right for a person of Swiss domicile, whatever his nationality, to be sued over a contract in the courts of his domicile. Whilst some exceptions existed to this general principle, it became clear that a provision such as Article 5 (1) of the Convention could involve a conflict with the constitutional rule in Switzerland and make Swiss participation in the Convention impossible. The compromise reached limits the effect of the reservation to the minimum necessary.

101. In the first place, any reservation will only apply if the defendant was domiciled in Switzerland at the time of the introduction of the proceedings. In the application of the reservation the question of domicile will be determined and acknowledged in accordance with the general principles and rules of the Convention. However, a company or other legal person is considered to be domiciled in Switzerland only if it has its registered seat and the effective centre of activities in Switzerland. The reservation will thus not apply if the effective centre of activities of a company or other legal person is outside Switzerland even if the company or other legal person has its registered seat in Switzerland. Furthermore, the reservation will never apply unless the company or legal person concerned has its registered seat in Switzerland. Secondly, recognition and enforcement may only be refused under the reservation if the jurisdiction of the court which has given the judgment was based solely on Article 5 (1). If, for example, a defendant domiciled in Switzerland were to submit to the jurisdiction in the other Contracting State the reservation would not apply, because in that event jurisdiction would not have been based solely on Article 5 (1), but also on Article 18. Equally, the reservation will not apply if the jurisdiction of the original court is based on an agreement to confer jurisdiction over contractual disputes, since in that case jurisdiction would have been derived from Article 17. Thirdly, the reservation will not apply unless the defendant raises an objection to the recognition and enforcement of the judgment in Switzerland. The objection must be raised in good faith. It was explained by the Swiss delegation that it was entirely possible under Swiss law for the defendant to waive the protection available under Article 59 of the Constitution and that this waiver could validly be made at any time. Thus this waiver can be made even before Switzerland has made any declaration. This is reflected in the text of the Article by the words 'the declaration foreseen under this paragraph'. It will therefore be possible for persons contracting with persons enjoying Swiss domicile to stipulate a waiver of the protection provided for in Article 59 of the Swiss Federal Constitution which would otherwise be available. An agreement between the parties on the waiver of such protection could be made orally or in writing as long as there is sufficient proof that the waiver has been made. In the event that such an agreement has been made, or if the Swiss court is otherwise satisfied as a matter of fact that the defendant has waived his rights, then recognition and enforcement will not be refused in Switzerland even if a reservation has been made. Fourthly, the reservation will not apply to contracts in respect of which, at the time recognition and enforcement is sought, a derogation has been granted from Article 59 of the Swiss Federal Constitution. The Swiss Government is obliged to communicate such derogations to the signatory States and the acceding States. Fifthly, the Swiss delegation has declared that a reservation envisaged in this Article will not apply to contracts of employment. Thus Switzerland will in no event refuse the recognition or enforcement of a judgment given in a matter relating to an individual contract of employment on the ground that the jurisdiction of the court which has given the judgment is based only on the second part of Article 5 (1) of the Convention. Finally, any declaration made by Switzerland under this Article is to expire on a fixed date, i.e. on 31 December 1999. If, by that time, the Swiss Federal Constitution has ot been amended so as to remove the constitutional difficulty, one possibility would be for Switzerland to consider denouncing the Convention, and become a party to it again when the constitutional difficulty has been removed.

102. If Switzerland makes the reservation provided for in this Article it will be open to other Contracting States to reciprocate the effect of that reservation by refusing to enforce judgments originating in Switzerland if the jurisdiction of the Swiss court is based solely on Article 5 (1) of the Convention and if conditions corresponding to those mentioned in Article Ia of the Protocol are fulfilled. By reason of the difference in constitutional systems, a reciprocity clause was not inserted in the Protocol. The result is that the matter of reciprocity will be left to the normal rules of public international law. In view of the fact that such rules may be incorporated differently into national law, solutions to the question of reciprocity may vary from country to country. In countries applying the 'dualist' system the question of reciprocity will be dealt with at a legislative level, thus settling the question of reciprocity in a general manner. In those countries where the 'monist' system exists it is for the courts or other authorities to decide on the question of reciprocity. For instance in France, where the 'monist' system exists, a treaty, according to the French constitution, has a higher level than law provided that the treaty is applied in a reciprocal manner. If the question of whether a treaty is applied in a reciprocal manner is raised before a court and the answer is not clear, the judge will submit the question to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs which is competent for the interpretation of treaties. As far as the aspect of application of Article 7 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community is concerned (non-discrimination on grounds of nationality), the judge in a Community Member State can, if the question arises before him, submit it to the Court of Justice of the European Communities for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty. From the discussions it is apparent that certain States will not reciprocate. 3. Article Ib - Reservation on tenancies

103. This Article provides that any Contracting State may, by a declaration made at the time of signing or deposit of its instrument of ratification or accession, reserve the right not to recognize and enforce judgments given in other Contracting States if the jurisdiction of the court of origin is based, pursuant to Article 16 (1) (b), exclusively on the domicile of the defendant in the State of origin. This provision has been commented on above (see point 53). 4. Article IV - Judicial and extra-judicial documents

104. This Article reproduces Article IV of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention. The declaration referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article will, however, not be made to the Secretary-General of the Council of the European Communities but to the depositary of the Lugano Convention. 5. Article V - Actions on a warranty or guarantee

105. Under Austrian, Spanish and Swiss law, as under German law, the function performed by an action on a warranty or guarantee or any other third party proceedings is fulfilled by means of third-party notices. A rule analogous to that contained in Article V of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention (see Jenard report, page 27, comments on Article 6 (2)) has accordingly been applied to Austria, Spain and Switzerland in this Article. Unlike the case of Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany and Spain, it has not been possible to refer to a single legislative source in Swiss law. Provisions on third-party notices are to be found both in the federal law of civil procedure and in the 26 cantonal codes of civil procedure. Third party intervention in proceedings is not governed by explicit rules in the Spanish legal system and the want of proper procedures is the source of procedural uncertainty. This legal hiatus has been severely citicized in the works of legal experts, who have recommended that it be remedied in the near future. However, this has not prevented acceptance of third party proceedings in some fields of jurisprudence or in civil laws governing certain specific cases, e.g. Article 124 (3) of Law No 11 of 20 March 1986 on patents and Article 1482 [FN 10] of the Civil Code, regarding eviction. Generally speaking, it is the latter rule which is applicable in cases of non-voluntary third party proceedings; in the negotiations between the Member States of the European Communities and those of the European Free Trade Association, it was therefore judged advisable to include it in Article V of Protocol No 1. Article 1482 is referred to, albeit indirectly, in Article 638 (gift), 1145 (joint and several obligations), 1529 (assignment of claims), 1540 (exchange), 1553 (tenancy), 1681 (obligations of partners), 1830 (surety), 1831 (co-surety), etc. of the Civil Code. 6. Article Va - Jurisdiction of administrative authorities

106. In Iceland and Norway administrative authorities are, as in Denmark, competent in matters relating to maintenance. Thus Iceland and Norway have been included in this Article in addition to Denmark.

107. In Finland, for historical reasons the 'ulosotonhaltija/overexekutor' (regional chief enforcement authority) is competent for protective measures referred to in Article 24 of the Lugano Convention. Furthermore, a documentary procedure for collecting debts based on a promissory note or a similar document, as well as some other summary proceedings e.g. eviction, take place before that authority. These proceedings are an optional alternative to court proceedings. The 'ulosotonhaitija/overexekutor' is clearly not a court but an administrative authority, which in the aforementioned cases plays a judicial role. The abolition of the ulosotonhaltija/overexekutor' is envisaged and its functions as far as civil and commercial matters are concerned will be transferred to the courts. In order to avoid any imbalance a second paragraph has been inserted in this Article according to which the expression 'court' in civil and commercial matters includes the Finnish 'ulosotonhaltija/overexekutor'. 7. Article Vb - Dispute between the master and a member of a ship's crew

108. Following specific requests from the Icelandic, Norwegian, Portuguese and Swedish delegations, Iceland, Norway, Portugal and Sweden have been included in this Article. 8. Article VI - Amendment of national legislation

109. This Article reproduces Article VI of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention. The communication provided for in this Article will, however, not be made to the Secretary-General of the Council of the European Communities but to the depositary of the Lugano Convention.

PROTOCOL 2 ON THE UNIFORM INTERPRETATION OF THE CONVENTION

1. Introductory remarks

110. Without uniform interpretation, the unifying force of the Lugano Convention would be considerably reduced. In addition, a considerable number, if not the majority, of its provisions are reproduced from the Brussels Convention, which posed a further problem. As we know, in order to avoid such differences of interpretation, the Community Member States concluded a Protocol on 3 June 1971 giving jurisdiction to the Court of Justice of the European Communities to rule on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention. When applying that Convention, the courts of the Community Member States must comply with the interpretation given by the Court of Justice. However, the Court of Justice could not be assigned jurisdiction to interpret the Lugano Convention which is not a source of Community law. Furthermore, the EFTA Member States could not have accepted a solution according to which an institution of the Communities would, as a court of last resort, rule on the Lugano Convention. Nor was it conceivable to assign such jurisdiction to any other international court or to create a new court since, inter alia, the Court of Justice of the European Communities already had jurisdiction under the 1971 Protocol to rule on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention and conflicts of jurisdiction between international courts had at all events to be avoided.

111. The solution adopted to resolve this somewhat complex situation (i.e. ensuring uniform interpretation of the Lugano Convention while taking account of the powers of the Court of Justice of the European Communities as regards the interpretation of the Brussels Convention, many of the provisions of which were reproduced in the Lugano Convention) is based on the principle of consultation and not on judicial hierarchy. It was thus agreed that judgments delivered pursuant to the Lugano Convention or the Brussels Convention are to be communicated through a central body to each signatory State and acceding State and that meetings of representatives appointed by each such State are to be convened to exchange views on the functioning of the Convention. As regards legal technique, it was decided that the provisions aiming at uniform interpretation should be included in a Protocol annexed to the Convention, the provisions of which would form an integral part thereof. It was furthermore agreed that two Declarations would be annexed to the Protocol. One of these Declarations was to be signed by the representatives of the Governments of the States signatories to the Lugano Convention which were members of the European Communities and the other by the representatives of the Governments of the States signatories to the Lugano Convention which were members of EFTA.

2. Preamble

112. The first recital in the preamble makes reference to Article 65 of the Lugano Convention. According to this Article, a Protocol 2 on the uniform interpretation of the Convention by the courts will form an integral part of the Convention. The second recital refers to the substantial link between the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention. As has already been mentioned, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has, under the Protocol of 3 June 1971, been entrusted with jurisdiction to give rulings on the interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels Convention. A starting point for the negotiations for the conclusion of the Lugano Convention was that those provisions of the Brussels Convention which were to be substantially reproduced in the Lugano Convention should be understood in the light of these rulings given up to the date of opening for signature of the latter Convention. The working party which drafted the Convention was aware of all those rulings delivered up to that date. The intention was to arrive at as uniform as possible an interpretation where the provisions in question were identical in the two Conventions. On the other hand, insofar as a provision of the Brussels Convention as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Communities, e.g. Article 16 (1), was found not to be acceptable, it was not reproduced unmodified in the Convention (for judgments of the Court of Justice, see Chapter VI). The third, fourth and fifth recitals were included in the Preamble in order to stress the relevance of the rulings on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention given by the Court of Justice of the European Communities up to the time of the signature of the Lugano Convention. The sixth recital confirms the wish of the Contracting States to prevent, in full deference to the independence of the courts, divergent interpretations. 3. Article 1

113. This Article relates only to decisions concerning provisions of the Lugano Convention. It provides that the courts of each Contracting Party shall, when applying and interpreting that Convention, pay due account to the principles laid down by any relevant decision delivered by courts of the other Contracting Parties concerning provisions of the Lugano Convention. The expression 'any relevant decision' means in this Article those decisions delivered by courts of the Contracting Parties which according to Article 2 (1), first indent, have been transmitted to a central body, i.e. judgments delivered by courts of last instance and other judgments of particular importance which have become final.

114. This Article does not explicitly refer to decisions concerning the application and interpretation of those provisions of the Brussels Convention which are substantially reproduced in the Lugano Convention. It must be remembered that the courts of the Community Member States are the only courts required to apply the Brussels Convention and that when they interpret provisions of that Convention, they must respect the judgments of the Court of Justice. The Community Member States were, however, not in a position to commit the Court of Justice, a separate institution, to pay due regard to judgments of national courts in EFTA Member States. For their part, the representatives of the EFTA Member States thought that it would not be entirely fair to include a provision in the Protocol which expressly stipulated that the courts of these States had to take account not only of the decisions given by the courts of the other Contracting States but also of the judgments of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, while the latter would not be subject to any undertaking as regards the interpretation of the provisions of the Brussels Convention which were reproduced in the Lugano Convention.

115. It was, however, recognized that the courts of the Community Member States, when interpreting provisions of the Lugano Convention which are reproduced from the Brussels Convention, would understand those provisions in the same way as the identical provisions of the Brussels Convention and in accordance with the interpretations given in the rulings of the Court of Justice of the European Communities. It was therefore essential, in order to ensure as uniform an interpretation as possible of the Lugano Convention, that the courts of he EFTA Member States apply it in the same way as the courts of the Community Member States. But it was equally necessary for the Court of Justice, when interpreting provisions of the Brussels Convention which were reproduced in the Lugano Convention to pay due account in particular to the case law of the courts of the EFTA Member States.

116. In order to achieve this twofold objective two Declarations accompany the Convention. In one of them the representatives of the Governments of the States signatories to the Lugano Convention which are members of the Communities declare that they consider as appropriate that the Court of Justice, when interpreting the Brussels Convention, pay due account to the rulings contained in the case law of the Lugano Convention. In the other, the representatives of the EFTA States declare that they consider as appropriate that their courts, when interpreting the Lugano Convention, pay due account to the rulings contained in the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and of the courts of the Member States of the European Communities in respect of provisions of the Brussels Convention which are substantially reproduced in the Lugano Convention. At the request of the representatives of the EFTA States, a list and the contents of the judgments delivered by the Court of Justice when interpreting the 1968 Convention is given in this report (see Chapter VI).

4. Article 2

117. As we have already said, it was agreed that a uniform interpretation of the common provisions of the Lugano and Brussels Conventions would be achieved by means of information and consultation. According to the first paragraph of this Article the Contracting States agree to set up a system of exchange of information concerning judgments delivered pursuant to the Lugano Convention as well as relevant judgments under the Brussels Convention. The expression 'relevant judgments' means, in this context, those judgments delivered pursuant to the Brussels Convention which are relevant for the interpretation of the Lugano Convention as well. This system of exchange of information comprises:

- transmission to a central body by the competent national authorities of judgments delivered pursuant to the Lugano Convention or the Brussels Convention,

- classification of these judgments by the central body including, as far as necessary, the drawing up and publication of translations and abstracts, - communication by the central body of the relevant documents to the competent national authorities of all signatories and acceding States to the Lugano Convention and to the Commission of the European Communities. The abovementioned central body will, according to paragraph 2 of this Article, be the Registrar of the Court of Justice of the European Communities. The Registrar has signified his agreement to this, provided that the detailed arrangements for the system of exchange of information, and in particular the question of the translation of judgments not drawn up in an official language of the Communities, are worked out with the Court after the Diplomatic Conference and that the department of the Court receive the necessary aid and budgetary support. The competent national authorities referred to in the first and third indent of paragraph 1 of this Article are to be designated by each Member State concerned. This system of exchange of information will, however, not include every judgment delivered by a national court pursuant to the Lugano Convention or every relevant judgment delivered pursuant to the Brussels Convention. For the purposes of the objective which the Protocol is aiming at it will suffice that judgments delivered by courts of last instance and the Court of Justice as well as judgments of other courts which are of particular importance and have become final are transmitted to the central body referred to in this Article (paragraph 1 first indent). Only those judgments will thus be classified by the central body and communicated pursuant to the third indent of paragraph 1 of this Article. To the extent that the communication of documentation implies publication of translations and abstracts by the central body, it was agreed that such publication, in the interests of economy, could take a simplified form.

5. Article 3

118. In order to ensure a uniform interpretation of the common provisions of the Lugano and Brussels Conventions, it was deemed necessary that representatives appointed by each signatory or acceding State meet to exchange views on the functioning of the Lugano Convention. To this end Article 3 provides that a Standing Committee composed of representatives appointed by each signatory or acceding State shall be set up. This Standing Committee is not intended to be a bureaucratic body but rather a forum where national experts could exchange their views on the functioning of the Convention and in particular on the case law as it develops in the various Contracting States, with the aim of fostering in that manner, as far as possible, uniformity in the interpretation of the Convention. No regular meetings of the Committee are provided for in the Protocol. Meetings of the Committee will, according to Article 4 (1) of the Protocol, be convened only at the request of a Contracting Party. In this context it deserves to be emphasized that not only States which have already become parties to the Convention (either by ratifying it or by acceding to it), but also States which have signed the Convention but not yet become parties to it may appoint their representatives as members of the Standing Committee. This solution was adopted since a distinction between signatory and Contracting States would suggest that certain States might sign the Lugano Convention without any intention of ratifying it. Divergent views were expressed as to whether the Standing Committee should be composed of judges or civil servants. It was decided that it would be for each State to appoint its representatives on the Committee. Thus, it may well be that certain States will appoint judges whereas other States may appoint civil servants or others. It goes without saying that each State is free to decide how and for which period of time anyone is appointed to represent it on the Committee. Because of the links between the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention, paragraph 3 of this Article provides that representatives of the European Communities (i.e. of the Commission, the Court of Justice and the General Secretariat of the Council) and of EFTA may attend the meetings of the Committee as observers. If necessary, it will be for the Committee to establish its own rules of procedure.

6. Article 4

119. The provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article concern the convocation and the tasks of the Standing Committee. As already mentioned, the meetings of the Committee will be convened at the request of a Contracting Party for the purpose of exchanging views on the functioning of the Convention. In this context it deserves to be emphasized that a meeting of the Committee cannot be convened at the request of a State which has only signed the Convention but not yet become a party to it, even though the Committee, according to Article 3 (2), will be composed of representatives appointed by each signatory State or acceding State. The task of convening the Committee has been entrusted to the depositary of the Convention. There are no limitations as to the questions relating to the functioning of the Convention which oblige the depositary to convene meetings of the Committee at the request of a Contracting Party. In view of the purpose of the Protocol, Article 4 provides that meetings of the Committee will be convened for the purpose of exchanging views in particular on the development of the case law as communicated under the first indent of Article 2 (1). The purpose of this provision is not, however, to invest the Committee with the role of a higher body which would assess the judgments given by national courts. It is rather a body, which, by examining such judgments, would identify divergences of interpretation and, as far as possible, foster uniformity in the interpretation of the Convention. Article 57 (1) of the Convention provides that it will not affect any conventions to which the Contracting States are or will be parties and which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments. According to Protocol No 3, provisions which govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments and which are or will be contained in acts of the institutions of the European Communities will be treated in the same way as conventions referred to in Article 57 (1). Provisions which in relation to particular matters govern jurisdiction may, irrespective of whether such provisions are contained in a convention or in a Community act, amount to a change of the rules of jurisdiction contained in the Convention without the agreement of all the Contracting Parties. Therefore paragraph 1 of this Article further provides that meetings of the Committee will be convened for exchanging views on the application of Article 57 of the Convention. Paragraph 2 of Protocol No 3 on Community acts makes provision for a similar procedure. Thus the Committee will provide a forum where views can be exchanged inter alia on the provisions governing jurisdiction in particular matters adopted or envisaged in Community acts. In the light of these exchanges of views it may appear that an amendment of the Convention would be appropriate. This may be the case if the Committee, when examining the case law communicated under Article 2, were to identify divergences of interpretation arising from a lack of clarity in one or more of the provisions of the Convention. Therefore, paragraph 2 of the Article provides that the Committee may also examine the appropriateness of starting on particular topics a revision of the Convention and make recommendations. This power of the Committee should not be confused with the right for any Contracting State under Article 66 of the Convention to request the revision of the Convention. The powers and procedures in that Article differ radically from those provided for in Article 4 (2) of the Protocol. A recommendation made by the Committee is thus not to be assimilated with a request by a Contracting State under Article 67 of the Convention for a revision conference. Only a Contracting State but not the Committee may request the depositary of the Convention to convene a revision conference. Neither is a recommendation of the Committee a prerequisite for the right of a Contracting State to request the revision of the Convention.

PROTOCOL 3 ON THE APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 57

120. This Protocol is in response to the problems which might arise from any provisions on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments appearing in Community acts.

1. Concern of the States party to the Lugano Convention 121. The entirely justified concern of both Community and EFTA Member States has been vigorously expressed in regard to Community acts. Why is this?

(a) For the Community Member States, it is because they have, in a manner of speaking, a dual personality. They are sovereign States. But they are also members of the Communities and are thus bound, by virtue of this latter point, to comply with the obligations to which they have subscribed under the Treaties establishing the European Communities (ECSC, EEC and Euratom). Under those Treaties, it is the Council which is competent to adopt Regulations and Directives which in specific matters may possibly concern jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments, according to the requirements of those Communities [FN 11]. The concern of these States was threefold:
- the need to comply with the obligations they have entered into by becoming party to the Treaties establishing the Communities,

- the need to avoid hampering any development taking place in the context of the Treaties and relating to the powers of the Community institutions,

- the need to respect the commitments entered into by the Lugano Convention vis-a-vis the EFTA Member States.

(b) For the EFTA Member States, because they feared that the guarantees offered them by the Lugano Convention regarding jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments could, in certain areas, be practically wiped out by a Community act. In particular, the representatives of the EFTA Member States voiced the fear that the protection guaranteed by the Lugano Convention, particularly by Article 3, to defendants domiciled in an EFTA Member State might be undermined by a Community act. Such defendants might thus be treated differently from defendants domiciled in a Community Member State, or even be put in the same situation as defendants domiciled in third States. For example, for the representatives of these States it was inconceivable to accept that it should be possible for a person domiciled in the territory of an EFTA Member State (e.g. Norway) to be required to appear before the courts of a Member State of the Communities (such as France) on the basis of a Community act which they had played no part in drawing up and on the basis of a criterion of jurisdiction not provided for in the Lugano Convention. In any event, for these States, it was unacceptable that it should be possible for a judgment delivered on the basis of such a rule of jurisdiction to be recognized and enforced in their territory under the Lugano Convention. These fears would seem to be as well-founded as those of the Member States of the Communities. In short, for the EFTA Member States, the inclusion of rules of jurisdiction and of recognition and enforcement of judgments in Community acts could, in the absence of any correcting mechanism, be regarded as empowering the Community Member States to amend the Lugano Convention unilaterally. 2. Response to this concern

122. The question for the authors of the Convention was how to respond to these various concerns, all equally justified, and to work out a solution that could be accepted by all the Contracting Parties. We shall try and answer two questions, the problem having been resolved: Why was it possible to solve the problem? How was it solved? It was possible to respond to this concern because there existed on both sides a conviction or, one might prefer to say, a deep awareness that despite its difficulties the problem posed could and had to be resolved, in accordance with the principles of public international law, because of the fundamental objectives of the Lugano Convention, i.e. the granting of guarantees to a defendant domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State and the free movement of judgments. In addition, it emerged during the discussions that despite its theoretical aspect the problem had only a very relative impact in practice; thus the Member States of the Communities stressed the fact that in 30 years no Community act containing provisions on jurisdiction had been adopted. It should however be noted that a draft Regulation on the Community trade mark containing such jurisdiction rules is currently in preparation. Also, some Community Member States made it clear that for practical reasons they were not in favour of Community acts including provisions relating to jurisdiction and to the recognition and enforcement of judgments. For these States, the issue had to be settled by the Brussels Convention, even if that meant its being revised, amended or supplemented, since for the practitioner (lawyers, judges, and others) this Convention constituted a Community code which was becoming well known. If these provisions were scattered throughout numerous Community instruments it would weaken the scope of this code and make it more difficult to apply. These States were well aware of the importance that Community acts might have in this matter and they considered that any resort to these instruments, in the areas in question, should continue to be entirely exceptional.

3. Solution adopted

123. How was the problem resolved? The solution is to be found in Protocol 3 and in the Declaration by the Member States of the Communities which supplements it. What is involved in this solution that has given satisfaction to both sides? Protocol 3 and the Declaration supplementing it form a whole.

(a) Protocol 3

124. In paragraph 1, for the purposes of the Lugano Convention, Protocol No 3 treats Community acts in the same way as the conventions which have been concluded on particular matters and whose effect on the Lugano Convention is determined by Article 57 of the Convention (see points 79 to 83). In the view of the representatives of the Community Member States, there is no difference, except as regards the way they were drawn up, between these two types of instrument. They pointed out that if the EFTA Member States were willing to entertain the possibility for the States party to the Lugano Convention of the rules of that Convention being amended by conventions concluded in particular areas (transport, etc.) they could also agree to the Community amending the Convention by means of Community acts. These representatives also stressed that to be approved a Community act required in principle the agreement of the 12

Member States, whereas a convention on a particular matter, whose rules could depart from those of the Lugano Convention, could be concluded between two States only. In their view, there was accordingly no substantive difference between the two types of instrument: conventions on particular matters and Community acts. The representatives of the EFTA Member States were able to accept this view only for the purposes of this Convention and in conjunction with paragraph 2 of Protocol 3 and the Declaration supplementing it (see point 127 below). They also said that their States had no wish to obstruct the Communities' proper and specific demands that they preserve a certain freedom to develop Community law.

125. What are the consequences of paragraph 1 of Protocol 3 which, for the purposes of this Convention, treats Community acts in the same way as conventions concluded on particular matters? It will be possible for a person domiciled in the territory of a Contracting State (such as Switzerland) to be summoned to appear in the territory of another Contracting State belonging to the European Communities (such as Belgium) on the basis of a rule of jurisdiction which is not laid down in the Lugano Convention but results from a Community act (just like a convention on a particular matter). A judgment handed down by a court in a Community Member State - which has jurisdiction by virtue of the Community act which derogates, as regards jurisdiction, from the Lugano Convention - will be recognized and enforced in the other Community Member States. However, recognition and enforcement may be refused under the conditions laid down in Article 57 (4), i.e. in an EFTA Member State where the person against whom recognition or enforcement of the decision is being sought is domiciled, unless such recognition and enforcement are permitted under the law of the State. It should be noted that paragraph 1 of the Protocol refers only to Community acts and not to the legislation of the Community Member States where this has been harmonized pursuant to those acts, in this case by Directives. The assimilation of Community acts to conventions concluded on particular matters can only refer to an act which is equivalent to such a convention and cannot therefore extend to national legislation. Moreover, if a national legislation, departing from a Directive, were to introduce rules of jurisdiction derogating from the Lugano Convention, the situation would be different, i.e. it would be a question of the responsibility of the State which had taken such measures. As explained above, the representatives of the EFTA Member States were able to agree to Community acts being treated in the same way as conventions concluded on particular matters only subject to a Declaration by the Community Member States that they will comply with the rules on jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments established by the Lugano Convention (for comments on that Declaration, see point 127 below).

126. Paragraph 2 of Protocol 3 refers to the case where, notwithstanding the precautions taken, in the view of one of the Contracting Parties, a provision of a Community act is not compatible with the Lugano Convention. For example, this is the situation that might arise if the Community act provided for the jurisdiction of the court of the plaintiff's domicile vis-a-vis a defendant who was domiciled outside the Community and therefore in an EFTA Member State. Paragraph 2 has the effect of a pactum de negotiando. If one of the Contracting Parties considers there is incompatibility between the Community act and the Lugano Convention, negotiations will be initiated to amend, if necessary, the Lugano Convention. To this end the review procedure provided for in Article 66 of the Lugano Convention will apply without prejudice to the possibility of a meeting of the Standing Committee set up by Article 3 of Protocol 2 being convened to hear this request in accordance with Article 4 of that Protocol. Negotiations will have to begin immediately to establish rapidly whether or not there is any need to amend the Lugano Convention. Paragraph 2 contains only an undertaking to contemplate an amendment rather than actually to amend the Convention. Moreover, paragraph 2 of protocol 3 does not contain any undertaking, nor could it, to contemplate an amendment to a Community act. Such negotiations would lie outside relations between the States party to the Convention and should be undertaken with the Community institutions, as Community acts fall within the competence of the latter. It should be noted that the procedure laid down in paragraph 2 could be instigated equally well by a Community Member State or by an EFTA Member State. An EFTA Member State will be able in particular to request the amendment of the Lugano Convention to avoid derogating measures being taken through a Community act in respect of persons domiciled in its territory. On the other hand, a Community Member State could have an interest in adapting the Lugano Convention so that judgments delivered in its territory can be recognized and executed in all EFTA Member States, to which Article 57 (4) might prove an obstacle. (b) The Declaration by the Governments of the Member States of the Communities

127. Protocol 3 is accompanied by an important Declaration by the Community Member States. This unilateral Declaration represents an essential element of the solution adopted, the other two being the placing of Community acts on the same footing as conventions on particular matters and the undertaking to negotiate if there is any divergence between a Community act and the Lugano Convention. As we have explained, the Community Member States are caught between two stools. On the one hand, they have to respect the institutional machinery laid down by the Treaties establishing the Communities while on the other they must respect the undertakings they entered into under the Lugano Convention in respect of the EFTA Member States. The Declaration is important because the Community Member States, without forgetting that they belong to the Communities and with due respect for its institutions: (a) take into consideration the undertakings which they have entered into with regard to the EFTA Member States. For those States the Lugano Convention is therefore an instrument to be complied with. On their side there is therefore what was regarded as a 'best efforts' clause aimed at avoiding as far as possible any divergence between the provisions of Community acts and those of the Lugano Convention; (b) indicate their concern not to jeopardize the unity of the legal system established by the Lugano Convention. This is an obvious concern if we consider that the Lugano Convention, through rules based firmly on the Brussels Convention, is intended to guarantee the free movement of judgments among the great majority of West European States, i.e. including judgments delivered by the courts of the Member States of the Communities; (c) the Community Member States consequently undertake, when drafting Community acts, to take all the steps in their power to ensure that the rules contained in the Lugano Convention are complied with, particularly as regards the protection which the Convention gives a defendant domiciled in a Contracting State. The result is that when a Community act is discussed in the Council of the Communities, particular attention will have to be paid by each of the Member States to the rules of the Lugano Convention. To sum up, the Declaration represents a moral and political undertaking, made in good faith by the Community Member States, to keep intact the efforts towards unification which are being made by the Lugano Convention. 4. Conclusion

128. The questions raised by Community acts were amongst the most difficult with which the drafters of the Lugano Convention had to deal. A solution was reached thanks to the constructive will of the representatives of all the States concerned. This compromise solution appears to us to allay the concern shown on both sides. To summarize, it may be said to be a three-storey edifice: (a) it places Community acts on the same footing as conventions on particular matters, which corresponds to the wishes of the Community Member States; (b) the Community Member States have given a unilateral undertaking to make every effort to ensure that the unity of the legal system established by the Lugano Convention is not put in jeopardy, which satisfies the EFTA Member States; (c) as a corrective, there is the undertaking to seek a negotiated solution in the case of a divergence between a Community act and the Lugano Convention. As we have stated, this satisfies both sides. The compromise thus appears to be perfectly balanced.

CHAPTER V DECLARATIONS ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION

129. The Lugano Convention is supplemented by three Declarations. The first concerns Protocol 3 which relates to Community acts (see points 120 to 128) and the two others Protocol 2 on the uniform interpretation of the Convention (see points 110 to 119).

CHAPTER VI JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING THE INTERPRETATION OF THE BRUSSELS CONVENTION OF 27 SEPTEMBER 1968

1. General

130. The Protocol of 3 June l971 confers on the Court of Justice of the European Communities jurisdiction to rule on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention. Article 30 of the Accession Convention of 9 October 1978 (Denmark, Ireland, United Kingdom) provides that the Court of Justice also has jurisdiction to rule on the interpretation of that Convention. Article 10 of the Convention of 25 October 1982 on the accession of Greece contains a similar provision. As at 1 June 1988 the six original Member States of the Communities together with Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom are parties to the Protocol. On the scope of the Protocol, reference should be made to the Jenard report (pp. 66 to 70) and the Schlosser report (paragraphs 255 and 256). It should be noted, however, that the Protocol makes provision for two forms of reference: reference for a preliminary ruling and reference in the interests of the law. The latter possibility has not so far been used. Reference for a preliminary ruling means that a national court required to rule on a question of interpretation of the Convention or the Protocol refers the matter to the Court of Justice and stays its proceedings, pending the latter's decision. Since the Protocol came into force on 1 September 1975, nearly 60 judgments have been handed down by the Court (see point 3 below) and a number of cases are currently pending (see point 4 below). As stated in the comments on Protocol 2 (see points 112 and 116), in the negotiations on the Lugano Convention it was agreed that the provisions of the Brussels Convention should be construed as interpreted by the Court of Justice and that the report would mention the various judgments handed down by the Court. This Chapter meets the latter stipulation. The judgments are given not in chronological order but by reference to those Articles of the Brussels Convention, the Protocol annexed thereto and the 1971 Protocol which have been interpreted, since this seems a more convenient arrangement. This Chapter gives only the operative part of the decision and not, barring exceptions, the grounds. For it is not the purpose of this report to study the judgments of the Court of Justice but merely to indicate how it has interpreted a number of Articles. 2. Content of the judgments [FN 12]

131. (1) Application of the Convention National procedural laws are set aside in the matters governed by the Convention in favour of the provisions thereof (judgment of 13 November 1979 in Case 25/79 Sanicentral v. Collin (1979) ECR 3423-3431).

(2) Article 1, first paragraph: Civil and commercial matters 1. The Court held that the concept of civil and commercial matters must be regarded as autonomous. It ruled that a judgment given in an action between a public authority and a person governed by private law, in which the public authority has acted in the exercise of its powers', is excluded from the area of application of the Convention (judgment of 14 October 1976 in Case 29/76 LTU v. Eurocontrol (1976) ECR 1541-1552). 2. It confirmed its decision in its judgment of 16 December 1980 in Case 814/79 Netherlands State v. Ruffer to the effect that the concept of civil and commercial matters does not include the recovery of the costs incurred by the agent responsible for administering public waterways, in this instance the Netherlands State, in the removal of a wreck pursuant to an international Convention ((1980) ECR 3807-3822). 3. Contracts of employment come within the scope of the Convention (judgment of 13 November 1979 in Case 25/79 Sanicentral v. Collin (1979) ECR 3423-3431).

(3) Article 1, second paragraph (1) (a) Status of persons 1. Judicial decisions authorizing provisional measures in the course of proceedings for divorce do not fall within the scope of the Convention 'if those measures concern or are closely connected with either questions of the status of the persons involved in the divorce proceedings or proprietory legal relations resulting directly from the matrimonial relationship or the dissolution thereof, (judgment of 27 March 1979 in Case 143/78 J. De Cavel v. L. De Cavel (1979) ECR 1055-1068). 2. However, the Convention is applicable, on the one hand, to the enforcement of an interlocutory order made by a French court in divorce proceedings whereby one of the parties to the proceedings is awarded a monthly maintenance allowance and, on the other hand, to an interim compensation payment, payable monthly, awarded to one of the parties by a French divorce judgment pursuant to Article 270 et seq. of the French Civil Code. The Court held that the scope of the Convention extends to maintenance obligations and that the treatment of an ancillary claim is not necessarily linked to that of the principal claim. Ancillary claims come within the scope of the Convention according to the subject matter with which they are concerned and not according to the subject matter involved in the principal claim (judgment of 6 March 1980 in Case 120/79 L. De Cavel v. J. De Cavel (1980) ECR 731). (b) Matrimonial relationships 1. The term 'rights in property arising out of a matrimonial relationship' includes not only property arrangements specifically and exclusively envisaged by certain national legal systems in the case of marriage but also any proprietory relationships resulting directly from the matrimonial relationship or the dissolution thereof (judgment of 27 March 1979 in Case 143/78 J. De Cavel v. L. De Cavel (1979) ECR 1055-1068). 2. An application for provisional measures to secure the delivery up of a document in order to prevent it from being used as evidence in an action concerning a husband's management of his wife's property does not fall within the scope of the Convention if such management is closely connected with the proprietary relationship resulting directly from the marriage bond (judgment of 31 March 1982 in Case 25/81 C. H. W. v. G. J. H. (1982) ECR 1189-1205). (2) Bankruptcy A decision such as that of a French civil court based on Article 99 of the French Law of 13 July 1967, ordering the de facto manager of a legal person to pay a certain sum into the assets of a company must be considered as given in the context of bankruptcy or analogous proceedings (judgment of 22 February 1979 in Case 133/78 Gourdain v. Nadler (1979) ECR 733-746).

(4) Article 5 (1): Contractual matters 1. The place of performance of the obligation in question is to be determined in accordance with the law which governs the obligations in question according to the rules of conflict of laws of the court before which the matter is brought (judgment of 6 October 1978 in Case 12/76 Tessili v. Dunlop (1976) ECR 1473-1487). 2 If the place of performance of a contractual obligation has been specified by the parties in a clause which is valid according to the national law applicable to the contract, the court for that place has jurisdiction to take cognizance of disputes relating to that obligation under Article 5 (1), irrespective of whether the formal conditions provided for under Article 17 have been observed (judgment of 17 January 1980 in Case 56/79 Zelger v. Salinitri (1980) ECR 89-98). 3. The word 'obligation' contained in Article 5 (1) refers to the contractual obligation forming the basis of the legal proceedings, namely the obligation of the grantor in the case of an exclusive sales contract (judgment of 6 October 1976 in Case 14/76 De Bloos v. Bouyer). 4. The plaintiff may invoke the jurisdiction of the courts of the place of performance in accordance with Article 5 (1) of the Convention even when the existence of the contract is in dispute between the parties (judgment of 4 March 1982 in Case 38/81 Effer v. Kantner (1982) ECR 825-836). 5. The obligation to be taken into account for the purposes of the application of Article 5 (1) of the Convention in the case of claims based on different obligations arising under a contract of employment as a representative binding a worker to an undertaking is the obligation which characterizes the contract, i.e. that of the place where the work is carried out (judgment of 26 May 1982 in Case 133/82 Ivenel v. Schwab (1982) ECR 1891-1902). 6. The concept of matters relating to a contract is an autonomous concept. Obligations in regard to the payment of a sum of money which have their basis in the relationship existing between an association and its members by virtue of membership are 'matters relating to a contract', whether the obligations in question arise simply from the act of becoming a member or from decisions made by organs of the association (judgment of 22 March 1983 in Case 34/82 Peters v. Znav (1983) ECR 987-1004). 7. For the purpose of determining the place of performance within the meaning of Article 5 (1), the obligation to be taken into consideration in an action for the recovery of fees, commenced by an architect commissioned to prepare plans for the building of houses, is the contractual obligation actually forming the basis of the legal proceedings. In the case in point that obligation consists of a debt for a sum of money payable at the defendant's permanent address. The place of payment is determined by the law applicable to the contract (judgment of 15 January 1987 in Case 266/85 Shenavai v. Kreischer, OJ No C 39, 17. 2. 1987, p. 3). 8. (a) On the question of whether a claim for compensation for sudden and premature termination of an agreement was a matter relating to a contract or to quasi-delict, the Court of Justice replied that 'proceedings relating to the wrongful repudiation of an independent commercial agency agreement and the payment of commission due under such an agreement are proceedings in matters relating to a contract within the meaning of Article 5 of the Brussels Convention'. (b) It repeated that matters relating to a contract should be regarded as an 'autonomous' concept (judgment of 22 March 1983 in Case 34/82 Peters v. Znav). (c) Compensation for wrongful repudiation of an agreement is based on failure to comply with a contractual obligation. (d) Lastly, the Court referred to the Rome Convention of 19 June 1980 on the law applicable to contractual obligations, which includes (Article 10) within the field of the law applicable to a contract the consequences of total or partial non-performance of the obligations arising from it and hence the contractual liability of he party responsible for non-performance (judgment of 8 March 1988 in Case 9/87 Arcado v. Haviland, OJ No C 89, 6. 4. 1988, p. 9).

(5) Article 5 (2): Maintenance The subject of maintenance obligations falls within the scope of the Convention even if the claim in question is ancillary to divorce proceedings (judgment of 6 March 1980 in Case 120/79 L. De Cavel v. J. De Cavel (1980) ECR 731).

(6) Article 5 (3): Tort or delict 1. The expression 'place where the harmful event occurred' must be understood as being intended to cover both the place where the damage occurred and the place of the event giving rise to it. The result is that the defendant may be sued, at the option of the plaintiff, either in the courts for the place where the damage occurred or in the courts for the place of the event which gives rise to and is at the origin of that damage (judgment of 30 November 1976 in Case 21/76 Bier, Reinwater v. Mines de potasse d'Alsace (1976) ECR 1735-1748). 2. (a) The term 'tort, delict or quasi-delict' in Article 5 (3) of the Convention must be regarded as an autonomous concept covering all actions which seek to establish the liability of a defendant and which are not related to a 'contract' within the meaning of Articles (1). (b) A court which has jurisdiction under Article 5 (3) to entertain an action with regard to tortious matters does not have jurisdiction to entertain that action with regard to other matters not based on tort (judgment of 27 September 1988 in Case 189/87 Kalfelis v. Schroder, OJ No C 281, 4. 11. l988, p. 18).

(7) Article 5 (5): Branch, agency or other establishment 1. When the grantee of an exclusive sales concession is not subject either to the control or to the direction of the grantor, he cannot be regarded as being at the head of a branch, agency or other establishment of the grantor within the meaning of Article 5 (5) (judgment of 6 October 1976 in Case 14/76 De Bloos v. Bouyer (1976) ECR 1497-1511).

2. The Court has given an autonomous interpretation to the concepts of 'operations of a branch, agency or other establishment':

(a) the concept of branch, agency or other establishment implies a place of business which has the appearance of permanency, such as the extension of a parent body, has a management and is materially equipped to negotiate business with third parties so that the latter, although knowing that there will if necessary be a legal link with the parent body, the head office of which is abroad, do not have to deal directly with such parent body but may transact business at the place of business constituting the extension;

(b) the concept of 'operations' comprises:

(1) actions relating to rights and contractual or non-contractual obligations concerning the management properly so-called of the agency, branch or other establishment itself such as those concerning the situation of the building where such entity is established or the local engagement of staff to work there,

(2) actions relating to undertakings which have been entered into at the abovementioned place of business in the name of the parent body and which must be performed in the Contracting State where the place of business is established,

(3) actions concerning non-contractual obligations arising from the activities in which the branch, agency or other establishment has engaged at the place in which it is established on behalf of the parent body (judgment of 22 November 1978 in Case 33/78 Somafer v. Ferngas (1978) ECR 2183-2195).

3. An 'independent commercial agent', inasmuch as he is free to arrange his own work and the undertaking which he represents may not prevent him from representing several firms at the same time and he merely transmits orders to the parent undertaking without being involved in either their terms or their execution, does not have the character of a branch (judgment of 18 March 1981 in Case 139/80 Blanckaert that provision does not however make it possible, in an application to oppose enforcement made to the courts of the Contracting State in which enforcement is to take place, to plead a set-off between the right whose enforcement is being sought and a claim over which the courts of that State would have no jurisdiction if it were raised independently. The Court held that this amounts to a clear abuse of the process on the part of the plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining indirectly from the German courts a decision regarding a claim over which those courts have no jurisdiction under the Convention (judgment of 4 July 1985 in Case 220/84 AS-Autoteile v. Malhe (1985) ECR 2267-2279).

(12) Article 17: Agreements conferring jurisdiction

1. (a) Where a clause conferring jurisdiction is included among the general conditions of sale of one of the parties, printed on the back of a contract, the requirement of a writing under the first paragraph of Article 17 is fulfilled only if the contract signed by both parties contains an express reference to those general conditions and

(b) in the case of a contract concluded by reference to earlier offers, which were themselves made with reference to the general conditions of one of the parties including a clause conferring jurisdiction, the requirement of a writing under the first paragraph of Article 17 is satisfied only if the reference is express and can therefore be checked by a party exercising reasonable care (judgment of 14 December 1976 in Case 24/76 Colzani v. Ruwa (1976) ECR 1831-1843).

2. (a) In the case of an orally concluded contract, the requirements of the first paragraph of Article 17 as to form are satisfied only if the vendor's confirmation in writing accompanied by notification of the general conditions of sale has been accepted in writing by the purchaser

(b) and the fact that the purchaser does not raise any objections against a confirmation issued unilaterally by the other party does not amount to acceptance on his part of the clause conferring jurisdiction unless the oral agreement comes within the framework of a continuing trading relationship between the parties which is based on the general conditions of one of them, and those conditions contain a clause conferring jurisdiction (judgment of 14 December 1976 in Case 25/76 Segoura v. Bonakdarian (1976) ECR 1851-1863).

3. (a) The first paragraph of Article 17 cannot be interpreted as prohibiting an agreement under which the two parties to a contract for sale, who are domiciled in different States, can be sued only in the courts of their respective States and

(b) in the above case the Article cannot be interpreted as prohibiting the court before which a dispute has been brought in pursuance of such a clause from taking into account a set-off connected with the legal relationship in dispute (judgment of 9 November 1978 in Case 23/78 Meeth v. Glacetal (1978) ECR 2133-2144).

4. (a) National procedural laws are set aside in the matters governed by the Convention in favour of the provisions thereof and

(b) in judicial proceedings instituted after the coming into force of the Convention, clauses conferring jurisdiction included in contracts of employment concluded prior to that date must be considered valid even in cases in which they would have been regarded as void under the national law in force at the time when the contract was entered into (judgment of 13 November 1979 in Case 25/79 Sanicentral v. Collin (1979) ECR 3423-3431).

5. If the place of performance of a contractual obligation has been specified by the parties in a clause which is valid according to the national law applicable to the contract, the court for that place has jurisdiction to take cognizance of disputes relating to that obligation under Article 5 (1) of the Convention, irrespective of whether the formal conditions provided for under Article 17 have been observed (judgment of 17 January 1980 in Case 56/79 Zelger v. Salinitri (1980) ECR 89-98).

6. Article 17 must be interpreted as meaning that the legislation of a Contracting State may not allow the validity of an agreement conferring jurisdiction to be called in question solely on the ground that the language used is not that prescribed by that legislation (judgment of 24 June 1981 in Case 150/81 Elefanten Schuh v. Jacqmain (1981) ECR 1671-1690).

7. Article 17 must be interpreted as meaning that where a contract of insurance, entered into between an insurer and a policy-holder and stipulated by the latter to be for his benefit and to enure for the benefit for third parties, contains a clause conferring jurisdiction relating to proceedings which might be brought by such third parties, the latter, even if they have not expressly signed the said clause, may rely upon it (judgment of 14 July 1983 in Case 201/82 Gerling v. Amministrazione del tesoro dello Stato (1983) ECR 2503-2518).

8. On bills of lading, the Court handed down a judgment to the effect that: (a) the bill of lading issued by the carrier to the shipper may be regarded as an 'agreement' 'evidenced in writing' between the parties, within the meaning of Article 17. The jurisdiction clause applies if the parties have signed the bill of lading. If the clause conferring jurisdiction appears in the general conditions, the shipper must have expressly accepted it in writing. The wording of the bill of lading signed by both parties must expressly refer to the general conditions. However, if the carrier and the shipper have a continuing business relationship, which is governed as a whole by the carrier's general conditions, the clause conferring jurisdiction applies even without acceptance in writing; (b) the bill of lading issued by the carrier to the shipper may be regarded as an 'agreement' 'evidenced in writing', within the meaning of Article 17, vis-a-vis a third party holding the bill only if that third party is bound by an agreement with the carrier under the relevant national law and if the bill of lading, as 'evidence in writing' of the 'agreement', satisfies the formal conditions in Article 17 (judgment of 19 June 1984 in Case 71/83 Russ v. Nova, Goeminne (1984) ECR 2417-2436).

9. The court of a Contracting State before which the applicant, without raising any objection as to the court's jurisdiction, enters an appearance in proceedings relating to a claim for a set-off which is not based on the same contract or subject-matter as the claims in his application and in respect of which there is a valid agreement conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the courts of another Contracting State within the meaning of Article 17 has jurisdiction by virtue of Article 18 (judgment of 7 March 1985 in Case 48/84 Spitzley v. Sommer (1985) ECR 787-800).

10. The first paragraph of Article 17 must be interpreted as meaning that the formal requirements therein laid down are satisfied if it is established that jurisdiction was conferred by express oral agreement, that written confirmation of that agreement by one of the parties was received by the other and that the latter raised no objection (judgment of 11 July 1985 in Case 221/84 Berghoefer v. ASA (1985) ECR 2699-2710).

11. An agreement conferring jurisdiction is not to be regarded as having been concluded for the benefit of only one of the parties, within the meaning of the third paragraph of Article 17 of the Convention, where all that is established is that the parties have agreed that a court or the courts of the Contracting State in which that party is domiciled are to have jurisdiction. The Court held that clauses which expressly state the name of the party for whose benefit they were agreed and those which, whilst specifying the courts in which either party may sue the other, give one of them a wider choice of courts must be regarded as clauses whose wording shows that they were agreed for the exclusive benefit of one of the parties (judgment of 24 June 1986 in Case 22/85 Anterist v. Credit Lyonnais, OJ No C 196, 5. 8. 1986).

12. Article 17 must be interpreted as meaning that where a written agreement containing a jurisdiction clause and stipulating that the agreement can be renewed only in writing has expired but has continued to serve as the legal basis for the contractual relations between the parties, the jurisdiction clause satisfies the formal requirements in Article 17 if, under the law applicable, the parties could validly renew the original contract otherwise than in writing, or if, conversely, either party has confirmed in writing either the jurisdiction clause or the group of clauses which have been tacitly renewed and of which the jurisdiction clause forms part, without any objection on the part of the other party to whom such confirmation has been notified (judgment of 11 November 1986 in Case 313/85 Iveco Fiat v. Van Hool, OJ No C 308, 2. 12. 1986, p. 4).

(13) Article 18: Submission to the jurisdiction 1.

(a) Article 18 applies even where the parties have by agreement designated a court in another State since Article 17 is not one of the exceptions laid down in Article 18 and

(b) Article 18 is applicable where the defendant not only contests the court's jurisdiction but also makes submissions on the substance of the action, provided that, if the challenge to jurisdiction is not preliminary to any defence as to the substance, it does not occur after the making of the submissions which under national procedural law are considered to be the first defence addressed to the court seised (judgment of 24 June 1981 in Case 150/81 Elefanten Schuh v. Jacqmain (1981) ECR 1671-1690). (See also the judgments of 22 October 1981 in Case 27/81 Rohr v. Ossberger, 31 March 1982 in Case 25/81 C. H. W. v. G. J. H and 14 July 1983 in Case 201/82 Gerling v. Amministrazione del tesoro dello Stato.)

2. The court of a Contracting State before which the applicant, without raising any objection as to the court's jurisdiction, enters an appearance in proceedings relating to a claim for a set-off which is not based on the same contract or subject matter as the claims in his application and in respect of which there is a valid agreement conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the courts of another Contracting State within the meaning of Article 17 of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters has jurisdiction by virtue of Article 18 of that Convention (judgment of 7 March 1985 in Case 48/84 Spitzley v. Sommer (1985) ECR 787-800).

(14) Article 19: Examination of jurisdiction

Article 19 requires the national court to declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction whenever it finds that a court of another Contracting State has exclusive jurisdiction under Article 16 of the Convention, even in an appeal in cassation where the national rules of procedure limit the court's review to the grounds raised by the parties (judgment of 15 November 1983 in Case 288/82 Duijnstee v. Goderbauer (1983) ECR 3663-3679).

(15) Article 21: Lis pendens

1. See the judgment of 7 June 1984 in Case 29/83 Zelger v. Salinitri.

2. The term lis pendens used in Article 21 covers a case where a party brings an action before a court in a Contracting State for a declaration that an international sales contract is inoperative or for the termination thereof whilst an action by the other party to secure performance of the said contract is pending before a court in another Contracting State. The Court also ruled that the terms used in Article 21 to determine a situation of lis pendens are to be regarded as autonomous concepts (judgment of 8 December 1987 in Case 144/86 Gubisch v. Palumbo, OJ No C 8, 13. 1. 1988, p. 3).

(16) Article 22: Related actions

Article 22 does not confer jurisdiction. It applies only where related actions are brought before courts of two or more Contracting States (judgment of 24 June 1981 in Case 150/81 Elefanten Schuh v. Jacqmain (1981) ECR 1671-1690).

(17) Article 24: Provisional, including protective, measures

1. The inclusion of provisional measures in the scope of the Convention is determined not by their own nature but by the nature of the rights which they serve to protect (judgment of 27 March 1979 in Case 143/78 J. De Cavel v. L. De Cavel (1979) ECR 1055-1068).

2. On the enforcement of judicial decisions authorizing provisional and protective measures, see Article 27 below (judgment of 21 May 1980 in Case 125/79 Denilauler v. Couchet (1980) ECR 1553).

3. Article 24 may not be relied on to bring within the scope of the Convention provisional measures relating to matters which are excluded from it (judgment of 31 March 1982 in Case 25/81 C. H. W. v. G. J. H. (1982) ECR 1189-1205).

(18) Article 26: Recognition A foreign judgment recognized by virtue of Article 26 must in principle have the same effects in the State in which enforcement is sought as it does in the State in which the judgment was given. Subject, however, it should be added, to the grounds for non-recognition laid down in the Convention (judgment of 4 February 1988 in Case 145/86 Hoffmann v. Krieg. See also in the same case the Court's interpretation of Articles 27 (1) and (3), 31 and 36, OJ No C 63, 8.3. 1988, p. 6).

(19) Article 27 (1): Public policy Recourse to the public policy clause, which is to be had only in exceptional cases, ...is in any event not possible where the problem is one of compatibility of a foreign judgment with a domestic judgment. That problem must be resolved on the basis of Article 27 (3), which covers the case of a foreign judgment irreconcilable with a judgment given between the same parties in the State in which enforcement is sought (judgment of 4 February 1988 in Case 145/86 Hoffmann v. Krieg, OJ No C 63, 8. 3. 1988, p. 6).

(20) Article 27 (2): Rights of the defence

1. Judicial decisions authorizing provisional or protective measures, which are delivered without the party against which they are directed having been summoned to appear and which are intended to be enforced without prior service do not come within the system of recognition and enforcement provided for by Title III of the Convention (judgment of 21 May 1980 in Case 125/79 Denilauler v. Couchet (1980) ECR 1553).

2. Article 27 (2) must be interpreted as follows:

(a) the words 'the document which instituted the proceedings' cover any document, such as the order for payment (Zahlungsbefehl) in German law;

(b) a decision such as the enforcement order (Vollstreckungsbefehl) in German law is not covered by the words 'the document which instituted the proceedings';

(c) in order to determine whether the defendant has been enabled to arrange for his defence as required by Article 27 (2) the court in which enforcement is sought must take account only of the time, such as that allowed under German law for submitting an objection (Widerspruch), available to the defendant for the purposes of preventing the issue of a judgment in default which is enforceable under the Convention;

(d) Article 27 (2) remains applicable where the defendant has lodged an objection against the decision given in default and a court of the State in which the judgment was given has held the objection to be inadmissible on the ground that the time for lodging an objection has expired; (e) even if a court of the State in which the judgment was given has held, in separate adversary proceedings, that service was duly effecte, Article 27 (2) still requires the court in which enforcement is sought to examine whether service was effected in sufficient time to enable the defendant to arrange for his defence; (f) the court in which enforcement is sought may as a general rule confine itself to examining whether the period, reckoned from the date on which service was duly effected, allowed the defendant sufficient time for his defence; it must, however, consider whether, in a particular case, there are exceptional circumstances such as the fact that, although service was duly effected, it was inadequate for the purposes of causing that time to begin to run; (g) Article 52 of the Convention and the fact that the court of the State in which enforcement is sought concluded that under the law of that State the defendant was habitually resident within its territory at the date of service of the document which instituted the proceedings do not affect the replies given above (judgment of 16 June 1981 in Case 166/80 Klomps v. Michel (1981) ECR 1593-1612).

3. The court of the State in which enforcement is sought may, if it considers that the conditions laid down by Article 27 (2) are fulfilled, refuse to grant recognition and enforcement of a judgment, even though the court of the State in which the judgment was given regarded it as proven, in accordance with the third paragraph of Article 20 of that Convention in conjunction with Article 15 of the Hague Convention of 15 November 1965, that the defendant, who failed to enter an appearance, had an opportunity to receive service of the document instituting the proceedings in sufficient time to enable him to make arrangements for his defence (judgment of 15 July 1982 in Case 288/81 Pendy Plastic Products v. Pluspunkt (1982) ECR 2723-2737).

4. (a) Article 27 (2) is also applicable, in respect of its requirement that service of the document which instituted the proceedings should have been effected in sufficient time, where service was effected within a period prescribed by the court of the State in which the judgment was given or where the defendant resided, exclusively or otherwise, within the jurisdiction of that court or in the same country as that court.

(b) In examining whether service was effected in sufficient time, the court in which enforcement is sought may take account of exceptional circumstances which arose after service was duly effected.

(c) The fact that the plaintiff was apprised of the defendant's new address, after service was effected, and the fact that the defendant was responsible for the failure of the duly served document to reach him are matters which the court in which enforcement is sought may take into account in assessing whether service was effected in sufficient time (judgment of 11 June 1985 in Case 49/84 Debaecker and Plouvier v. Bouwman (1985) ECR 1779-1803).

(21) Article 27 (3): Irreconcilable judgments A foreign judgment ordering a person to make maintenance payments to his spouse by virtue of his obligations, arising out of the marriage, to support her is irreconcilable for the purposes of Article 27 (3) with a national judgment which has decreed the divorce of the spouses in question (judgment of 4 February 1988 in Case 145/86 Hoffmann v. Krieg, OJ No C 63, 8. 3. 1988, p. 6).

(22) Articles 30 and 38: Ordinary appeal The Court ruled in favour of an autonomous concept of ordinary appeal. An 'ordinary appeal' is constituted by any appeal: (a) which is such that it may result in the annulment or the amendment of the judgment which is the subject matter of the procedure for recognition or enforcement and (b) the lodging of which is bound, in the State in which the judgment was given, to a period which is laid down by the law and starts to run by virtue of that same judgment (judgment of 22 November 1977 in Case 43/77 Industrial Diamond v. Riva (1977) ECR 2175-2191).

(23) Article 31: Enforcement 1. The provisions of the Convention prevent a party who has obtained a judgment in his favour in a Contracting State, being a judgment for which an order for enforcement under Article 31 may issue in another Contracting State, from making an application to a court in that other State for a judgment against the other party in the same terms as the judgment delivered in the first State (judgment in Case 42/76 De Wolf v. Cox). 2. A foreign judgment the enforcement of which has been ordered in a Contracting State pursuant to Article 31, and which remains enforceable in the State in which it was given, need not remain enforceable in the State in which enforcement is sought when, under the legislation of the latter State, it ceases to be enforceable for reasons which lie outside the scope of the Convention. In the case in point a foreign judgment ordering a person to make maintenance payments to his spouse by virtue of his obligations, arising out of the marriage, to support her is irreconcilable with a national judgment which has decreed the divorce of the spouses in question (judgment of 4 February 1988 in Case 145/86 Hoffman v. Krieg, OJ No C 63, 8. 3. 1988, p. 6).

(24) Article 33: Address for service 1. (a) The second paragraph of Article 33 must be interpreted as meaning that the requirement to give an address for service laid down in that provision must be complied with in accordance with the rules laid down by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought or, if those rules do not specify when that requirement must be complied with, no later than the date on which the enforcement order is served. (b) The consequences of an infringement of the rules concerning the choice of an address for service are, by virtue of Article 33 of the Convention, governed by the law of the State in which enforcement is sought, provided that the aims of the Convention are respected, i.e. the law of the latter State remains subject to the aims of the Convention; the penalty cannot therefore call into question the validity of the judgment granting enforcement or allow the rights of the party against whom enforcement is sought to be prejudiced (judgment of 10 July 1986 in Case 198/85 Carron v. FRG, OJ No C 209, 20. 8. 1986, p. 5).

(25) Article 36: Enforcement procedure 1. (a) Article 36 of the Convention excludes any procedure whereby interested third parties may challenge an enforcement order, even where such a procedure is available to third parties under the domestic law of the State in which the enforcement order is granted. (b) The Court held that the Convention has established an enforcement procedure which constitutes an autonomous and complete system, including the matter of appeals. It follows that Article 36 of the Convention excludes procedures whereby interested third parties may challenge an enforcement order under domestic law. (c) The Convention merely regulates the procedure for obtaining an order for the enforcement of foreign enforceable instruments and does not deal with execution itself, which continues to be governed by the domestic law of the court in which execution is sought, so that interested third parties may contest execution by means of the procedures available to them under the law of the State in which execution is levied (judgment of 2 July 1985 in Case 148/84 Deutsche Genos-senschaftsbank v. Brasserie du Pecheur (1985) ECR 1981-1993). 2. The Article must be interpreted as meaning that the party who has failed to appeal against the enforcement order referred to in Article 31 (in the case in point within one month of service of the enforcement order) is thereafter precluded, at the stage at which the judgment is enforced, from relying upon a valid reason which he could have invoked in such appeal. That rule is to be applied ex officio by the courts of the State in which enforcement is sought. However, that rule does not apply when it has the effect of obliging the national court to make the effects of a national judgment lying outside the scope of the Convention (divorce) conditional on that judgment being recognized in the State in which the foreign judgment whose enforcement is at issue was given (judgment of 4 February 1988 in Case 145/86 Hoffman v. Krieg, OJ No C 63, 8. 3. 1988, p. 6).

(26) Article 37: Enforcement procedure 1. (a) The second paragraph of Article 37 must be interpreted as meaning that an appeal in cassation and, in the Federal Republic of Germany, a 'Rechtsbeschwerde' may be lodged only against the judgment given on the appeal. (b) That provision cannot be extended so as to enable an appeal to be lodged against a judgment other than that given on the appeal, for instance against a preliminary or interlocutory order requiring preliminary inquiries to be made (judgment of 27 November 1984 in Case 258/83 Brennero v. Wendel (1984) ECR 3971-3984).

(27) Article 38: Enforcement procedure 1. See (20) above on 'ordinary appeal'. 2. The second paragraph of Article 38 of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters must be interpreted as meaning that a court with which an appeal has been lodged against a decision authorizing enforcement, given pursuant to the Convention, may make enforcement conditional on the provision of security only when it gives judgment on the appeal (judgment of 27 November 1984 in Case 258/83 Brennero v. Wendel (1984) ECR 3971-3984).

(28) Article 39: Enforcement procedure 1.

(a) By virtue of Article 9 of the Convention, a party who has applied for and obtained authorization for enforcement may, within the period mentioned in that Article, proceed directly with protective measures against the property of the party against whom enforcement is sought and is under no obligation to obtain specific authorization.

(b) A party who has obtained authorization for enforcement may proceed with the protective measures referred to in Article 39 until the expiry of the period prescribed in Article 36 for lodging an appeal and, if such an appeal is lodged, until a decision is given thereon.

(c) A party who has proceeded with the protective measures referred to in Article 39 of the Convention is under no obligation to obtain, in respect of those measures, any confirmatory judgment required by the national law of the court in question (judgment of 3 October 1985 in Case 119/84 Capelloni v. Pelkmans (1985) ECR 3147-3164).

(29) Article 40: Enforcement procedure The court hearing an appeal by a party seeking enforcement is required to hear the party against whom enforcement is sought, pursuant to the first sentence of the second paragraph of Article 40 of the Convention, even though the application for an enforcement order was dismissed in the lower court simply because documents were not produced at the appropriate time. This is because the Convention formally requires that both parties should be given a hearing at the appellate level, without regard to the scope of the decision in the lower court (judgment of 12 July 1984 in Case 178/83 P. v. K. (1984) ECR 3033-3043).

(30) Article 54: Temporal application The effect of Article 54 is that the only essential for the rules of the Convention to be applicable to litigation relating to legal relationships created before the date of the coming into force of the Convention is that the judicial proceedings should have been instituted subsequently to that date. This is true even if an agreement conferring jurisdiction was concluded before the Convention came into force and could be regarded as void under the law applicable to it; the case in point concerns a contract of employment between a French employee and a German firm, to which French law was applicable (judgment of 13 November 1979 in Case 25/79 Sanicentral v. Collin (1979) ECR 3423-3431).

(31) Articles 55 and 56: Bilateral Conventions As the first paragraph of Article 56 of the Convention states that the bilateral Conventions listed in Article 55 continue to have effect in relation to matters to which the Convention does not apply, the court of the State in which enforcement is sought may apply them to decisions which, without coming under the second paragraph of Article 1, are excluded from the Convention's scope. This is the case as regards application of the German-Belgian Convention of 1958, which may continue to have effect in 'civil and commercial matters', irrespective of the autonomous construction placed upon that concept by the Court for the purposes of interpretation of the 1968 Convention (judgment of 14 July 1977 in joined Cases 9/77 and 10/77 Bavaria and Germanair v. Eurocontrol (1977) ECR 1517-1527).

(32) Article I, second paragraph, of the Protocol annexed to the Convention (Luxembourg) A clause conferring jurisdiction is not binding upon a person domiciled in Luxembourg unless that clause is mentioned in a provision:

(a) specially and exclusively meant for this purpose;

(b) specifically signed by that party; in this respect the signing of the contract as a whole does not suffice. It is not necessary for that clause to be mentioned in a separate document (judgment of 6 May 1980 in Case 784/79 Porta-Leasing v. Prestige International (1980) ECR 1517).

(33) Article II of the Protocol annexed to the Convention

1. The expression 'an offence which was not intentionally committed' should be understood as meaning any offence the legal definition of which does not require the existence of intent, and

2. Article II of the Protocol applies in all criminal proceedings concerning offences which were not intentionally committed, 'in which the accused's liability at civil law, arising from the elements of the offence for which he is being prosecuted, is in question or on which such liability might subsequently be based' (judgment of 26 May 1981 in Case 157/80 Rinkau (1981) ECR 1391-1484).

(34) Article 2 of the Protocol of 3 June 1971 Lower courts not sitting in an appellate capacity are not empowered to seek a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice on a question of interpretation of the Convention. See the Court of Justice's order of 9 November 1983 in Case 80/83 Habourdin v. Italocremona (1983) ECR 3639-3641) and order of 28 March 1984 in Case 56/84 Von Gallera v. Maitre ((1984) ECR 1769-1772).

REPORT

on the national case-law relating to the Lugano Convention drawn up in performance of the task entrusted to the Spanish, Greek and Swiss delegations at the 5th session of the Lugano Convention's Standing Committee (Interlaken, 18.9.1998)

Introduction

The original impetus to draw up the present report was given at the last meeting of the Lugano Convention's Standing Committee during discussions aimed at exploring "the possibilities to improve its system" (point 4 of the agenda). The idea was triggered off by some remarks of the Italian delegation; these led the Committee to examine whether it was sufficient, as up till now, to simply take cognizance of the case-law materials communicated by the services of the Court of justice in application of Protocol No. 2 or whether it should go a step further and start analysing it. This would in particular also entail analysing the case-law relating to the Brussels Convention and "underlining the current divergencies of interpretation as well as those which may occur in the future" (minutes of the 5th meeting of the Standing Committee, point II.4, fifth paragraph). Questions having been raised as to the appropriateness of such an undertaking as well as to its consistency with the provisions of Protocol No. 2, the Committee decided to postpone its final decision until a "model report" on national case-law had been drawn up (above-mentioned minutes, point II.4, sixth paragraph). Indeed, in the light of such a report, which is as yet experimental, the Committee would be in a better position to take a final decision concerning the proposals as to the use of the case-law materials relating to the Lugano Convention. This is precisely the purpose of the present report and its authors hope it will lay the foundations for an "in-depth discussion" on the matter (above-mentioned minutes, ibid).

In accordance with the general feeling expressed at the meeting, the drafters of the present report agreed to base it above all on the case-law communicated by the services of the Court of Justice in application of Protocol No. 2 of the Lugano Convention and, in principle, to concentrate their research on one single provision of the Convention. Insofar however as this first experimental report was to lay the foundations for a discussion aiming not only at ensuring the conformity of the system envisaged with Protocol No. 2, but also its appropriateness and its practical and actual interest, the authors took the liberty of also trying to give a brief overview of the case-law relating to the Lugano Convention. Moreover, they agreed to focus this report on art. 5.1, which, apart from the interest it offers in itself, is the most often quoted provision in the case-law materials under survey.

I. PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS

In application of Protocol No. 2 of the Lugano Convention, the competent service of the Court of Justice (i.e. the Division Library, Research and Documentation) has currently brought out seven (7) fascicles relating to case-law. The first one was communicated to the Contracting States in 1992 and the latest one in July 1998. The first three fascicles have moreover been published by the Swiss Institute of comparative Law (Collection of jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice and of the highest courts of the States Parties concerning the Lugano Convention, Schulthess Polygraphischer Verlag, vol. I/1992, vol. II/1993 and vol. III/1994, Zurich 1996, 1997 and 1998).

The seven above-mentioned fascicles contain all the judgments which the Court of Justice gave since 1992 on the interpretation of the Brussels Convention as well as a large selection of national case-law materials; the latter concern both Brussels and Lugano and currently total over two hundred (200) national decisions including those relating to requests for preliminary rulings. With a few exceptions, which mostly concern the first fascicles (or the preliminary procedure), the judgments were all delivered by the Supreme Courts of the Contracting States.

There are twenty-five (25) of them relating to the Lugano Convention, some of which also concern the Brussels Convention.

Some of those twenty-five decisions declare the Lugano Convention to be inapplicable ratione temporis, but mention it all the same*,* either to simply recall a legal instrument destined to enter into force in the near future and which might sanction different solutions (Norwegian Høyesterett, 20 January 1993, Information No. 1993/43, art. 6/1 – see also German Bundesgerichtshof, 21 November 1996, Information No. 1997/43, art. 18, which also concerns the Brussels Convention), or in order to corroborate the interpretation envisaged under national law (Norwegian Høyesterett, 31 May 1994, Information No. 1995/20, art. 5.3, Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof, 8 April 1997, Information No. 1998/12, art. V of Protocol No. 1).

As for the other decisions, i.e. those which actually interpret and apply the Lugano Convention, one should note from the outset that they offer elements of interpretation of nearly every provision of the Convention which offers more than a merely average interest (art.1, 5.1, 5.3, 6.1, 16, 17, 21, 24, 27-28, 31, 54) and that, as a general rule, they follow the case-law developed in application of the Brussels Convention faithfully.

It also seems to us to be useful to point out that the currently available case-law materials relating to the Lugano Convention are considerable and that the twenty-five above-mentioned decisions, which serve as a basis for the present report, were chosen by the services of the Registrar of the Court of Justice in application of Protocol No. 2 of the Convention. Let us add here that, whilst the services of the Registrar of the Court of Justice (which is the central body entrusted with implementing the system of exchange of information set up by the above-mentioned Protocol No. 2) necessarily possess the most complete collection of decisions relating to the Lugano Convention, such decisions are published more and more often in numerous law periodicals; apart from the publications which are of purely national interest (as, for instance, the commentary on Swiss case-law by Volken in the Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Internationales und europäisches Recht), the International Litigation Procedure (hereafter ILP) is especially worthy of mention as it regularly publishes decisions of all the Contracting States in English or translated into English.

May we also specify that all through this report the term "judgment" will be used in an overall sense, so as to extend to any judgment given by a court or tribunal of a Contracting State, whatever it may be called, including a decree, order, decision or writ of execution (see in the same sense art. 25 of the Convention), as well as judgments given within the framework of exequatur proceedings.

II. OVERVIEW OF THE CASE-LAW

If one leaves aside the judgments relating to art. 5.1, which will be analysed more in detail in chapter III hereafter, as well as certain judgments declaring the Convention to be inapplicable ratione temporis, one can present the following overview of the case-law, according to the subject-matter of each decision:

A. With respect to the material scope of application of the Convention, one should mention two judgments, which both declare the Convention to be inapplicable: one case concerned a request for protective measures of the conjugal union including maintenance claims (Swiss Bundesgericht, 27 May 1993, Information No. 1994/12) and the other, which concerned the compulsory winding-up of a State-owned enterprise and the companies controlled by it as well as a prohibition to pay the debts, was qualified by the national court as "proceedings analogous" to bankruptcy within the meaning of art. 1.2.2 (Norwegian Høyesterett, 18 January 1996, Information No. 1996/28).

B. One single judgment (Swedish Högsta Domstolen, 23 February 1994, Information No. 1996/12) concerns exclusive jurisdiction. It related to proceedings concerned with the registration or validity of patents and the national court held that the rule of art.16.4 does not extend to a dispute between an employee for whose invention a patent has been applied for and his employer, where the dispute regards their respective rights in that patent.

C. There are two judgments relating to prorogation of jurisdiction. The first concerned the definition of a stipulation in favour of one party only, in a case where one also had to pay account to art. I a of Protocol No. 1 (Tribunale d'appello del Canton Ticino, in Switzerland, 2nd November 1993, Information No. 1994/17). The second concerned the formal requirements in the light of the case-law of the Court of Justice pertaining to the Brussels Convention (Norwegian Høyesterett, 17 December 1993, Information No. 1994/19).

D. As for the alternative criteria of jurisdiction, if one leaves aside the judgments falling within the ambit of art. 5.1, which will be dealt with in the following chapter, one can, strangely enough, only find two single judgments, which were both delivered by the Supreme Court of Norway (Norwegian Hoyesterett, 31 May 1994, Information No. 1995/20, above-mentioned in chapter I, and 6 June 1996, Information No. 1997/36)[*]. They concern matters relating to tort, which are governed by art. 5.3; however the Court decided the cases in application of national law, because the Lugano Convention was inapplicable ratione temporis. One should nevertheless note that both decisions concern disputes relating to cross-frontier defamation and that the most recent one expressly mentions the ECJ judgment of 7.3.1995 in the C-68/93 Shevill/Press Alliance case.

E. With respect to the special jurisdiction foreseen in art. 6, the only judgments which will be mentioned are those relating to point 1 and concerning a plurality of defendants. There are three of them, two of which in particular stand out. One is an English judgment which refuses to apply the forum non conveniens theory with respect to the co-defendant domiciled in another Contracting State (High Court, 26 March 1992, Information No. 1993/42) and the other is a Norwegian decision. In the latter case the court had to examine whether the fact that the dispute between the plaintiff and the other co-defendant had later been settled out of court, without that circumstance having led the Norwegian court to renounce exercising its jurisdiction, could arouse the suspicion that art. 6.1 had merely been invoked in order to prevent the foreign defendant from being sued before the courts of his domicile (Høyesteretts kjaeremålsutvalg, 23 February 1996, Information No. 1997/21). The third judgment, given by the same Norwegian court, does not seem to be of great interest (Høyesteretts kjaeremålsutvalg, 17 August 1995, Information No. 1996/26). One may also recall that amongst the judgments declaring the Convention to be inapplicable ratione temporis one again comes across a Norwegian decision concerning a plurality of defendants (Høyesterett, 20 January 1993, Information No. 1993/43, mentioned previously in chapter I).

F. There are two judgments on the interpretation of article 21 relating to lis pendens; both concern the determination of the court "first seised" and in that matter they seem to follow the case-law of the Community (English High Court, 14 October 1993, Information No. 1995/15, and Swiss Bundesgericht, 26 September 1997, Information No. 1998/13).

G. Two judgments relate to provisional measures. Of those two, one is English and concerns the jurisdiction of the courts of a Contracting State to order the defendant, who is domiciled in that State, but is sued in another, to refrain from disposing of his assets and to disclose their localisation in the whole world (Court of Appeal, 11 June 1997, Information No. 1998/34). The other concerns the enforcement of a judicial sequestration order in another contracting State (Swedish Högsta Domstolen, 12 September 1995, Information No. 1996/27).

[*] The authors thank Ms Løvold of the Norwegian delegation for her comments on these decisions.

H. Of the three judgments concerning the grounds for refusing recognition and enforcement, two relate to cases in which the defendant was in default of appearance in the country of origin. However, only the first, which related to a payment order, directly concerned the refusal ground ad hoc, i.e. art. 27.2, which is moreover the provision of art. 27 most often invoked in practice (Swiss Bundesgericht, 12 June 1997, Information No. 1998/15). In the other, which concerned an order to pay costs issued to a person who was unaware of the proceedings, the ground invoked was that of public policy foreseen in art. 27.1 (Norwegian Høyesteretts kjaeremålsutvalg, 29 March 1996, Information No. 1997/28). The third does not seem to be of any particular interest (Norwegian Høyesteretts k*jaeremålsutvalg*, 7 March 1996, Information No. 1997/26.).

I. In matters relating to the enforcement procedure (art. 31 et seq. of the Convention) one can find one single judgment. It refers to the effects of the judgment in the State in which enforcement is sought and thereby takes into account the limitations resulting from the application of the law of the State of execution proper (Swedish Högsta Domstolen, 12 September 1995, Information No. 1996/2, mentioned previously under G).

K. The still recent entry into force of the Convention gave rise to two – previously mentioned - judgments on the application of the transitional provisions of art. 54.2. The judgment of the *Tribunale d'appello del Canton Ticino (2 November 1993, Information No. 1994/17*, previously mentioned under C) ruled that enforcement was to be authorized in accordance with the Convention once the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin had been examined. In the other case, the Swiss Bundesgericht (12 June 1997, Information No. 1998/15, previously mentioned under H), after having held that the court of the State where enforcement was sought was bound by the findings of fact on which the court in the State of origin had based its jurisdiction, refused to recognize or enforce the foreign judgment on the ground that it neither contained any findings of fact nor stated the grounds on which it rests.

III. CASE-LAW RELATING IN PARTICULAR TO ART. 5.1

The fascicles brought out by the services of the Court of Justice contain five judgments concerning art. 5.1, i.e., in chronological order:

- Swiss Bundesgericht, 18 January 1996, Information No. 1997/18
- Swiss Bundesgericht, 21 February 1996, Information No. 1998/14
- Norwegian Høyesteretts kjaeremålsutvalg, 10 May 1996, Information No. 1997/33

- Swedish Högsta Domstolen, 13 June 1997, Information No. 1997/45

- English Court of Appeal, 13 July 1997, Information No. 1998/33

However, so as to allow the national delegations to get a broader overview of the case-law relating to art. 5.1, we thought that it would be appropriate to extend our analysis to other judgments of Supreme courts given during the same period as the five above-mentioned judgments, i.e. during the judicial years 1995/1996 and 1996/1997; there are two (2) of them:

- Swiss Bundesgericht, 23 August 1996
- Norwegian Høyesterett, 15 May 1997.

The most recent judgments, in particular the Austrian ones which were published in the Zeitschrift für Rechtsvergleichung, Internationales Privatrecht und Europarecht (Oberster Gerichtshof, 9.9.1997, 1998.163, 10.9.1998, 1999.23 [sum.], 1999.23 [sum.] and 1999.24 [sum.], 28.10.1997, 1998.167 and 1999.35 [sum.], 27.1.1998, 1997.157, 25.2.1998, Juristische Blätter 1998.518, 12.8.1998, 1999.22 – see also Norwegian Høyesterett, 27.1.1998, ILP 1998.550 [sum.], and Swiss Bundesgericht, 9.3.1998, Coll., vol.124 III, p. 188) can be included in the next report, assuming, of course, that the Standing Committee decides to pursue its examination of national case-law by drawing up reports.

Thus the present report only mentions the seven (7) above-mentioned judgments, which were given during the judicial years 1995/1996 and 1996/1997.

We will successively examine the contents of each of those judments and its conformity with the case-law concerning the Brussels Convention (for the judgment under [b] we will add some subtitles because it presents certain special features).

(a) Swiss Bundesgericht, 18 January 1996, Information No. 1997/18, T/C [ILP 1998.77]

The corporation S., with its registered office in Switzerland, sold to the Italian company T. an exhaust gas cleaning unit which it installed on the spot. Afterwards the company T. claimed that the system was deficient and rescinded the contract. The corporation S. brought an action in Zurich against the Italian company T. for payment of the purchase price; the company T. raised the plea of lack of international jurisdiction. The parties disagreed on the question whether an agreement conferring jurisdiction incorporated in their contract was valid. However, the Federal Court first examined whether the courts of Zurich had jurisdiction within the meaning of art. 5.1, a question to which it gave an affirmative answer. It then found that, whereas one should resort to an autonomous interpretation of the concept of "matters relating to a contract", the place of performance should be governed by the law applicable to the contract or the obligation. In the case of entirely bilateral contracts it further held that according to the rule of jurisdiction foreseen by art. 5.1 there was a different place of performance for each obligation, the object of the dispute being in the present instance the claim relating to the purchase price. The Federal Court applies the substantive rules of the Vienna Convention on contracts for the international sale of goods "as the applicable law". By interpreting art. 57 and 58 of that Convention, it comes to the conclusion that in the present case one is not dealing with a transaction where each obligation is conditional on the counter-performance, because at no time of the performance of the contract did the partial obligation of one of the parties have to be performed at the same time as that of the other. It follows that it is not letter [b] but letter [a] of article 57.1 of the Vienna Convention, which is applicable and that according to that last provision the purchase price should be paid at the place where the seller and plaintiff is established, which means that Zurich would have jurisdiction.

In its judgment of 4.3.1982 in the Peters/ZNAV case (34/82) the Court of Justice (hereafter ECJ in this chapter III) had already ruled that the concept of "matters relating to a contract" should be interpreted autonomously, an interpretation which it for instance confirmed in its judgment of 8.3.1988 in the Arcado/Haviland case (9/87) and in that of 17.6.1992 in the Handte/TMCS case (C-26/91). But it was in its judgment of 6.10.1976 in the Tessili/Dunlop case (12/76) that the ECJ ruled that the place of performance was to be determined by the law applicable to the contract or the obligation. Furthermore, in its judgment of 6.10.1976 in the De Bloss/Bouyer case (14/76) the ECJ held that, within the framework of a bilateral contract, there can be a different jurisdiction for the disputes relating to the main obligation of each party. Finally, in its judgment of 29.6.1994 in the Custom Made/Stawa Metallbau case (C-288/92), the ECJ decided that the place of performance can also be determined by the lex causae, even if the latter is a uniform law, as for instance the Hague Convention on the law applicable to the international sale of goods in the case adjudged by the ECJ and the Vienna Convention on contracts for the international sale of goods, which replaced the Hague Convention, in the case adjudged by the Federal Court.

One can therefore state that in the present judgment the Federal Court resorted to the same concept of jurisdiction in contractual matters as that which was held applicable in the case-law of the ECJ.

b) Swiss Bundesgericht, 21 February 1996, Information No. 1998/14, B/K

1.The judgment

In 1993, Ms K. sued Mr B (domiciled in Rome or London) in Zurich. She brought an action against the defendant for the repayment of two loans. The defendant contested both the existence of the loans and the territorial jurisdiction of the court in Zurich. The question was whether, within the meaning of art. 5.1 of the Lugano Convention, the place of performance was in Zurich.

The Federal Court was of the opinion that the place of performance of the obligation to repay the loans may also be determined by an agreement between the parties provided that such an agreement is valid under the applicable lex causae. In such a case, in principle, the agreement need not be entered into in one of the forms required by art. 17. However, the agreement must relate to the actual place of performance; this requirement aims at avoiding that the rules of form contained in art. 17 be circumvented.

On the other hand, with respect to the application of art. 5.1 and the procedure aiming at identifying the place of performance in dispute between the parties, the Federal Court distinguishes according to whether or not the factual allegations of the plaintiff also have a bearing on the judgment as to substance.

In the former situation, an hypothesis which was not that of the case adjudged by the Federal Court, the court would be empowered to determine its jurisdiction merely by relying on the contents of the claim and to postpone examining any contrary allegations of the defendant till the case was examined on the merits. That principle, which – let us repeat it – is only applicable if the contested claim is relevant both with respect to the examination as to jurisdiction under the Lugano Convention and as to the substance of the claim, aims at protecting the defendant: since the latter must reply to decisive allegations both with respect to jurisdiction and to the substance of the claim, he must afterwards be in a position to oppose a second claim which would be substantively identical to the first by raising the plea of res judicata.

If, on the other hand, the existence of an agreement concerning the place of performance – claimed by the plaintiff, but contested by the opposite party – is only relevant with respect to the determination of jurisdiction but has no bearing on the claim as to its substance, the court cannot simply leave it to the allegations of the plaintiff on that point, should the defendant contest them; the plaintiff must, on the contrary, if necessary, submit evidence on that point. In the present case, the claim for repayment of the loans in dispute could be adjudged on the merits without it being necessary to decide whether the place of performance of the obligation was in Zurich or not. Thus the case was remanded to the cantonal court so that the latter require the submission of proofs on the agreement relating to the place of performance according to art. 5.1 of the Lugano Convention.

2. Observance of the case-law relating to the Brussels Convention

In its judgment of 17.1.1980 in the Zelger/Salinitri case (56/79), the ECJ is of the opinion that jurisdiction within the meaning of art. 5.1 can be based on an agreement determining the place of performance, even if no particular form was chosen, it being understood that the form requirements foreseen in art. 17 need in principle not be observed. The ECJ based its interpretation on the difference between the teleological and the systematic conception of art. 5.1 and that of art. 17: whereas the forum foreseen in art. 17 is based on an agreement between the parties relating directly to jurisdiction, it is the proximity of the forum to the object of the dispute which is considered decisive in the case of art. 5.1. That is sound and coherent reasoning even if Advocate general Capotorti (and later on various authors) perceived the danger that art. 17 could thus be circumvented. By denying that a purely fictive agreement on the place of performance may have any power to confer jurisdiction within the meaning of art. 5.1 the Federal Court not only takes into consideration that preoccupation, but it also in a way anticipates the judgment that the ECJ was to deliver one year later in the MSG/Gravières Rhénanes case (21.2.1997, C – 106/95). Indeed, according to that judgment an "agreement on the place of performance, which is designed….solely to establish that the courts for a particular place have jurisdiction" (tenor, point 2), cannot confer jurisdiction.

3. New development of the case-law relating to the Conventions

The opinion according to which "one need not proceed to a formal initial analysis" of the allegations of the plaintiff, such as described in the fourth above-mentioned paragraph of our presentation of the Bundesgericht's judgment, is shared by some German and Swiss authors (see Kropholler, Europäisches Zivilprozessrecht, Heidelberg 1998,6th ed., art. 19, note 5).

In its above-mentioned judgment in the Peters/ZNAV case, the ECJ simply found that the national courts could determine their own jurisdiction in accordance with art. 5.1. without being obliged to examine the case as to its merits (point 17). The above judgment of the Federal Court seems to tackle this problem in a more sophisticated manner, insofar as it distinguishes according to the consequences that the allegations relating to jurisdiction could have on the merits. Such an approach could be generalized and its scope could perhaps be extended beyond the case foreseen in art. 5.1.

One may however note that the rules of the Convention concerning "examination as to jurisdiction and admissibility" (see in particular art. 19) seem to be interpreted in the sense that, if the allegations of the plaintiff are only relevant with respect to the determination of jurisdiction, the court seised cannot be obliged to rely solely on them. Furthermore, the conventions do not allow one to draw the conclusion that there is a real duty to ordain the submission of proofs, where the facts generating jurisdiction are contested, such a duty resulting - possibly, as in the present case - from national law.

c) Norwegian Høyesterettskjaeremålsutvalg, 10 May 1996, Information No. 1997/33 Deutsche Bank
[ILP 1997.8, sum.]

The analysis of this judgment is based on the English summary prepared by the Norwegian authority entrusted with the exchange of information, as well as on an officious French translation kindly communicated by the services of the Committee, the Norwegian language not being known to the authors of the present report.

The case concerned an action brought in Norway by virtue of art. 5.1, the application of the said provision having in this instance been contested by the defendant on the ground that the claim in dispute was not of a contractual, but of a delictual nature. The Norwegian court seised with the claim seems to have held, that in order to declare itself competent, it should be in possession of sufficiently clear indications ("relatively clear indications" according to the terms of the summary drawn up by the national authority) of a contractual relationship and that, besides, it was for the plaintiff to give these indications. Such an interpretative approach of art. 5.1 seems to us to harmonize perfectly with the case-law of the ECJ relating to Effer/Kantner (4.3.1982, 38/81), to which the national judgment moreover refers.

d) Swiss Bundesgericht, 13 August 1996, K/Ms P and F

Ms P. and F., domiciled in Geneva, brought an action against K. domiciled in London, for the payment of a sum of money due for a brokerage commission. The defendant argued that the cantonal court had transgressed art. 5.1 of the Lugano Convention by not examining sufficiently whether the case in dispute fell within the concept of "matters relating to a contract " or not, especially as the existence, respectively the validity of the contract were in dispute. Such an examination, it was contended, would have led to the conclusion that the said provision was not applicable.

The Federal Court was of the opinion that the concept of "matters relating to a contract" is an autonomous notion which is not to be interpreted by reference to the national law of a State. It includes disputes relating to the existence or validity of a contract, failing which the defendant would have only to claim that the contract does not exist or is not valid, in order to evade the jurisdiction established by art. 5.1. The Federal Court adds that the obligation to be taken into consideration is neither any one of the obligations resulting from the contract, nor the characteristic obligation, but the obligation on which the action is based. Furthermore, the place where the obligation has been or must be performed should be determined according to the law governing the obligation in dispute according to the conflict rules of the forum. The special jurisdiction would then derive from the place of performance designated by that law. The Court concludes that the defendant could be sued in Switzerland, because, according to the applicable Swiss law, the payment must be made at the place where the creditor is domiciled at the time of the payment, unless otherwise stipulated. The Court also adds an argument based on art. 18, since the defendant had never contested the jurisdiction of the Genevese authorities.

In this judgment, the Federal Court also follows the above-mentioned case-law of the ECJ (see under judgment of the Swiss Bundesgericht of 18.I.1996, point III. a above): a special forum for each principal obligation in the case of entirely bilateral contracts and determination of the place of performance according to the law applicable to the contract, respectively to the obligation. Moreover, as results from the equally above-mentioned judgment of the ECJ in the Effer/Kanter case, the concept of "matters relating to a contract " also includes the case where the very formation of the contract is litigious.

e) Norwegian Høyesterett, 15 May 1997, Annie Haug
[ILP 1998.804]

The heirs of the recipient of a loan repayed it to the creditor and then turned against the guarantors. The latter were domiciled in Spain, but the action was brought in Norway, place were the loan was repayed. The defendants objected that the Norwegian courts lacked jurisdiction, on the ground that the dispute was not of a contractual nature and that, in any case, art. 5.1 was only applicable in commercial matters. The court of first instance accepted the plea of lack of jurisdiction, but the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment and the Supreme Court confirmed the appeal judgment.

As for the objection that the dispute was not of a contractual nature, the Supreme Court held itself to be bound by the findings of the Court of Appeal, the latter having concluded that the dispute was of a contractual nature, and, therefore, that art. 5.1 was applicable. In consequence, the Supreme Court directly expressed an opinion only on the other aspect relating to lack of jurisdiction, i.e. the inapplicability of art. 5.1 to disputes of a non-commercial nature, an objection which it refutes, by stating that such a limitation by no means results from the text of art. 5.1.

As to that last point, the judgment of the Supreme Court seems to be in harmony with the case-law of the ECJ, which never limited the applicability of art. 5.1 to disputes of a commercial nature (see the above-mentioned judgment in the Peters/ZNAV case, as well as the judgment of 15.1.1987 in the Shenavai/Kreischer case 266/85); the same applies in regard to academic teaching (Jenard Report, p. 23; Donzallaz, La Convention de Lugano, Berne, Staempfli, III/1998, No. 4442-4443) and, to our knowledge, to national case-law (Italian Corte di Cassazione, 1.10.1980, Rep. I-5.1.2-B32).

However, with respect to the contractual nature of the dispute, one can reasonably wonder whether and to what extent the interpretation given in the present instance is in accordance with the above-mentioned Handte/TMCS case of the ECJ. Of course, the Høyesterett did not directly examine whether the litigious obligation was contractual or not, as it considered itself to be bound, under national law, by the findings of the Court of Appeal, whose reasoning is not known to us. But it seems to us, that, as in the Handte/TMCS case, there was in this instance "no obligation which had been freely assumed by one party towards the other" (point 15 of the Handte/TMCS case).

(f) Swedish Högsta Domstolen, 13 June 1997, Information No. 1998/45, Probo Ab[*]

Like the judgment analysed under (c), the language of the judgment delivered on 13 June 1997 in the Probo Ab case by the Supreme Swedish Court is unknown to the drafters of the present report. In addition, no summary was established by the national authority entrusted with the exchange of information, the short analysis which follows having been rendered possible thanks to the help of the services of the European Commission in the form of an officious French translation of the relevant judgment (let us also note that a very brief summary of that judgment appeared in English in the Praxis des internationalen Privat- und Verfahrensrechts, 1999, 54).

The proceedings opposed a creditor to a person who provided a guarantee for his debtor, the proceedings having been brought before the Swedish courts on the ground that the place of performance of the obligation resulting from the guarantee was to be performed in Sweden.

The first question which arose was whether such an action, based on a guarantee contract, fell within the scope of art. 5.1 or not. The national courts, which from the outset recall the principle of the autonomous interpretation of the concept of "matters relating to a contract", answer the above-mentioned question in the affirmative; this seems to us to be in accordance with the case-law and academic teaching relating to the Brussels Convention, even if we are not able to support our position by an ad hoc quotation, other than that of a judgment of the French Court of cassation of 3 March 1992 (Information No. 1992/12).

Moreover, with respect to the determination of the competent jurisdiction under art. 5.1, the Högsta Domstolen faithfully follows the interpretation consisting in taking into consideration the "litigious" obligation and determining its place of performance in accordance with the lex causae, identified by the conflict rules of the forum, even if it did not have to choose between Swedish and English law (the only two laws which could come into consideration), as in both cases the disputed obligation was to be performed at the domicile of the plaintiff, i.e. in Stockholm.

(g) English Court of Appeal, 13 July 1997, Information No. 1998/33, Agnew [*]

The judgment dealt with a claim for annulment/rescission of a contract on the ground that the behaviour of the other party during the negotiations was in breach of good faith. It was a contract of reinsurance and the behaviour in bad faith consisted in "misrepresentation and non-disclosure of material facts".

The question was whether the dispute fell within the scope of art. 5.1 and, if so, which would be the competent court according to that provision.

Both the Court of first instance and the Court of Appeal answered the first part of the question in the affirmative and then held the English courts to have jurisdiction as the negotiations had taken place in England.

With respect to the applicability of art. 5.1, the Court of Appeal, whilst recognizing that the obligation to act in good faith has its origin in equity and that it has not, as such, a contractual character, based its conclusion on the observation that in any case the above-mentioned obligation would only have a practical meaning in relation to a particular contract. Moreover the fact that the action aimed at the annulment/rescission of the contract does not seem to have shed any doubt on the applicability of art. 5.1; insofar as the action was of a contractual nature, the Court of [*] The authors thank Mr Van der Velden of the Dutch delegation for his comments on this decision.

Appeal does not distinguish according to whether it aims at the performance of the contract or its validity/annulment.

On the other hand, with respect to the determination of the competent jurisdiction pursuant to art. 5.1, the reasoning of the Court of Appeal is essentially based on pragmatic considerations leading to the conclusion that, insofar as the action is based on an alleged breach of the principle of good faith during the negotiations, the court best placed to hear the case can only be the one of the place where the negotiations were held.

On the whole, this interpretation seems to us to be in accordance with the Brussels Convention, even if we are not in a position to support this allegation by precedents relating to national case-law or that of the Community. Only the second aspect of the question relating to the applicability of art. 5.1 seems to have been examined in the case-law of the Community, in particular, in the above-mentioned Effer/Kantner case; in that instance however the fact that the contract was void was only invoked incidentally, in a plea relating to lack of jurisdiction and not as the main issue in proceedings on the merits, as is the case here.

We can however make the following observations:

The decision of the Court of Appeal adopts the well-known principle of the Brussels Convention according to which art. 5 should be interpreted by reference to the objectives of the Convention and not to the concepts of the national laws, and is based, to a great extent, on the judgments of the ECJ relating to art. 5 (above-mentioned judgments Bloos, Shenavai and Custom Made/Stawa Metallbau, as well as the judgment of 27.9.1988 in the Kalfelis/Schröder case). In other words, the Court of Appeal acts as if it had to interpret the Brussels Convention.

The interpretation given by the Court of Appeal on the applicability of art. 5.1 corresponds to that already advocated by the the prevailing academic opinion with regard to the Brussels Convention (Gaudemet-Tallon, Les Conventions de Bruxelles et de Lugano, Paris L.G.D.J., 1996, 2nd ed., p. 112, note 22), as well as to national case-law (Italian Corte di Cassazione, 17.2.1981, Cahiers de droit européen 1985.469, Cour de cassation française, 25.1.1983, Revue critique de droit international privé 1983.516). The same applies with respect to the culpa in contrahendo in particular (Donzallaz, op. cit., No. 4531-4534).

It can also be said of the obligation foreseen in view of applying art. 5.1, i.e. the obligation to act in good faith during the negotiations. The above-mentioned judgment of the French Cour de cassation is not sufficiently conclusive and could perhaps lend itself to two different interpretations, but the Italian judgment is much less ambiguous and closer to that of the English Court of Appeal. It concerned a contract that had been entered into orally in Italy but was to be formalized later on in Paris, which never happened; even if several obligations were to be performed in Italy, the Corte di Cassazione held the French courts to have jurisdiction, on the ground that for the purpose of applying art. 5.1, one had to take into account the obligation which had been transgressed and which justified the rescission of the contract (in the same sense Donzallaz, Nos 4611 and 4612, who quotes the above-mentioned Italian judgment as well as Schlosser Kommentar, no. 9, ad art. 5).

Last but not least, the judgment commented on expressly mentions the need for a uniform interpretation of the Brussels and the Lugano Conventions in accordance with Protocol No. 2 of the Lugano Convention.

In conclusion, the judgment of the Court of Appeal seems to proceed on the assumption that both conventions are to be interpreted uniformly and offers new elements of interpretation of a question in relation to which the case-law concerning the Brussels Convention does not yet seem quite set.

IV. FINAL CONSIDERATIONS

The foregoing analysis seems to point to the fact that the case-law on the Lugano Convention is developing in a similar manner to that relating to the Brussels Convention, whilst sometimes allowing greater clarification and a more in-depth research into the subject, as results for instance from the judgment of the Swiss Bundesgericht of 21 February 1996 and of the English Court of Appeal of 13 July 1997. Besides, even if a given decision should diverge somewhat from the case-law concerning the Brussels Convention, as appears to have happened in the case of the Norwegian Høyesterett of 15 May 1997, we are under the impression that those divergencies are not due to the specific nature of the Lugano Convention, but that they could well appear within the framework of the Brussels Convention itself.

However, these conclusions are only provisional and stated with some diffidence, insofar as our detailed analysis of the case-law refers solely to art. 5.1, the judgments concerning the other provisions of the Convention having only been examined in the "overview" of chapter II above. We therefore suggested to the Standing Committee to extend the analysis of the case-law undertaken in this report with respect to art. 5.1 alone to all the provisions of the Lugano Convention which have given rise to case-law. In this way, one will on the one hand be able to verify to what extent our conclusions relating to art. 5.1 have a general impact, and, on the other hand, case-law materials collected in application of Protocol No. 2 would have additional value, because they would be easier to use.

In our opinion the most appropriate method would be to draw up in a first stage a consolidated version of the report which would cover all the case-law materials currently available, i.e. from the 1st to the 8th fascicle, and afterwards to foresee annual updatings, whenever new fascicles are published. To judge from our experience, we take the liberty of adding that such work would be very much facilitated by material support, aiming mainly at covering the expenses occasioned by some translations and/or secretarial work.

Furthermore, the authors of the report draw your attention to the fact that several judgments appearing in fascicles written in "unusual" languages are later translated in particular into English in order to be published, in their entirety or in a summarized form, in law reviews. The fascicles mention these translations if they are available at the time each fascicle is prepared, but several translations are only published later on. In our report, we were careful to mention these "new" translations, i.e. those which did not yet exist at the time each fascicle was prepared and which are not mentioned on the endpaper of each judgment included in the fascicles, and we think that it would be useful if the future reports (as well as the publications of the Swiss Institute of comparative law) would do the same.

In conclusion, the authors would like to thank the services of the Committee for the assistance they gave in securing the French translation of judgments (c) and (f) of chapter III and they furthermore acknowledge that their task has been greatly facilitated by the preliminary analysis of the case-law which the competent services of the Court of justice communicated in application of Protocol No. 2. They would also like to thank the members of the Standing Committee for the trust they placed in them by giving them the task of drawing up this first experimental report and express the wish that this report will indeed enable a useful discussion on the methods used to follow up of the case-law collected by the services of the Court of justice in application of Protocol No. 2.

DEUXIÈME RAPPORT SUR LA JURISPRUDENCE DES TRIBUNAUX NATIONAUX ERELATIVE Á LA CONVENTION DE LUGANO

établi par H. Bull, G. Musger, F. Pocar

I. Introduction

Lors de sa réunion des 13 et 14 septembre 1999, le Comité permanent de la Convention de Lugano a reçu un rapport sur la jurisprudence des tribunaux nationaux relative à la convention, qui avait été établi à partir des décisions transmises à la Cour de justice des Communautés européennes (CJCE) par les États signataires et adhérents, conformément au Protocole n° 2 annexé à la convention. Ce rapport portait sur les décisions contenues dans les sept premiers fascicules publiés par la Cour (par sa direction « Bibliothèque, recherche et documentation »). Le Comité permanent a décidé que les délégations autrichienne, italienne et norvégienne établiraient pour la réunion suivante un deuxième rapport analogue portant sur les décisions contenues dans le 8ème fascicule, diffusé en juillet 1999. Le 8ème fascicule contient 71 décisions relatives soit à la convention de Lugano, soit à la convention de Bruxelles, qui ont été prononcées par les juridictions suivantes :

Convention de Lugano*:
Oberster Gerichtshof (Autriche): 22 décisions
Tribunal fédéral / Bundesgericht (Suisse): 7 décisions
Bundesgerichtshof (Allemagne): 1 décision
Corte di Cassazione (Italie): 4 décisions
Norges Høyesterett (Norvège): 1 décision
Korkein oikeus / Högsta domstolen (Finlande): 2 décisions[*]

[*] Les auteurs du rapport remercient de sa coopération de M. Gustav Bygglin de la Cour suprême finlandaise, qui leur a procuré des résumés de ces décisions en suédois.

Convention de Bruxelles* :
Cour de justice des CE: 6 décisions
Bundesgerichtshof (Allemagne): 3 décisions
Tribunal Supremo (Espagne): 3 décisions
Cour de Cassation (France): 11 décisions
House of Lords (Royaume-Uni) : 2 décisions
Corte di Cassazione (Italie): 6 décisions
Supreme Court (Irlande): 1 décision

Décisions de renvoi à la Cour de justice des CE afin qu'elle statue à titre préjudiciel :
Hoge Raad (Pays-Bas) 1 décision (Affaire C-387/98 de la CJCE)
Cour d'appel de Versailles (France): 1 décision (Affaire C-412/98 de la CJCE)

Comme dans le premier rapport, seules les décisions portant sur la Convention de Lugano (37 décisions) seront présentées dans le présent rapport. Parmi ces 37 décisions, celle de la Norges Høyesterett (arrêt nº 69 du 8ème fascicule – décision du 15 mai 1997, 1.nº 286 K/1997, Annie Haug), figurait déjà dans le premier rapport. Nous renvoyons au résumé de la décision et aux commentaires que ce premier rapport faisait à son sujet.
Nous rappelons que la CJCE est tributaire des informations que lui fournissent les autorités des différents États sur la jurisprudence nationale. Les décisions nationales relatives aux Conventions de Bruxelles et de Lugano que la CJCE a été en mesure de diffuser ne constituent pas nécessairement une compilation complète des décisions relatives à ces conventions rendues par les juridictions nationales jugeant en dernier ressort. Il convient d'en tenir compte en lisant le rapport.
Les décisions portent sur une large éventail de questions, mais l'article 5, point 1, sur le forum solutionis est manifestement la disposition ayant fait l'objet du plus grand nombre de décisions : 26 sur 71, dont 16 concernent la Convention de Lugano. Vient ensuite, pour le nombre de litiges, l'article 17 sur les conventions attributives de juridiction (13 sur un total de 71 décisions, dont 6 relatives à la Convention de Lugano). Deux points du rapport, les points III et IV, sont par conséquent consacrés respectivement à l'article 5, point 1, et à l'article 17, les autres décisions étant présentées au point II.

II. Relevé de la jurisprudence

Mis à part les arrêts relatifs à l'article 5, point 1, et à l'article 17, qui feront l'objet d'une analyse plus détaillée aux points III et IV, ainsi que quelques arrêts d'intérêt mineur, nous pouvons présenter le relevé ci-après de la jurisprudence :

1. Le Tribunal fédéral suisse a explicitement décidé le 20 août 1998 (arrêt nº 35), de s'aligner sur la jurisprudence de la CJCE relative à la Convention de Bruxelles pour l'interprétation de la notion de « matières civile et commerciale » figurant à l'article 1er (affaire nº 814/79, Rüffer), soulignant par là l'importance que revêt d'une manière générale une interprétation uniforme des Conventions de Bruxelles et de Lugano. La décision contenait cependant quelques considérations sur les circonstances dans lesquelles une interprétation divergente des conventions serait justifiée. Cela pourrait être le cas, note le Tribunal fédéral, si l'interprétation d'une disposition de la Convention de Bruxelles était influencée par l'application d'une disposition de droit communautaire, par exemple par l'application du principe de non-discrimination à raison de la nationalité.
L'arrêt est sur le fond parfaitement conforme à la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne relative à l'article 1er. Le simple fait que l'une des parties soit une autorité publique n'exclut pas la matière du champ d'application de la convention. La question déterminante est celle de savoir si l'autorité en question a agi dans l'exercice de ses prérogatives de puissance publique (jure imperii) ou non (jure gestionis). En l'espèce, le défendeur, une entité publique italienne, avait agi dans le domaine de l'assurance-crédit, sans user de prérogatives de puissance publique. L'application de la convention a donc été admise.

2. Un arrêt (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 28 août 1997, arrêt nº 10) concerne l'interprétation de l'article 5, point 2 (obligations alimentaires). La demanderesse, une jeune femme domiciliée en Autriche, voulait intenter une action contre son père, domicilié en Suisse, pour le paiement d'une dot. Ignorant apparemment l'existence de l'article 5, point 2, elle demanda à la Cour suprême de désigner une juridiction compétente devant laquelle porter son action. Sa demande était fondée sur l'article 28 de la Jurisdiktionsnorm (loi autrichienne sur la procédure civile et l'organisation judiciaire). Cette disposition autorise la Cour suprême, si certaines conditions sont réunies, à désigner une juridiction compétente pour connaître d'une action pour laquelle les autres règles de droit national ou international ne désignent pas de juridiction territorialement compétente. La Cour a rejeté la demande, au motif que lorsque le droit autrichien est la lex causae, le paiement d'une dot relève de l'article 5, point 2. Cette disposition prévoyant que la compétence appartient au tribunal du domicile de demandeur, la Cour ne voyait pas de raison de désigner un tribunal compétent.

La question de savoir si le paiement d'une dot relève ou non de l'article 5, point 2, n'a été traitée que dans le cadre d'une question préjudicielle soumise à la Cour suprême. Néanmoins, on sait maintenant que cette obligation doit être qualifiée d'obligation alimentaire au sens de l'article 5, point 2. Compte tenu de la particularité des règles autrichiennes en matière de dot, il semble que cela soit conforme à la jurisprudence de la Cour de justice relative à cette disposition. Le droit autrichien considère la dot comme l'ultime effet de l'obligation alimentaire des parents. Ils doivent aider leurs enfants à démarrer dans la vie matrimoniale. La dot doit aller à l'enfant lui-même et non au conjoint. C'est pourquoi la Cour suprême a estimé que, lorsque le droit autrichien est la lex causae, la dot relève d'un concept autonome d'obligations alimentaires au sens de l'article 5, point 2.

3. Trois décisions portent, au moins en partie, sur l'article 5, point 3.

La première (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 27 janvier 1998, nº 18) concerne une action en restitution du prix dans une affaire dans laquelle la validité d'un contrat était contestée pour défaut de consentement. Le demandeur fondait la compétence des tribunaux autrichiens sur l'article 5, point 1, ou sur l'article 5, point 3. Le Cour suprême a accepté l'applicabilité de l'article 5, point 1, (voir ci-après point III, paragraphe 4), mais a refusé l'application de l'article 5, point 3. Elle a estimé que la notion de « matière délictuelle ou quasi délictuelle » devait être considérée comme une notion autonome – ainsi qu'en avait décidé la CJCE dans l'affaire Kalfelis/Schröder (affaire nº 189/87) – et qu'elle ne s'appliquait pas à une action fondée sur l'enrichissement sans cause après résolution du contrat.

Dans un autre arrêt relatif à l'article 5, point 3, (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 24 février 1998, nº 21) la Cour a eu à juger de la localisation de pertes purement économiques. Le demandeur, domicilié en Autriche, avait livré des marchandises à une société allemande sur la base d'un contrat de crédit assorti d'une clause de réserve de propriété. Mais la société allemande a tout de même vendu les marchandises et les acheteurs en ont acquis la propriété en vertu des règles allemandes de l'acquisition de bonne foi. Avant la date à laquelle le paiement devait avoir lieu, la société est devenue insolvable en raison de malversations de son directeur général, et les factures du demandeur sont restées impayées.

Le demandeur a cherché à obtenir une indemnisation en intentant contre le directeur général une action en responsabilité extracontractuelle. Le directeur étant domicilié en Allemagne, la compétence des tribunaux autrichiens ne pouvait être fondée que sur l'article 5, point 3. La Cour suprême a invoqué la jurisprudence de la CJCE (Bier/Mines de potasse, affaire 21/76 ; Dumez France SA, affaire 220/88 ; Shevill, affaire 68/93), aux termes de laquelle le demandeur peut choisir d'intenter son action soit devant le tribunal du lieu où l'événement causal s'est produit, soit devant celui du lieu où le préjudice est survenu.

Étant donné que le défendeur avait commis ses malversations en Allemagne, seule la deuxième possibilité entrait en pratique en ligne de compte. Invoquant deux décisions italiennes relatives à l'article 5, point 3, de la Convention de Bruxelles (qui vont plus ou moins dans le sens de la décision nº 60 citée ci-après), la Cour a considéré que la diminution du patrimoine du demandeur avait eu lieu à son domicile et que, étant la conséquence première et directe des malversations commises par le défendeur, le tribunal du domicile du demandeur était compétent aux termes de l'article 5, point 3.

Dans ses conclusions, le défendeur avait invoqué l'affaire Marinari jugée par la CJCE (affaire 364/93) pour montrer qu'une perte purement économique de patrimoine subie par le demandeur ne suffisait pas à établir la compétence en vertu de l'article 5, point 3. La Cour suprême a rejeté cet argument. Dans l'affaire Marinari, le CJCE avait estimé que les conséquences ultérieures d'un préjudice survenues dans un État différent de celui où est survenu le préjudice initial n'entraient pas en ligne de compte pour l'application de l'article 5, point 3. La Cour suprême a considéré en l'espèce que la perte initiale avait été subie au domicile du demandeur. Vu que la vente des marchandises par le défendeur, qui avait eu lieu en Allemagne, avait eu pour conséquence directe la perte de ses biens par le demandeur, on peut se demander si la Cour suprême a appliqué correctement la jurisprudence Marinari. On pourrait faire valoir que la perte des biens a été le préjudice initial subi par le demandeur, auquel cas, une réduction de son patrimoine situé en Autriche pourrait être qualifiée de conséquence n'entrant pas en ligne de compte pour l'application de l'article 5, point 3.

Le troisième arrêt relatif à l'article 5, point 3, (Corte di Cassazione italienne, 22 mai 1998, nº 60) concerne la détermination du lieu où le fait dommageable s'est produit. Le demandeur avait subi une opération chirurgicale en Suisse et s'était plaint, deux années plus tard, que son état de santé avait empiré en Italie, où il avait son domicile. Il a poursuivi le chirurgien en Italie en fondant la compétence des tribunaux italiens sur le droit du demandeur de choisir entre le lieu de l'événement causal et le lieu où le fait dommageable s'est produit, droit établi par la CJCE dans sa jurisprudence, et en soutenant que le fait dommageable s'était produit en Italie. La Cour suprême s'est livrée à une analyse détaillée de la jurisprudence de la CJCE pour parvenir à sa conclusion, favorable au demandeur. Elle a tout d'abord exclu, en se fondant sur les faits, que le demandeur ait invoqué l'article 5, point 1, ou l'article 5, point 3, comme chefs de compétence ; ensuite, elle a écarté l'argument avancé par le défendeur, selon lequel le for contractuel devait prévaloir conformément à l'arrêt Kalfelis/Schröder rendu par la CJCE dans l'affaire 189/87.

Sur la question principale, la Cour a passé en revue toutes les décisions de la CJCE, depuis l'arrêt Bier/Mines de potasse (affaire 21/76) jusqu'à l'arrêt Marinari (affaire 364/93), pour arriver à la conclusion que le fait dommageable invoqué par le demandeur pour fonder la compétence, à savoir l'aggravation de son état de santé, devait être considéré comme la conséquence directe du comportement du défendeur ayant causé le préjudice, et non comme un préjudice accessoire qui ne relèverait pas de l'article 5, point 3. Il semble que la Cour ait appliqué dans sa décision les principes affirmés par le CJCE dans l'affaire Marinari, dans la mesure où elle y admet qu'un préjudice accessoire consistant uniquement en une perte patrimoniale n'aurait pas été un critère de compétence justifié au titre de la convention.

4. Deux arrêts de la Cour suprême autrichienne concernent l'article 6.
Dans le premier (Oberster Gerichtshof , 24 février 1998, nº 20), la Cour suprême a appliqué correctement l'article 6, point 3 (demande reconventionnelle). Á la différence de la disposition correspondante du droit autrichien de la procédure (l'article 96 de la Jurisdiktionsnorm), l'article 6, point 3, exige qu'il existe un lien entre la demande et la demande reconventionnelle. Ce lien n'existant pas dans l'espèce considérée, la Cour n'a pas admis la compétence pour la demande reconventionnelle.
Le deuxième arrêt (Oberster Gerichtshof, 24 novembre 1997, nº 14) ne concernait pas la Convention de Lugano à proprement parler, mais y faisait référence pour l'interprétation du droit procédural interne. Le droit autrichien ne connaît pas les demandes en garantie et en intervention visées à l'article 6, point 2, de la Convention de Lugano, mais les tiers peuvent être invités à comparaître devant un tribunal selon les règles de la litis denuntiatio. Il avait été jugé lors de décisions antérieures qu'à la suite d'une telle procédure l'arrêt rendu sur la demande originaire produisait des effets à l'égard du tiers, qu'il ait ou non comparu dans le cadre de cette procédure. Toutefois, pour obtenir une décision exécutoire contre le tiers, il faut intenter des actions distinctes - et c'est là que réside en fait la différence entre les systèmes allemand et autrichien de litis denuntiatio, d'une part, et les demandes en garantie et en intervention visées à l'article 6, point 2, d'autre part -, mais, selon la tradition jurisprudentielle, le tiers était forclos à faire valoir que la décision originaire était erronée. Vu l'absence, dans le Code de procédure civile, de règles concernant cet effet contraignant, cette jurisprudence a été sévèrement critiquée par la doctrine. Devant ces critiques, la Cour suprême a décidé de revoir sa position et elle a fait référence, dans une affaire de portée purement nationale, à l'article V du protocole n° 1 annexé à la Convention de Lugano.

Cette disposition tient compte des différents systèmes permettant de faire intervenir des tiers dans une procédure judiciaire. Elle porte non seulement sur les questions de compétence – l'article 6, point 2, et l'article 11 concernant les demandes en garantie et en intervention sont remplacés par la possibilité d'une litis denuntiatio - , mais aussi sur la reconnaissance des décisions. L'article V dit explicitement que les effets produits à l'égard des tiers par des jugements rendus en Autriche ou en Allemagne en application des dispositions relatives à la litis denuntiatio sont également reconnus dans les autres États contractants.
La Cour suprême considère que cette disposition n'aurait aucun sens si les litis denuntiatio ne produisaient pas d'effet à l'égard des tiers. Les autorités législatives autrichiennes ont donc accepté, en ratifiant la Convention de Lugano, que les litis denuntiatio produisent des effets au moins dans les affaires transfrontalières. La Cour ne voyant pas de raison de faire une distinction entre les affaires nationales et internationales, la jurisprudence traditionnelle relative aux effets contraignants de la litis denuntiatio a été confirmée.
Cette décision est un exemple très instructif des effets que peut avoir la Convention de Lugano sur l'interprétation et l'application du droit interne, mais elle n'est pas le seul exemple : plusieurs décisions de la Cour suprême autrichienne ont fait référence à la jurisprudence de la CJCE relative à l'article 21 de la Convention de Bruxelles lorsqu'il s'est agi de résoudre des questions touchant à la litispendance, à la force de la chose jugée et à l'estoppel (Oberster Gerichtshof, 15 décembre 1997, Sammlung zivilrechtlicher Entscheidungen, vol. 70 nº 261, 14 juillet 1999 et 13 octobre 1999, non encore publiées).

5. Dans un arrêt déjà mentionné à propos de l'article 2 (Tribunal fédéral suisse, 20 août 1998, nº 35), le Tribunal fédéral suisse a jugé que le tribunal du domicile du preneur d'assurance (article 8, point 1) pouvait aussi être compétent pour connaître d'actions intentées contre l'assureur par l'assuré ou le bénéficiaire.

6. L'article 14, premier alinéa, prévoit que l'action intentée par un consommateur contre l'autre partie au contrat peut être portée soit devant les tribunaux de l'État sur le territoire duquel est domicilié le consommateur soit devant ceux de l'État sur le territoire duquel est domiciliée l'autre partie. Cette disposition ne concerne que la compétence internationale ; la question de la juridiction territorialement compétente est réglée par la lex fori. Des problèmes se posent lorsque le droit procédural interne ne connaît pas de concept analogue de protection des consommateurs dans les affaires sans implications transfrontières et qu'il n'existe donc pas de tribunal (territorialement) compétent au domicile du consommateur (comme c'est le cas en Allemagne et en Autriche). En pareils cas, l'article 14, premier alinéa, peut offrir une compétence internationale, mais il n'existe pas de tribunal qui soit réellement compétent.

Le droit procédural autrichien prévoit ce type de situations à l'article 28 de la Jurisdiktionsnorm, que l'on a déjà cité à propos de l'article 5, point 2. Si les tribunaux autrichiens ont une compétence internationale en vertu d'un traité international, mais que le droit procédural interne ne permet pas de trouver un tribunal compétent, la Cour suprême doit désigner un tribunal qui deviendra ainsi territorialement compétent. Une décision de la Cour suprême contenue dans le dossier (Oberster Gerichtshof, 15 octobre 1998, nº 9) illustre parfaitement cette procédure particulière, qui est assez fréquente. Dans les procédures non contradictoires, la Cour suprême vérifie –en se fondant uniquement sur les conclusions du demandeur – s'il existe ou non une compétence internationale. Si celle-ci est admise et si un tribunal de première instance est désigné, sa compétence territoriale ne peut être contestée par le défendeur dans la suite de la procédure.
Nous ne pouvons mentionner ici qu'un seul des problèmes que cette procédure est susceptible de poser : étant donné que le défendeur n'est pas entendu devant la Cour suprême, on peut se demander s'il lui est possible de contester la compétence internationale des tribunaux autrichiens dès le début de la procédure devant le tribunal désigné. Compte tenu de l'article 20 de la Convention de Lugano et de l'article 6 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, cela devrait être possible.

Dans les arrêts relatifs à l'article 16, point 1, (Oberster Gerichtshof, 15 octobre 1998, nº 17, et Oberster Gerichtshof, 25 juin 1998, nº 25), la Cour suprême autrichienne a explicitement suivi la jurisprudence de la CJCE sur la Convention de Bruxelles. Elle a souligné dans les deux affaires l'importance d'une interprétation autonome des notions utilisées dans la convention et a considéré que la qualification des actions selon la lex fori ou la lex causae n'était pas pertinente.
Dans l'arrêt nº 17, la Cour suprême était saisie d'une action intentée par un créancier contre des actes du débiteur concernant un droit réel sur des biens immobiliers (action paulienne). En droit interne, ce type d'actions relèvent de l'article 81 de la Jurisdiktionsnorm, disposition qui correspond à l'article 16, point 1, de la Convention. En dépit de cette qualification par la lex fori, la Cour suprême a suivi l'arrêt rendu par la CJCE dans l'affaire Reichert/Dresdner Bank (affaire nº 115/88), dans lequel celle-ci excluait l'action paulienne du champ d'application de l'article 16, point 1.

Dans la décision nº 25, la Cour suprême a eu à statuer sur la situation suivante : le demandeur était propriétaire d'un bien immobilier situé en Autriche. Il avait loué ce bien à bail à une personne domiciliée en Allemagne. Les parties n'ayant pas demandé pour ce contrat l'autorisation prescrite par la loi réglementant la vente et l'affermage des terres (Grundverkehrsrecht), le contrat était nul ab initio. Comme le défendeur avait utilisé le terrain pendant quelques mois, le requérant a demandé une compensation pour la jouissance du bien en question. Il s'est appuyé sur l'article 16, point 1, pour invoquer la compétence des tribunaux autrichiens. La Cour suprême a rejeté cette conclusion. S'appuyant sur l'arrêt CJCE Liber/Göbel (affaire C 292/93), elle a considéré que l'usage d'un bien immobilier dans le cadre d'un contrat frappé de nullité ab initio ne relevait pas de l'article 16, point 1, et que le type du contrat frappé de nullité (vente de terrain dans l'affaire Liber/Göbel, location à bail d'un terrain dans l'espèce considérée) ne devait pas entrer en ligne de compte.

Dans un arrêt relatif à l'article 16, point 5, la Cour suprême autrichienne a souligné l'importance d'une interprétation restrictive de cette disposition (Oberster Gerichtshof, 5 janvier 1998, nº 15). Un débiteur condamné, domicilié en Autriche, avait intenté une action contre le créancier en vue d'obtenir une décision déclarant qu'il s'était acquitté de son obligation. Comme ce dernier était domicilié en Allemagne, le demandeur a voulu fonder la compétence des tribunaux autrichiens sur l'article 16, point 5, au motif que le créancier avait menacé d'entamer une procédure d'exécution. Comme cette procédure n'était pas engagée, la Cour suprême a refusé d'appliquer cette disposition.

8. Il arrive assez souvent que les jugements aient entre autres à régler la question de savoir si un tribunal est rendu compétent par la comparution du défendeur (article 18). Vu que la plupart des décisions en la matière sont conformes à la jurisprudence de la CJCE (Elefanten Schuh/Jacqmain, affaire 150/80), il nous a semblé qu'une seule décision méritait d'être mentionnée (Oberster Gerichtshof, 25 février 1998, nº 22). Le cas soumis à la Cour était assez classique : la procédure autrichienne d'injonction de payer (Mahnverfahren) prévoit que le tribunal délivre une ordonnance en ce sens, uniquement sur la base des conclusions du créancier. En l'absence d'opposition (Einspruch) de la part du débiteur dans les deux semaines, l'ordonnance est exécutoire. Dans le cas contraire, une procédure civile normale est ouverte. L'opposition n'a pas besoin d'être motivée, le débiteur doit simplement déclarer qu'il n'est pas d'accord sur l'ordonnance. Toutefois, les oppositions contiennent souvent des conclusions sur le fond de l'affaire, notamment lorsqu'elles sont rédigées par un avocat.

C’est ce qui s’était produit dans l’affaire dont la Cour suprême avait à connaître. Dans son opposition écrite, le défendeur avait contesté l’action sur le fond. Lors de la première audition, il avait en outre excipé de l’incompétence des tribunaux autrichiens. Le requérant avait rétorqué que l’opposition devait être qualifiée de comparution conférant compétence au sens de l’article 18.
La Cour suprême a déclaré que la question de savoir quelles sont les conclusions qui valent comparution devait être tranchée selon la lex fori. Le droit autrichien de la procédure permettant de soulever la question de la compétence lors de la première audition, même si celle-ci n’a pas été contestée dans l’opposition, la Cour a refusé d’appliquer l’article 18.
Cette décision, qui a été suivie de plusieurs autres allant dans le même sens, résisterait-elle à une analyse approfondie effectuée sur la base de la jurisprudence de la CJCE ? Il est exact que la jurisprudence Elefanten Schuh/Jacqmain renvoie à la lex fori en affirmant que la compétence doit être contestée avant les conclusions considérées, par le droit procédural national, comme la première défense adressée au juge saisi. On pourrait cependant se demander si l’application de l’article 18 doit réellement dépendre du type particulier de conclusions (comme par exemple l’opposition à une ordonnance enjoignant le paiement) censées conférer une compétence au regard du droit national. Comment ce critère pourrait-il fonctionner dans un État contractant où la notion de comparution conférant compétence n’existe tout simplement pas ? Il s’agit ici de savoir si l’opposition doit être considérée, selon la lex fori, comme une défense contre l’action intentée par le demandeur. Étant donné qu’en l’absence d’opposition dans les deux semaines, l’ordonnance enjoignant de payer devient exécutoire sans aucun recours possible, cette hypothèse paraît incontestable. Il n’est donc pas étonnant que la décision de la Cour suprême ait été sévèrement critiquée par la doctrine. En outre, dans une opinion incidente récente (Oberster Gerichtshof, 24 novembre 1999, non encore publiée), une autre chambre de la Cour suprême s'est demandé si le simple critère de la lex fori était valable. On peut s’attendre à ce que tôt ou tard la CJCE soit saisie de cette question (dans le cadre de la Convention de Bruxelles).

9. Trois décisions figurant dans le fascicule de 1999 sur la Convention de Lugano concernent l’article 21, toutes les trois en liaison avec l’article 54.2. Une seule décision avait pour objet principal l’interprétation de l’article 21 et sera traitée ci-après. Les deux autres seront examinées plus loin (cf. point II, paragraphe 12).

Dans l'affaire dont il s'agit ici (Corte di Cassazione italienne, 13 février 1998, nº 61), l'action avait été intentée devant les tribunaux suisses et italiens, avant l'entrée en vigueur de la convention, par A contre B à Bâle et contre C à Rome. Après l'entrée en vigueur de la convention, C était intervenu dans l'action pendante à Bâle contre B et avait appelé B à comparaître dans l'action pendante à Rome. Il était demandé à la Cour d'examiner si la question de la litispendance devait être tranchée sur la base de la demande originaire, auquel cas la convention ne serait pas applicable, ou sur la base de l'action intentée après l'entrée en vigueur de la convention. La Cour a invoqué la notion de « demande formée » figurant à l'article 21 et a très justement fait observer que l'identité des parties à la suite d'une jonction facultative et d'une jonction obligatoire d'actions devait être appréciée au moment de la jonction et non au moment où les demandes originaires ont été formées. Elle a donc appliqué en l'espèce l'article 21. La décision de la Cour suprême italienne peut être considérée comme une application des principes affirmées par la CJCE dans l'affaire Tatry/Maciej Rataj (affaire nº C-406/92).

10. La Cour suprême autrichienne avait été saisie de plusieurs questions relatives à la compétence en matière de mesures provisoires (Oberster Gerichtshof, 13 janvier 1998, nº 16). La Fédération internationale de ski (FIS), qui a son siège en Suisse, avait, en vertu de ses statuts, refusé à un skieur professionnel autrichien l'autorisation de participer à des compétitions de la coupe du monde sans posséder la licence de la fédération autrichienne de ski. Le skieur a demandé des mesures provisoires ordonnant à la FIS d'accepter une licence délivrée par un fédération caraïbe de ski.

La Cour suprême a anticipé dans un attendu la jurisprudence Van Uden de la CJCE (affaire C 391/95) en jugeant que pour les mesures provisoires la compétence internationale pouvait être fondée soit, en application de l'article 24, sur le droit national, soit sur les règles de compétence de la convention. Contrairement au point de vue défendu par le demandeur, la Cour a estimé que l'article 24 prévoyait simplement l'application du droit national, et que les États contractants n'étaient nullement tenus de prévoir des tribunaux spécialement compétents pour ordonner des mesures provisoires dans le contexte de la Convention de Lugano (ou de Bruxelles).

La Cour a aussi examiné rapidement s'il était possible d'appliquer les dispositions en matière de compétence de la convention elle-même pour la mesure provisoire considérée. Le demandeur avait invoqué l'article 5, point 3 et – pour une action intentée contre la Fédération autrichienne de ski – l'article 6, point 1. Les deux chefs de compétence ont été refusés.

Concernant l'article 6, point 1, le demandeur n'avait pas démontré l'existence d'un lien suffisamment étroit entre l'action dirigée contre la Fédération autrichienne de ski et la mesure provisoire qu'il avait demandée contre celle-ci. Cet argument incontestable suffisait à lui seul à exclure l'application de cette disposition, mais la Cour suprême a ajouté une opinion incidente intéressante : vu que le droit autrichien ne permet pas de rendre une décision jointe portant à la fois sur une demande au fond et sur une demande de mesure provisoire, elle a estimé que le recours à l'article 6, point 1, était impossible en pareil cas pour les mesures provisoires.

Á première vue, cela semble aller trop loin. Dans l'arrêt Van Uden, la CJCE a simplement fait référence aux dispositions de la convention sur la compétence en tant que telles sans subordonner la compétence à d'autres conditions. En cas d'actions jointes au sens propre du terme, l'article 6, point 1, ne précise pas si une décision jointe sur les actions est possible, voire requise par le droit procédural interne, ou non. C'est pourquoi l'article 6, point 1, devrait a priori être applicable même si le droit national ne connaît pas la notion de décision jointe ou d'actions connexes. Tel étant le cas, il n'y a a priori aucune raison de traiter différemment les demandes de mesures provisoires.

Il pourrait cependant être intéressant d'examiner l'affaire de plus près en tenant compte du véritable objet de l'article 6, point 1. Selon la jurisprudence Kalfelis/Schröder de la CJCE (affaire 189/87), cette disposition a pour objet d'éviter les jugements inconciliables. On pourrait se demander s'il ne faut pas pour cela au moins des procédures jointes pour toutes les actions connexes (au besoin avec des décisions distinctes). Si le droit national ne le permet pas – comme c'est le cas en Autriche pour les demandes au fond et les demandes de mesures provisoires –l'objet principal de l'article 6, point 1, semble être mis en échec. On serait tenté d'en conclure que l'opinion incidente de la Cour suprême pourrait se justifier.

La Cour a également refusé d'application l'article 5, point 3, au motif que la mesure provisoire demandée « n'avait pas pour objet de préserver un droit établi du demandeur ». On peut regretter que la Cour n'ait pas précisé davantage ce qu'elle entendait pas là. Le demandeur était un skieur professionnel et le risque d'une perte financière était donc évident. Compte tenu de l'interprétation assez large que fait la Cour suprême de l'article 5, point 3 (cf. ci-dessus, point II, paragraphe 3, décision nº 21), la compétence aurait pu être fondée sur le simple fait que le patrimoine du demandeur se trouvaient en Autriche. Et même si cet argument n'avait pas été accepté, au moins certaines des compétitions dont le demandeur était exclu avaient lieu en Autriche. L'attitude de la FIS avait donc des conséquences dommageables immédiates dans l'État du for.

Mais la véritable question n'est pas là (elle a été explicitement laissée de côté par la Cour suprême). Est-il possible de recourir à l'article 5, point 3, pour les actions préventives, ou le for que cette disposition désigne est-il limité aux cas où le fait dommageable s'est déjà produit ? La doctrine privilégie, semble-t-il, une interprétation plus large de cette disposition. On peut cependant regretter qu'une question préjudicielle de la Bundesgerichtshof allemande portant sur cette question ait été retirée avant que le CJCE n'ait eu l'occasion de se prononcer. La Cour suprême autrichienne vient de nouveau de saisir la CJCE de ce point (Oberster Gerichtshof, 6 Ob 50/00x, concernant l'action préventive d'une association de consommateurs contre des dispositions inéquitables figurant sur des formulaires types du défendeur).

11. Dans une décision du 17 juin 1998 (nº 70) sur l'exécution d'un jugement français en Finlande, la Korkein oikeus finlandaise a rejeté l'argument par lequel le défendeur condamné faisait valoir que l'exécution devait être refusée au motif que l'acte introductif d'instance devant le tribunal français ne lui avait pas été notifié en temps utile pour qu'il puisse se défendre, cf. article 27, point 2 de la convention. Le jugement français avait été rendu par défaut après remise au parquet de l'acte en France et après une tentative des autorités finlandaises pour le notifier au défendeur dans sa version originale française. D'après les autorités finlandaises, le défendeur connaissait le français, mais il avait refusé d'accepter le document en français. Le ministère finlandais de la justice avait dû le renvoyer en France en demandant sa traduction pour qu'il soit de nouveau notifié. La Korkein oikeus a estimé que le document avait été dûment notifié au défendeur selon la loi française. Elle a également considéré que, vu la tentative faite pour lui notifier le document dans sa version française, qui avait eu lieu quatre mois avant le prononcé du jugement, l'affaire avait été portée à sa connaissance et il avait eu suffisamment de temps pour préparer sa défense.

12. Ainsi qu'on l'a indiqué plus haut, trois décisions concernent la disposition transitoire de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, en liaison avec la question de la litispendance faisant l'objet de l'article 21. L'une d'entre elles a été examinée sous l'angle de cette dernière disposition, mais les deux autres portent principalement sur le champ d'application et l'effet de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa. Dans la première affaire (Tribunal fédéral suisse, 9 septembre 1998, nº 36), le Tribunal devait décider si, aux fins de l'application de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, la disposition sur la litispendance faisait partie des dispositions sur la compétence à prendre en considération pour la reconnaissance et l'exécution d'une décision rendue après la date d'entrée en vigueur de la convention dans une action intentée avant cette date.

Le Tribunal fédéral a estimé que pour l'application de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, seules les règles prévoyant une compétence directe devaient être prises en considération et que seules les dispositions des articles 2 à 18 de la convention répondaient à ce critère, la disposition sur la litispendance ayant, quant à elle, pour seul objet d'indiquer au juge comment il doit agir dans une situation particulière, à savoir celle dans laquelle une autre juridiction est saisie de la même affaire. Par conséquent, la violation de cette disposition par la juridiction de l'État d'origine ne saurait justifier un refus de reconnaissance, lorsque le tribunal étranger a fondé sa compétence sur un critère prévu dans la convention. Tout autre point de vue serait aussi incompatible avec la considération selon laquelle une violation de l'article 21 ne pourrait en soi entraîner la non-reconnaissance en vertu des règles générales d'exécution applicables en dehors du régime transitoire.

La Corte di Cassazione italienne (28 mai 1998, nº 67) ne paraît pas partager le point de vue du Tribunal fédéral suisse. Dans une affaire similaire, la Cour de cassation a en effet reconnu que l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, n'avait pas pour objet de réglementer la question de la compétence directe pour les actions pendantes à la date d'entrée en vigueur de la convention, mais elle a exclu qu'une décision rendue dans un État contractant après cette date puisse affecter une action pendante dans un État où la reconnaissance de ladite décision est demandée, si cette dernière action répond aux critères de litispendance prévus à l'article 21 ou de connexité prévus à l'article 22 de la convention. C'est pourquoi, en cas de demande formée par les mêmes parties en Suisse et en Italie avant la date d'entrée en vigueur de la convention, la décision rendue par le tribunal suisse après cette date et établissant la compétence du tribunal suisse ne devrait pas être reconnue en Italie, en application de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa. La Cour suprême italienne a fait observer qu'il ne serait pas raisonnable de supposer que dans la disposition transitoire le principe général d'antériorité établi dans la Convention pour la décision relative à la compétence ait été abandonné au profit du principe opposé de priorité de la décision rendue en premier lieu comme critère de compétence. Il ne serait possible de s'écarter ainsi du principe général qu'en présence d'une disposition excluant clairement toute autre interprétation, ce qui n'est pas le cas de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, dont le texte est compatible avec le principe général.

Les points de vue divergents exprimés par les deux Cours suprêmes dans les affaires mentionnées ci-dessus montrent que le régime transitoire peut générer une insécurité et que la question doit être approfondie. En effet, même s'il s'agit d'un problème à caractère transitoire dont l'importance dans les relations futures entre les États contractants d'origine est limitée, il pourra encore jouer un rôle en ce qui concerne les nouveaux États adhérents.

Une autre décision concerne l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, en liaison avec la prorogation de compétence (Tribunal fédéral suisse, 19 août 1998, nº 34) : il s'agit d'une convention attributive de juridiction conclue avant l'entrée en vigueur de la convention, qui est invoquée dans un action intentée après cette date. Constatant que la clause attributive de juridiction, bien que valide au moment de sa conclusion, ne répondait pas aux conditions prévues à l'article 12 de la convention, le Tribunal a décidé que, compte tenu de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, la convention devait être appliquée et que la clause était, de ce fait, invalide. Il semble que cette décision fasse une application correcte de la disposition transitoire, conforme à ce que suggérait la CJCE dans l'affaire Sanicentral/Collin (affaire nº 25/79).

III. Compétence en matière contractuelle (article 5, point 1)

Comme on l'a déjà indiqué (voir point I), sur les 37 jugements relatifs à la Convention de Lugano repris dans le 8ème fascicule de 1999, pas moins de 16 concernent – au moins partiellement - la première partie de l'article 5, point 1, ce qui prouve non seulement l'importance pratique mais le caractère problématique de cette disposition.

A l'exception peut-être de quatre décisions autrichiennes portant sur la restitution du prix à la suite de l'annulation d'un contrat et sur la question de savoir si le lieu de livraison des marchandises peut être qualifié de lieu d'exécution au sens de l'article 5, point 1 (cf. point III, paragraphes 3 et 4), la plupart de ces jugements sont conformes à la jurisprudence de la CJCE relative à l'article 5, point 1, de la Convention de Bruxelles. Elles admettent en principe aussi bien le fonctionnement des obligations contractuelles au sens de la jurisprudence De Bloos/Bouyer (affaire 14/76) que la notion de lex causae de la jurisprudence Tessili/Dunlop (affaire 12/76).

Dans une décision (Tribunal fédéral suisse, 9 mars 1998, nº 33), le Tribunal fédéral suisse a expressément mentionné les critiques sévères de la doctrine contre les deux interprétations. Le Tribunal a néanmoins décidé de s'aligner sur la jurisprudence de la CJCE relative à la Convention de Bruxelles, affirmant qu'une interprétation qui s'en écarterait entraînerait une insécurité juridique que les États contractants ont essayé d'éviter par l'adoption des dispositions du protocole nº 2 et les déclarations qu'ils ont faites au moment de la signature de la convention.

1. Actions en paiement

La première série de jugements citée concerne le paiement de sommes d'argent en tant qu'obligation contractuelle principale (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 28 octobre 1997, nº 12 ; 28 octobre 1997, nº 13 ; 25 février 1998, nº 22 ; 28 juillet 1998, nº 26 ; 12 novembre 1998, nº 30 ; Tribunal fédéral suisse, 23 août 1996, nº 31 ; Høyesterett norvégienne, 15 mai 1997, nº 69 ; Korkein oikeus finlandaise, 12 novembre 1998, nº 71). Aucun d'eux ne tente de trouver un lieu d'exécution uniforme pour toutes les obligations contractuelles par une interprétation autonome de l'article 5, point 1. Les Cours se sont au contraire alignées sur la jurisprudence de la CJCE et ont cherché à déterminer le lieu d'exécution de l'obligation de paiement en tant qu'obligation servant de base à la demande. Elles ont appliqué la règle de la lex causae de la jurisprudence Tessili/Dunlop (affaire nº 12/76).

On constate une fois de plus que les différences existant entre les systèmes juridiques européens sur la question du lieu d'exécution de l'obligation de paiement – domicile du créancier ou du débiteur – ont conduit à des résultats purement fortuits.

En Autriche et en Allemagne, les obligations pécuniaires doivent en principe être exécutées au lieu où le débiteur avait son domicile au moment de la conclusion du contrat. L'utilité pratique de l'article 5, point 1, est alors limitée aux cas où le débiteur a changé de domicile après la conclusion du contrat (décision nº 26). En dehors de ces cas, la compétence déterminée en application de l'article 5, point 1, ne s'écarte pas de la règle générale de l'article 2 (décisions nº 22 et 30). Il peut néanmoins arriver que la lex causae s'écarte, elle, quelque peu du principe du domicile du débiteur. Il en est ainsi, selon la Cour suprême autrichienne, dans le cas des contrats d'hébergement en droit autrichien (décision nº 12). L'usage étant de payer les notes d'hôtel au moment du départ, la Cour suprême a estimé que, compte tenu de la nature du contrat, les obligations des deux parties devaient être exécutées au lieu de l'hébergement. Cette décision a été rendue en application de la loi autrichienne en tant que lex causae, elle n'est donc pas en contradiction avec la règle de la jurisprudence de Bloos, qui prévoit d'appliquer un traitement distinct à chaque obligation contractuelle concernée. La Cour n'en a pas moins refusé d'étendre cette solution à d'autres types de contrats. Dans le cas d'un contrat entre un avocat autrichien et son client allemand, la règle du domicile du débiteur a été appliquée, sans que la possibilité de s'en écarter pour tenir compte du caractère spécifique du contrat ait été évoquée (arrêt nº 26).

La situation est différente lorsque la lex causae prévoit que l'obligation de paiement doit être exécutée au domicile du créancier. Dans une affaire portée devant le Tribunal fédéral suisse (nº 9), les parties avaient conclu un contrat de courtage. Le demandeur, domicilié en Suisse, a intenté une action contre le défendeur, domicilié en Angleterre, pour obtenir le paiement de la commission. Se fondant sur le droit suisse, applicable en vertu du droit international privé suisse, le Tribunal a déclaré que cette obligation devait être exécutée au lieu du domicile du créancier. L'application de l'article 5, point 1, a donc conduit à la compétence du tribunal du domicile du demandeur (forum actoris).

Quant à la question de savoir si l'article 5, point 1, couvre les sûretés, la Korkein oikeus finlandaise y a répondu par l'affirmative dans une décision du 12 novembre 1998 (nº 71). Le tribunal finlandais de première instance avait estimé que cette disposition n'était pas applicable à la sûreté, puisqu'il s'agit d'une offre unilatérale de celui qui se porte caution de payer au cas où le premier débiteur n'a pas payé à l'échéance, et non d'un accord mutuel établissant des droits et des obligations pour les deux parties. La Korkein oikeus finlandaise a considéré que la sûreté, bien qu'étant une offre unilatérale de celui qui se porte caution, n'en est pas moins un contrat au sens de l'article 5, point 1. La Högsta Domstolen suédoise est parvenue à la même conclusion dans une décision du 13 juin 1997, parue dans les Nytt Jurisdiskt Arkiv de 1997 : 76 (non reprise dans le 8ème fascicule).

La CJCE a jugé (Zelger/Salinitri, affaire 56/79 ; mais voir aussi MSG/Les Gravières rhénanes, affaire nº C 106/95) qu'un accord sur le lieu d'exécution qui était valide en application de la lex causae, l'était aussi aux fins de l'article 5, point 1, sans qu'il soit besoin de remplir les conditions de forme prévues à l'article 17 (arrêts nº 13 et 22). La charge de la preuve a été attribuée au demandeur (nº 22).

2. Actions en exécution d'autres obligations contractuelles

Dans une affaire portée devant la Cour suprême autrichienne (O*berster Gerichtshof*, 9 septembre 1997, nº 11), une banque autrichienne avait émis une garantie bancaire au bénéfice du défendeur. Celui-ci avait ensuite transféré cette garantie au demandeur, tout en s'opposant à ce que la banque la lui paye. Le demandeur a donc cherché à obtenir une décision judiciaire ordonnant au défendeur de consentir au paiement.

Le demandeur et le défendeur étaient tous deux domiciliés en Allemagne, ce qui n'a pas empêché le demandeur de porter l'action devant le tribunal du siège de la banque en Autriche. Invoquant l'article 5, point 1, il a fait valoir que l'obligation servant de base à la demande était l'obligation de la banque de payer la garantie.

La Cour suprême autrichienne a rejeté cet argument, jugeant l'idée abstruse. L'obligation servant de base à la demande était manifestement l'obligation du défendeur d'adresser à la banque une déclaration par laquelle il consentait au paiement de la garantie et la Cour devait donc examiner où cette obligation devait être exécutée selon le droit applicable. Comme le droit allemand et le droit autrichien, qui étaient les leges causae potentielles, connaissent tous deux la règle du domicile du débiteur, le défendeur devait faire sa déclaration en Allemagne. La Cour autrichienne a aussi refusé l'idée qu'il existait une obligation contractuelle implicite pour le défendeur de se rendre au siège de la banque pour faire la déclaration.

Le véritable problème que posait cette décision n'était pas l'application de l'article 5, point 1, en tant que tel, mais la détermination du droit applicable. Se fondant sur le droit international privé autrichien de l'époque (c'est-à-dire avant l'entrée en vigueur de la Convention de Rome), la Cour a opté pour l'application du droit autrichien. Cependant, comme l'application du droit autrichien et du droit allemand aboutissait au même résultat, la Cour a pu ne pas trancher la question.

3. Actions en réparation pour cause de rupture de contrat

Dans plusieurs décisions, le demandeur cherchait à obtenir réparation de la violation d'obligations contractuelles (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 10 septembre 1998, nº 27 ; 10 septembre 1998, nº 28 ; 10 septembre 1998, nº 29 ; Tribunal fédéral suisse, 9 mars 1998, nº 33, déjà citée plus haut). Toutes ces décisions sont, d'un point de vue formel au moins, conformes à la jurisprudence de la CJCE sur la détermination de « l'obligation qui sert de base à la demande » (de Bloos/Bouyer, affaire nº 14/76) : si une action en réparation ou en dissolution d'un contrat est fondée sur la non-exécution d'une obligation contractuelle, c'est le lieu d'exécution de cette obligation qui entre en ligne de compte.

Deux de ces décisions (nº 27 et nº 29) concernaient une situation assez courante. Dans un contrat de vente internationale, les parties étaient convenues, explicitement dans la décision nº 27 et en insérant la clause « livraison au domicile de l'acheteur » dans la décision n° 29, que le vendeur devait livrer les marchandises en un certain lieu. La Convention des Nations Unies sur les contrats de vente internationale de marchandises était applicable dans les deux cas. Comme les marchandises étaient défectueuses, l'acheteur a intenté une action en réparation. Il a fait valoir, aux fins de l'article 5, point 1, que le lieu de la livraison devait être considéré comme le lieu d'exécution de l'obligation servant de base à la demande.

Dans les deux cas, la Cour suprême autrichienne a rejeté cet argument. Citant la doctrine relative à l'article 31, de la convention sur les contrats de vente, elle a considéré que la désignation d'un lieu de livraison ne concernait généralement que les modalités de livraison ainsi que les risques et les frais de transport. Il était dès lors impensable que les parties aient eu aussi l'intention, en convenant d'un lieu de livraison, d'établir un lieu d'exécution au sens de l'article 5, point 1. Elle en a conclu que la compétence ne pouvait être fondée sur cette disposition.

D'un point de vue formel, les deux décisions sont conformes à la jurisprudence de la CJCE. La Cour suprême autrichienne n'a pas présupposé une interprétation autonome des termes « lieu de l'exécution » figurant à l'article 5, point 1 ; elle a fondé tous ses arguments sur l'application de la Convention sur les contrats de vente internationale en tant que lex causae. Elle semble néanmoins supposer que cette convention comporte des règles implicites sur le lieu de l'exécution pour les questions de compétence, du moins dans la mesure où un accord sur le lieu de livraison n'a aucune conséquence en matière de compétence. C'est également la conclusion que l'on peut tirer d'une opinion incidente accompagnant la décision nº 27 : aux termes de l'article 31, point a), de la convention sur les contrats de vente, en l'absence d'accord sur le lieu de livraison et si le contrat implique le transport des marchandises, l'obligation du vendeur consiste à remettre les marchandises au premier transporteur. On pourrait penser que le lieu de remise serait aussi le lieu de l'exécution au sens de l'article 5, point 1. Or la Cour a dit pour droit – sans s'appuyer sur le texte de la convention – qu'en pareil cas, le lieu de l'exécution serait le lieu où le vendeur a son établissement.

Si l'on considère que la convention sur les contrats de vente internationale ne traite pas du tout de la compétence, la solution à laquelle est arrivée la Cour suprême autrichienne est loin d'être évidente. En se fondant sur ses arguments, on pourrait aussi affirmer que l'article 57 de la convention sur les ventes – l'obligation pour l'acheteur de payer le prix au lieu où le vendeur a son établissement – ne concerne que les coûts et les risques du transfert d'argent et n'a donc aucune conséquence sur le plan de la compétence. Mais cela serait bien sûr contraire à la décision de la CJCE dans l'affaire Custom Made Commercial/Stawa Metallbau (affaire nº C-288/92).

En examinant les décisions nº 27 et nº 29 en liaison avec la décision nº 12 (voir ci-dessus point III, paragraphe 1), on peut déceler, dans le contexte de l'article 5, point 1, une légère tendance de la Cour suprême autrichienne à opter pour des « solutions lex causae » : dans l'interprétation de la loi applicable, la Cour admet certains des arguments avancés par la doctrine contre la jurisprudence de la CJCE relative à la Convention de Bruxelles sans s'en écarter officiellement. Les résultats que donne cette approche étant valables dans l'ensemble, on devrait se garder de la critiquer avec trop de véhémence.

Les deux autres jugements (nº 28 et nº 33) ne présentent pas d'intérêt particulier. Dans l'affaire nº 28, les parties avaient conclu un contrat de service de traiteur pour un soirée après-ski à Kitzbühel. Le défendeur, une société allemande, a annulé sa commande ; le traiteur, domicilié en Autriche, l'a poursuivi pour le manque à gagner qu'il avait subi, en considérant que Kitzbühel était le lieu d'exécution au sens de l'article 5, point 1. La Cour suprême autrichienne a rejeté cette idée, estimant que l'obligation servant de base à la demande était celle du défendeur de payer le prix du service de traiteur. La loi autrichienne étant applicable, cette obligation devait, en application de la règle générale visée plus haut (point III, paragraphe 1), être exécutée là où le débiteur avait son établissement.

Le jugement nº 33 concerne un contrat de vente exclusive. Le défendeur, une société danoise, avait enfreint ses obligations à l'égard du demandeur, domicilié en suisse, en livrant des marchandises à une autre société suisse. Le Tribunal fédéral suisse a fait une distinction entre deux obligations du vendeur, l'une concernant la distribution des marchandises et l'autre leur livraison proprement dite. Au regard de l'article 5, point 1, ces obligations devaient être traitées séparément. Les juridictions inférieures ayant établi que le demandeur avait fondé son action uniquement sur le non-respect de l'obligation relative à la distribution, le Tribunal fédéral, qui était lié par cette constatation, s'est borné à l'examen de cette obligation. D'après le droit suisse des obligations, qui était applicable en vertu du droit international privé suisse, cette obligation devait être exécutée au domicile du débiteur. La Cour a donc considéré que les tribunaux suisses n'étaient pas compétents.

4. Actions en restitution du prix après l'annulation d'un contrat

Dans deux décisions (27 janvier 1998, nº 18 et 10 mars 1998, nº 23), la Cour suprême autrichienne (Oberster Gerichtshof) a estimé que les demandes en restitution de sommes d'argent déjà payées en vertu d'un contrat dont, dans le premier cas, le demandeur affirmait qu'il était nul et non avenu ou qui, dans le second cas, avait été annulé par consentement mutuel entre les parties, entrent dans le champ d'application de l'article 5, point 1. Cela signifie aussi que, pour la Cour suprême autrichienne, l'article 5, point 1, s'applique à une obligation qui n'est pas l'une des obligations principales du contrat, ni une obligation accessoire découlant du non-respect de ces obligations, mais une obligation reposant sur le principe de l'enrichissement sans cause.

Il s'agissait, dans le premier cas, d'un contrat ayant pour objet le transfert à des personnes domiciliées en Autriche du droit de propriété d'une GmbH (une discothèque) appartenant à des personnes domiciliées en Allemagne. Après avoir pris possession de l'affaire, les nouveaux propriétaires se sont rendus compte que, contrairement à ce que les vendeurs avaient voulu, selon eux, leur faire croire, la discothèque n'avait pas les autorisations publiques requises.

Ils ont intenté devant les tribunaux autrichiens une action en recouvrement de la somme d'argent qu'ils avaient déjà payée aux vendeurs, à qui ils rendraient en échange leurs parts dans la GmbH, au motif que le contrat était nul et non avenu. Se réclamant de la doctrine (Kropholler), la Cour suprême a considéré que l'article 5, point 1, couvrait aussi les litiges relatifs à la conclusion en tant que telle du contrat. Elle est également parvenue à la conclusion que, puisque « l'obligation servant de base à la demande » n'était pas l'une des obligations principales du contrat (à savoir l'obligation des vendeurs de transférer la propriété des parts de la GmbH ou l'obligation de l'acheteur de payer), elle serait l'obligation des vendeurs de restituer l'argent qu'ils avaient reçu, si le contrat était déclaré nul et non avenu. La Cour suprême a toutefois estimé que le lieu de l'exécution de cette obligation était le domicile des vendeurs en Allemagne, puisque, en vertu du droit applicable, le lieu de l'exécution d'une obligation pécuniaire était le domicile du débiteur.

Dans le deuxième cas, le contrat était valide au départ, mais les parties y ont mis fin par consentement mutuel avant son exécution, ce qui signifiait que l'acompte versé par l'acheteur (domicilié en Autriche) devait être rendu, mais le vendeur (domicilié en Suisse) l'a fait en compensant la créance de l'acheteur par une créance que le vendeur affirmait avoir sur l'acheteur au titre d'un contrat antérieur. L'acheteur n'a pas accepté la compensation, et a donc intenté une action. La Cour suprême autrichienne a invoqué l'affaire précédente et fait observer que dans les deux cas il s'agissait de demandes en restitution reposant sur le principe de l'enrichissement sans cause (« bereicherungsrechtlicher Rückforderungsanspruch »). Le fait que la demande de restitution soit en l'espèce fondée sur un contrat valide, auquel il avait été mis fin d'un commun accord, alors que dans l'affaire précédente il s'agissait d'une demande en restitution fondée sur l'invalidité (contestée) du contrat, ne changeait, selon elle, rien au résultat. La demande en restitution avait en l'espèce pour origine le versement d'un acompte par l'acheteur, et cet acompte était une obligation prévue dans le contrat auquel il avait été mis fin. Le lieu d'exécution de l'obligation de restituer l'acompte devait cependant être vu comme distinct de lieu d'exécution de l'obligation de l'acheteur de payer le vendeur, qui était prévue dans le contrat. Alors qu'il aurait dû être statué sur cette dernière obligation selon l'article 57 de la Convention des Nations Unies sur les contrats de vente, applicable tant en Autriche qu'en Suisse, la Cour suprême autrichienne a estimé que cet article ne s'appliquait pas à la demande en restitution. La décision devait être fondée sur le principe général du droit suisse, selon lequel le lieu d'exécution des créances pécuniaires est le domicile (ou le siège social) du créancier, situé en l'occurrence en Autriche.

Les deux décisions autrichiennes sont difficiles à concilier avec une décision de la House of Lords anglaise rendue le 30 octobre 1997 (nº 56 du 8ème fascicule), qui découlait d'une décision précédente dans laquelle cette Cour avait estimé que certains accords swap conclus par plusieurs collectivités locales du Royaume-Uni étaient nuls ab initio car leur conclusion dépassait les compétences d'une collectivité locale. Une banque a ainsi été amenée à intenter contre le Conseil municipal (City Council) de la ville de Glasgow une action, devant des tribunaux du Royaume-Uni, en restitution d'une somme d'argent qu'elle avait versée audit Conseil municipal dans le cadre de sept accords swap. L'action était fondée en droit anglais sur le principe de l'enrichissement sans cause et a été considérée comme relevant de la loi sur la restitution et non du droit des contrats. L'affaire concernait l'application au Royaume-Uni des règles de la Convention de Bruxelles sur l'attribution de compétence, c'est pourquoi la CJCE avait refusé de se prononcer à titre préjudiciel. Dans une décision rendue à la majorité (3-2), la House of Lords a conclu que l'article 5, point 1, n'était pas applicable. Bien que cette affaire soit différente des affaires autrichiennes, puisqu'il ne s'agissait plus de l'invalidité ab initio des contrats concernés, il semble, à en juger par les motifs invoqués par la majorité des membres de la chambre, que le fait que l'invalidité soit déjà établie n'ait pas été un point déterminant à leurs yeux. La majorité a admis que l'on devait interpréter de manière autonome la notion de « contrat », mais a estimé qu'une demande en restitution fondée sur le principe de l'enrichissement sans cause et formée en vertu d'un contrat qui n'a jamais existé en droit n'entrait pas dans le champ d'application de l'article 5, point 1, qui, constituant une exception à l'article 2, devait faire l'objet d'une interprétation restrictive. La minorité a admis le principe de l'interprétation restrictive, de l'article 5, point 1, tout en maintenant que, pour des raisons pratiques, les demandes en restitution résultant du fait qu'un contrat s'est avéré invalide devaient relever de cette disposition.

Il faut reconnaître que la CJCE n'a pas, jusqu'ici, statué clairement sur la question de savoir si l'article 5, point 1, doit s'appliquer aux situations dont la Cour suprême autrichienne et la Chambre des Lords ont eu à connaître.

Dans l'affaire 38/81, Effer/Kantner, Rec. 1982, p. 825, la CJCE a jugé que l'article 5, point 1, était applicable, « même si la formation du contrat qui est à l'origine du recours est litigieuse entre les parties ». Dans cette affaire, cependant, c'était le défendeur qui affirmait qu'il n'y avait pas de relations contractuelle entre les parties, mais qu'en réalité le contrat avait été conclu entre le demandeur et un tiers. En outre, l'arrêt laisse entendre que, si la juridiction saisie conclut à l'absence de contrat, elle devrait décliner sa compétence.

C'est ainsi que la Høyesterett norvégienne a compris cette décision, à en juger par les affaires 1.nº 267 K/1996, Deutsche Bank/Den norske Bank, et 1.nº 45 K/1998 Terje Karlung/Svänska Vägguide Comertex, décisions du 10 mai 1996 et du 27 janvier 1998, publiées dans Norsk Retstidende de 1996, p. 822, et de 1998, p. 136, respectivement (aucune des deux ne figure dans le 8ème fascicule). Dans les deux cas le demandeur soutenait que sa demande concernait l'obligation du défendeur de payer au titre d'un contrat qui existait (toujours) entre les parties, mais dans la première affaire, le défendeur affirmait qu'il n'y avait jamais eu de contrat couvrant l'action du demandeur et que la demande relevait donc au mieux de la législation en matière délictuelle ou quasi délictuelle. Dans la deuxième affaire, le défendeur soutenait que la demande portait sur une commission relative à une chose que le défendeur avait faite après que le demandeur eut lui-même mis fin à un contrat de représentation et pour laquelle le demandeur n'avait donc pas le droit de réclamer de commission. Aucune de ces deux affaires n'est directement comparable aux affaires autrichiennes et britannique, dans lesquelles la demande résultait, même en la considérant du point de vue du défendeur, d'un contrat qui avait existé un jour, ou du moins devait exister un jour, entre les parties.

Dans l'affaire C-51/97, Réunion européenne contre Spliethoff's Bevrachtingskantoor, Rec. 1998, p. I-6511, (nº 1 du 8ème fascicule, l'arrêt a été rendu après les arrêts autrichiens et britannique), la CJCE a déclaré que l'article 5, point 1, « ne saurait être compris comme visant une situation dans laquelle il n'existe aucun engagement librement assumé d'une partie envers une autre » . Elle s'est toutefois servi de cette assertion pour rejeter l'idée que l'article 5, point 1, puisse s'appliquer à une demande portant sur la réparation d'un préjudice dû à un dommage causé à des marchandises pendant leur transport, lorsque la demande est fondée sur un connaissement et que l'action n'a pas été intentée contre la personne qui l'avait délivré, mais contre celle que le demandeur tient pour le transporteur maritime réel des marchandises. On pourrait par conséquent faire valoir que cette assertion avait pour objet d'exclure du champ d'application de l'article 5, point 1, les actions dirigées contre des défendeurs avec qui le demandeur (où la personne subrogée dans ses droits) n'a même jamais essayé de nouer une relation contractuelle.

Sans doute convient-il dans cette affaire de ne pas attacher trop d'importance à l'usage du présent (« situation dans laquelle il n'y a pas d'obligation »). On pourrait alors considérer que la décision de la CJCE n'exclurait pas l'application de l'article 5, point 1, à « des situations » qui, de l'avis tant du demandeur que de défendeur, concernent les conséquences entre les parties de la cessation ou de l'invalidité d'un contrat qui a un jour existé, ou qui devait un jour exister, entre elles.

IV. Clauses attributives de juridiction (article 17)

Cinq décisions rendues au cours de la période considérée concernent l'article 17. Comme on l'a indiqué ci-dessus, l'une d'elles concerne des clauses attributives de juridiction en liaison avec la disposition transitoire de l'article 54, deuxième alinéa, et a déjà été examinée (cf. point II, paragraphe 12) ; les autres concernent les conditions exigées pour que la clause et ses effets soient valides.

1. Dans la première affaire (Oberster Gerichtshof autrichienne, 23 février 1998, nº 19), il s'agissait d'une clause attribuant la compétence à une juridiction autrichienne, qui avait été conclue entre une société domiciliée en Autriche et une société domiciliée en Turquie. La Cour suprême autrichienne était saisie de la question de savoir si, pour l'application de l'article 17, il faut en pareil cas que l'une des parties soit domiciliée dans un autre État contractant. Elle a analysé la doctrine en la matière ainsi que la jurisprudence d'autres États contractants, notamment de l'Allemagne et de l'Italie, pour arriver à la conclusion qu'en l'absence de lien additionnel avec un autre État contractant, l'application de l'article 17 ne serait pas justifiée. La Cour suprême autrichienne a estimé que cette disposition ne serait applicable que si, de l'avis du juge autrichien, ni le domicile d'une partie, ni le for convenu, n'est situé en Autriche. Il s'agit là d'une question délicate sur laquelle des points de vue divers ont été et peuvent être exprimés, même si le texte de l'article 17 ne semble pas exclure la validité de la clause lorsque le for choisi et le domicile de la seule partie domiciliée dans un État contractant coïncident. Il convient de noter que la Cour suprême autrichienne a ajouté que la condition additionnelle prévue par l'article 17 serait également nécessaire pour l'application de l'article 18.

2. La deuxième affaire (Tribunal fédéral suisse, 15 janvier 1998, nº 32) concerne les conditions qui doivent être réunies pour qu'une clause attributive de juridiction conclue en vertu de l'article 17 soit valide, compte tenu des conditions fixées par le droit national régissant le contrat dans lequel la clause a été insérée. Dans l'affaire relative à un contrat de cautionnement comportant une prorogation de compétence en faveur d'un tribunal suisse, conclu par le maire d'une municipalité française et une société financière suisse, le Tribunal fédéral devait décider si la validité de la clause devait être examinée au regard du droit administratif français ou du droit suisse. Le Tribunal a retenu la deuxième solution, en expliquant que l'article 17 ne fait pas obstacle à cette solution, puisqu'il ne traite pas de la validité quant au fond de la clause attributive de juridiction ; toute décision en la matière appartient donc à la juridiction saisie. Il semble que la solution retenue suive à juste titre le raisonnement suivant : vu que la convention n'affecte pas le droit matériel, elle ne devrait pas affecter la manière dont les juridictions nationales abordent cette question, même si leur approche peut aboutir à des conclusions qui diffèrent d'un État contractant à l'autre (cf. O'Malley-Layton, European Civil Practice, 1989, p. 569).

3. Les deux affaires restantes (Bundesgerichtshof allemande, 23 juillet 1998, nº 39 et Corte di Cassazione italienne, 1er février 1999, nº 66) portent sur des clauses attributives de juridiction en faveur d'une seule des parties. Dans la première décision, la Cour suprême allemande a soutenu que, pour établir si une clause n'a été stipulée qu'en faveur de l'une des parties, il faut se référer non seulement au libellé de la clause, mais aussi au contexte général du contrat et aux circonstances dans lesquelles il a été conclu. Dans la mesure où la décision se fonde sur l'interprétation du contrat dans chaque cas d'espèce, elle est conforme à la jurisprudence de la CJCE dans l'affaire Anterist/Crédit Lyonnais (affaire 22/85). Il en va de même de l'autre décision, dans laquelle la Cour suprême italienne a soutenu qu'une clause ne peut être considérée comme stipulée en faveur d'une des parties que lorsque l'intention des parties ressort clairement des termes de la clause attributive de juridiction ; elle a ajouté que la désignation d'une juridiction de l'État contractant sur le territoire duquel l'une des parties est domiciliée ne permet pas en elle-même de conclure que l'intention commune des parties était de conférer un avantage à cette partie. Le texte de la décision suit à la lettre l'arrêt de la CJCE que l'on a cité.

V. Conclusions

Il convient de tirer quelques brèves conclusions de cette revue de la jurisprudence des tribunaux nationaux relative à la Convention de Lugano.

1. Les juridictions nationales ont clairement tendance à s'aligner sur la jurisprudence de la CJCE. Cette tendance ressort non seulement des solutions adoptées dans diverses décisions, mais aussi des références fréquentes faites dans le texte des décisions aux arrêts de la CJCE.

2. Toutefois, les affaire portées devant les juridictions nationales ne coïncident pas toujours entièrement avec celles qu'examine la CJCE. Les tribunaux nationaux ont alors tendance à donner leur propre interprétation des arrêts de la CJCE, tirant ainsi des principes affirmés dans ces arrêts des conclusions que la CJCE n'aurait peut-être pas admises.

3. Les juridictions nationales ont parfois à traiter d'affaires et de problèmes dont la CJCE n'a encore jamais été saisie. Lorsqu'elles statuent sur ces affaires, elles ont tendance à trouver des solutions qui parfois sont conformes à la jurisprudence de la CJCE, et parfois ne le sont pas.

4. Certaines juridictions ont une bonne connaissance de la jurisprudence des autres tribunaux nationaux et ont l'esprit d'en tenir compte. Certaines considèrent aussi qu'une juridiction ne doit s'écarter du point de vue déjà adopté par une autre juridiction nationale que s'il y a de bonnes raisons de la faire (cf., par exemple, l'affaire nº 19).

5. Les efforts visant à harmoniser la jurisprudence pourraient notamment consister à encourager les autorités nationales à signaler aux juridictions nationales l'existence du site internet de la CJCE sur la jurisprudence relative aux Conventions de Bruxelles et de Lugano. On pourrait aussi encourager les autorités nationales à envoyer le texte intégral des décisions nationales sous forme électronique à la CJCE, en y annexant, autant que possible, des résumés des décisions dans d'autres langues (accessibles).

THIRD REPORT ON NATIONAL CASE LAW ON THE LUGANO CONVENTION

by Cecilia Renfors, Frans van der Velden, Rolf Wagner[*]

I. Introduction

At its meeting on 13 – 14 September 1999 the Standing Committee of the Lugano Convention was presented with a report on national case law pertaining to the Convention, based on decisions communicated to the EC Court of Justice by signatory and acceding States in application of Protocol 2 to the Convention. That report written by the Greek, Swiss and Spanish delegations[1] covered the decisions contained in the first seven fascicles brought out by the Court of Justice (through its Library, Research and Documentation Centre). A second report by the Austrian, Italian and Norwegian delegations[2] covered the decisions contained in the 8th fascicle. In September 2000 the Standing Committee decided that the third report, covering the decisions in the 9th fascicle[3], should be drawn up by the Netherlands, German and Swedish delegations for the meeting of the Standing Committee in September 2001. The 9th fascicle contains 50 decisions pertaining either to the Lugano or the Brussels Convention, handed down by the following courts:

It should be pointed out that the EC Court of Justice (ECJ) is dependent on information on national case law provided by national authorities. Thus, the national decisions pertaining to the Lugano and Brussels Conventions that the Court has been able to disseminate do not necessarily constitute a complete compilation of such decisions by national courts of last instance. This should be borne in mind when reading this report.

Although the decisions cover a wide variety of questions, Article 5 (1) is the provision that is most frequently dealt with. The provisions disputed more than once are Article 1, 2nd para., Article 16 (1a) and Article 24. As was the case with the first and second reports, this report, too, will concentrate on the decisions on the Lugano Convention proper (12 decisions)[4].

II. Overview of the case law

1) Title I - Scope

Article 1, 2nd para. (1)

In a judgment by the Austrian Supreme Court (E. v. O.)[5] the main issue was whether the matter to be decided fell within the material scope of the Convention. The parties had agreed as part of a divorce settlement that the ex-wife (the defendant) should be the principal debtor and the ex-husband (the plaintiff) the deficiency guarantor for a bank loan. When the defendant failed to discharge her obligations to the bank, the bank claimed payment from the plaintiff. The plaintiff then claimed "right of recourse" against the defendant.

[4] Courts in the contracting States to the Lugano Convention have different traditions as to the disclosure of the considerations which led to their decision. A fair comparison of cases is thereby complicated.

[5] Austrian Obergerichtshof, 21 October 1999, http://www.curia.eu.int/common/recdoc/convention/en/2000/17-2000.htm, Information No. 2000/17.

In its brief remarks on the material scope of the Convention the Austrian Supreme Court based its decision on two ECJ rulings (De Cavel v. De Cavel[6] and W. v. H.[7]). These older decisions on the Brussels Convention were held to constitute an authentic interpretation of the identical provisions found in the Lugano Convention: corresponding to that case law, the term "rights in property arising out of a matrimonial relationship" (Article 1, 2nd para. (1)) was said not to refer solely to the property regimes specifically and exclusively envisaged by certain national legal systems in the case of marriage. Any proprietary relationships resulting directly from the matrimonial relationship or the dissolution thereof were also said to be excluded, in this exception, from the scope of the Convention. The plaintiff's claim, so the Supreme Court held, was based on a settlement reached by the spouses on the dissolution of their marriage[8]. The subject-matter of the case was therefore held to have correlations with property law resulting from the dissolution of the marriage and, as such, were not covered by the Convention.

Article 1, 2nd para. (4)

Article 1, 2nd para. (4) rules that arbitration is outside the scope of the Lugano Convention. Views differ as regards the meaning of this provision, which is identical to Article 1, 2nd para. (4) of the Brussels Convention. As already indicated in the Jenard Report[9], many, but not all disputes over arbitration clauses are excluded. The Schlosser Report[10] on the Convention relating to the accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom to the Brussels Convention discusses the different interpretations of this provision and states that court proceedings only fall within arbitration proceedings when they are ancillary to those 8 Austrian family law provides that in the case of divorce, the matrimonial property and all debts connected with such property have to be distributed amongst husband and wife in an equitable way. In principle, the distribution of the debts has only effects inter partes and does not affect the position of the creditor. A divorce by mutual consent is not possible if the parties do not reach an agreement on that point.

arbitration proceedings. The ECJ accepted this interpretation in the Rich v. Impianti case[11]. In this case, the ECJ decided that the exclusion provided for in Article 1, 2nd para. (4) extends to litigation pending before a national court concerning the appointment of an arbitrator, even if the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement is a preliminary issue in that litigation. In a decision of 4 May 1999 the French Cour de cassation (Piquet v. Sacinter)[12] had to consider whether an arbitration clause in an individual contract of employment excluded the applicability of the Lugano Convention. A Belgian engineer had entered into an individual contract of employment with a Swiss company, the work to be carried out in France. The contract provided that in case of dispute it would be subject to arbitration in Lausanne and governed by the "concordat suisse sur l'arbitrage". The engineer was dismissed. He then sued the Swiss company for payment of damages, based on unjustified dismissal in the Labour Court at the place where he carried out his work. The Labour Court declared that it did not have jurisdiction. On appeal the Court of Appeal confirmed the Labour Court's decision. It based its decision on two grounds:

A. according to its Article 1, 2nd para. (4) the Lugano Convention is not applicable to arbitration, and B. being a valid arbitration clause according to Swiss law, which is applicable to the contract, this clause excludes the application of French labour protection provisions.

The French Cour de cassation held that the Lugano Convention was applicable[13]. In a concise judgment it stated that the arbitration clause could not be raised against an employee who in conformity with the applicable law has taken his former employer to the French competent courts and that by applying Article 5 (1) of this Convention the French courts had jurisdiction to decide on the matter. The Cour de cassation did not deal with Article 1, 2nd para. (4) specifically and did not explain why it referred the case to another Court of Appeal to decide on the merits. However, by referring directly to Article 5 (1) and referring the case to another Court of Appeal to decide on the merits it is unclear whether the Cour de cassation meant to refer to that court any decision on the validity or enforceability of the arbitration clause.

2) Title II - Jurisdiction

In its decision on 26 October 1999 the Swedish Supreme Court (Thessalian Paper Industry Svensaka AB:s i likvidation konkursbo v. P.F. and L.O.)[14] came to the conclusion that it is left to national law to decide whether circumstances to support the application of a specific ground of jurisdiction in the Convention has to be invoked by the parties or if a court can apply the provisions in Title II in the Convention ex officio.

In this case, a Swedish company brought proceedings against several defendants, inter alia against a person domiciled in Finland, defendant Y, claiming liability for a deficiency of repayments in accordance with Swedish company law. The plaintiff claimed that Swedish courts – in this particular case, the Stockholm District Court – had jurisdiction regarding defendant Y under Article 16 (2) of the Convention. The Stockholm District Court held that the proceedings did not involve matters on the constitution of legal persons or any other matter mentioned in Article 16 (2), and dismissed the application.

The view that Article 16 (2) was not applicable was upheld by all instances. The Svea Court of Appeal, however, came to the conclusion that the Stockholm District Court had jurisdiction over defendant Y under Article 6 (1), since the court had jurisdiction regarding the co-defendant under Article 2. It was undisputed that the actions against the co-defendants were connected as required by ECJ case-law (Kalfelis v. Schröder[15]).

Defendant Y appealed against the decision of the Svea Court of Appeal, arguing that Article 6 could not be applied by the Court of Appeal since it was not invoked by the plaintiff when the proceedings were brought.

15 lg. 1988 p. 5565 (189/87).

The Supreme Court rejected this argument. The Court found that the provisions in Title II are meant to be applied whether invoked by the parties or not. Any obligation for courts to take into account circumstances that have not been invoked by the parties, was however found to be left to national law, with the exception of the situations dealt with by Articles 19 and 20. These provisions compel courts to consider certain issues ex officio. Outside the scope of those provisions the Supreme Court held that the Convention did not lay down any obligations.

Article 5 (1) clause 1

In a final judgment by the Higher Regional Court in München[16], the plaintiff, the trustee in bankruptcy of a private limited company with its registered office in Germany (hereinafter referred to as the company) sued the defendant for damages. The defendant had formerly been the company's managing director and was domiciled in Switzerland. The decision focused on the managing director's internal liability to the company, especially pursuant to certain provisions of German law on public limited companies. In particular, the plaintiff claimed that the defendant had misrepresented the company's nominal capital and "stripped" the company's assets.

Without first going into the prior question of whether the dispute related to a contract of employment pursuant to clauses 2 and 3 of Article 5 (1), the court classified the special legal relationship between the German private limited company and its managing director as its organ as a "contract" within the meaning of the first clause of Article 5 (1). It acknowledged that the appointment of a managing director by a company was an act under corporate law. The court found that since the position of a managing director within a company involved wide-ranging obligations towards the company, such an appointment had, however, to be accepted by the managing director. There was all the more reason, so the court held, to apply Article 5 (1) as there was usually a contract of employment between the company and its managing director, specifying that legal obligations stemming from his position as company executive should also to be complied with. The ECJ was also stated to have ruled that obligations to pay money arising from the relationship between an association and its members were to be regarded as "matters relating to a contract" within the meaning of Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention, which had exactly the same wording. Membership of an association created, between the members, links as close as those created between parties to a contract. Furthermore, the court drew attention to the ECJ's qualification of the links between the shareholders of a company as being of a contractual nature.

In conclusion, the court declared itself to have international jurisdiction under the first clause of Article 5 (1), if not already under Article 5 (3) so far as the action could be classified as tortious. The court held that the place of performance of the disputed contract, which was to be determined by reference to the principles of private international law, was Germany (registered office of the company).

In a decision of the British House of Lords of 17 February 2000 (Agnew and others v. Lansförsäkringsbolagens AB)[17], one of the issues at hand was the interpretation of Article 5 (1)[18]. The plaintiffs brought proceedings in England against an insurance company domiciled in Sweden, seeking a declaration that they were entitled to set aside a reinsurance contract on the grounds of misrepresentation and non-disclosure. The background to the proceedings is the following. The plaintiffs carried on reinsurance business in the London market and provided reinsurance for a risk entered into by the Swedish company, who had issued suppliers' and manufacturers' guarantee insurance in respect of obligations arising under a contract to supply a Norwegian company with underwater valves for use in oil fields. The claimants argued that they were induced to enter into the contracts by material misrepresentation and that the defendant, through its brokers, was guilty of material non-disclosure during the negotiation and the presentation of the risk, in London.

18 The issue whether the dispute fell under Articles 7 to 12 on jurisdiction in matters relating to insurance contracts is dealt with in a following section in this report.

In bringing the proceedings, the plaintiffs relied on Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention. The defendant argued that the proceedings fell outside the scope of Article 5 (1), contending that the ”obligation in question” had to be an obligation under a contract and that an obligation of disclosure in pre-contractual negotiations was not such an obligation.

The High Court and the Court of Appeal accepted jurisdiction under Article 5 (1). Also the House of Lords found that English courts had jurisdiction under Article 5 (1). Firstly, the House of Lords held that an obligation to disclose in pre-contract negotiations could constitute the obligation in question for the purposes of Article 5 (1). This conclusion was held to be consistent with the ordinary meaning of the language used in the provision. Furthermore, the policy and principle underpinning the provision was found to support that interpretation. Secondly, the House of Lords held that an obligation which, if not fulfilled, provided a right to set aside the contract was to be regarded as a contractual obligation. In this context it was pointed out that a distinction has to be made in relation to cases where an apparent contract was void ab initio.

The reasoning in the decision by the House of Lords takes as its starting point the language of Article 5 (1). In the opinion of Lord Woolf, this standpoint is examined in relation not only to the policy behind the Convention, but also in relation to case-law of the ECJ. Referring to i.a. de Bloos v. Bouyer[19] and the Effer v. Kantner[20] , Lord Woolf concludes that ECJ case-law does not take a stand on the issue whether pre-contractual obligations are within Article 5 (1). Neither should, according to this opinion, the de Bloos case and the use of the words ”…the obligation referred to in Article 5 (1) is still that which arises under the contract.” be interpreted as limiting Article 5 (1) to obligations arising under express terms of a contract.

[20] Slg. 1982 p. 825 (38/81).

In dissenting opinions of Lord Hope and Lord Millett, conclusions to the contrary are made with regard to pre-contractual obligations. Lord Hope finds the references in ECJ judgment in Groupe Concorde v. Suhadiwarno[21] to "the intention of the parties" and to the place which has a real connection with the "true substance of the contract" to support the conclusion that when the court uses the words "contractual obligation" it has in mind obligations created by or arising under the contract. Lord Millett argued that an obligation relevant to the application of Article 5 (1) must be a contractual obligation, voluntarily undertaken by the party to the contract and contained in the contract itself. A breach of the duty to act in utmost good faith when the reinsurance contract was entered into could not be regarded to be a performance or a non-performance of an obligation created by the contract.

Article 5 (1) clauses 1 and 2

In a decision of 20 January 1999 the Austrian Supreme Court[22] considered whether a self-employed commercial agent could sue his principal at the place of jurisdiction for the contract of employment (second clause of Article 5 (1)) in an action in which he claimed payment of commission, compensation for termination of an agreement, submission of a statement of accounts and preparation of an abstract of accounts. The court found that the ECJ was not directly entitled to interpret the Lugano Convention. Pursuant to Protocol No 2 to that Convention, ECJ decisions handed down prior to 16 September 1988 (= date the Lugano Convention was signed) were to be regarded as authentic interpretations. The court went on to say that the case law of the other Contracting States was also to be taken into account. Lastly, in interpreting the Convention, due account was to be taken of the principles deriving from ECJ case law on parallel provisions of the Brussels Convention. The methodological principles applicable to interpretation of the Brussels Convention could also, so the court held, be drawn upon for the interpretation of the Lugano Convention.

The court held that exceptions from the basic rule in Article 2 were to be interpreted narrowly. Pursuant to the second clause of Article 5 (1), actions arising out of employment contracts could be also brought at the place where the work was habitually carried out. The term "contract of employment" was said generally to be given an autonomous interpretation. The interpretation of Article 6 of the 1980 Rome Convention on the law applicable to contractual obligations was also to be taken into account. Contracts of employment were held to be agreements between the employer and the employee covering a dependent, subordinate activity. As stated by the ECJ in the Mulox v. Geels[23] case, the contract of employment created a lasting bond which integrated the employee into the organisational framework of the employer's business in a specific way. According to the lower court's findings this did not apply to the plaintiff's situation. His dependence on the defendant was not such, either in personal or commercial terms, as to amount to personal dependence. There was therefore no dependent, subordinate relationship, so that the action could not be based on the second clause of Article 5 (1).

By way of supplementation, the Austrian Supreme Court looked at the question whether the action could be based on the place of performance for other contractual disputes (first clause of Article 5 (1)). According to ECJ case law, the place of performance was to be determined by the law applicable to the contract. However, this did not mean that a separate place of performance had to be determined for each separate claim. If a claimant based his action on several obligations arising under the same contract, the court had to be guided by the maxim accessorium sequitur principale. The court said that in order to avoid a multiplicity of fora, in cases where various obligations were at issue, it would be the principal obligation which would determine its jurisdiction. In the case in point, the principal obligation was held to be the obligation in regard to the payment of a sum of money (and not the claim for submission of a statement of accounts or for preparation of an abstract of accounts).

Since the defendant was domiciled in Finland and the place of performance was also in Finland, the Austrian court declined international jurisdiction.

Article 5 (3)

In a decision of 2 August 1999 the Swiss Federal Court (P.H. v. B.T.)[24] was seized of a case where the plaintiff was seeking a court declaration negating the existence of a certain claim. The plaintiff, the director of a bank in an advisory capacity, had been in correspondence with the Zürich regional prosecutor's office and made a witness statement to it. The defendant alleged that it had been harmed by this action, which it considered to be tortious and claimed damages from the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought a declaration that he was not liable to the defendant, or at least not through any tortious act.

The court took as its starting point the ECJ decision in the case Tatry v. Rataj[25]. According to that decision, an action seeking a declaration that the plaintiff is not liable for causing loss had the same cause of action as proceedings brought by the opposing party seeking to have the plaintiff declared liable for loss; therefore where a tort claim was in dispute the proceedings for a declaration that the plaintiff is not liable were to be brought in the same place as the disputed claim would have to be brought.

The court conceded that problems might arise if no single place of commission could be identified, e.g. if the event giving rise to the injury occurred in one place but the injury occurred elsewhere. The court thought it might be problematic that under these circumstances, it would be the plaintiff (the presumed wrongdoer), rather than the victim, who would have the option allowed by Article 5 (3) of suing either in the place where the injury occurred ("Handlungsort") or in the place where the event giving rise to the injury occurred ("Erfolgsort"). At any rate, there was in the court's opinion no problem in the case in point, because the court seized thereof was particularly close to the source of the evidence and facts of the case.[26]

26 The court also concluded that the wrongdoer as the plaintiff does not have to provide evidence supporting jurisdiction as he is the one who denies the factual basis of the victim's claim. In such cases the averments of the alleged victim suffice to create jurisdiction.

As regards Article 5 (3) Lugano Convention, views differ as to whether the court is required to examine whether a tortious act was actually committed in a case where the defendant denies commission. To the extent that such examination is demanded, this is designed to avoid jurisdiction being procured on the basis of arbitrary allegations made by the plaintiff. But where a supposed tortfeasor has brought an action seeking a court declaration negating the existence of a cause of action, this will not be necessary in the opinion of the Swiss Federal Court, for, if that were not the case, a supposed tortfeasor denying commission of a tort would not be able to benefit from the jurisdiction envisaged in Article 5 (3).

Finally, the court also dealt with the question of where the event giving rise to the injury, i.e. the plaintiff's alleged tortious statements, occurred. It ruled that this was the place where statements were made orally to third parties or where written statements were dispatched.

I. Articles 7 and 11

In the above mentioned decision of the House of Lords of 17 February 2000 (Agnew and others v. Lansförsäkringsbolagens AB)[27] the interpretation of "matters relating to insurance" was dealt with in addition to the questions regarding Article 5 (1). The issue was whether a reinsurance contract is covered by the protective provisions in Title II, Section 3 of the Convention.

One of the objections to English courts having jurisdiction put forward by the defendant was that the case was a matter related to insurance under Article 7. Thus, the insurer could according to Article 11 only bring proceedings in the courts of the Contracting State where the defendant was domiciled.

[27] British House of Lords, 17 February 2000; The All England Law Reports 2000 Vol. 1 p. 737, http://www.curia.eu.int/ common/recdoc/convention/en/2000/40-2000.htm, Information No. 2000/40. The background to the dispute is described on p. 7.

The House of Lords was unanimous in rejecting this defence and held that the provisions in Section 3 of the Convention had as the primary objective to protect the weaker party in a insurance contract. The reinsured could not conventionally be regarded as a weaker party and did not, according to the House of Lords, need social protection against reinsurers. Moreover, insurance and reinsurance were considered to be conceptually different and serving different purposes. This outcome is consistent with the standpoints made in the Schlosser Report[28] on the 1978 Accession Convention, which has been confirmed by ECJ in Group Josi v. UGIC[29].

Article 8, 1st para. (1, 2)

In a decision of the French Cour de cassation (Consorts Bonello v. Crèdit Commercial de France Suisse et autre)[30] the interpretation of Article 8,1st para. (2) was at stake. In this case a testator had been granted a loan by a Swiss bank which was guaranteed by a life insurance policy with a Swiss insurance company. When the testator died, the heirs, with residence in France, summoned both companies before the Nice District Court stating that the bank's claim to repayment of the loan was not justified and that the insurance company had no right to refuse its guarantee. The heirs were of the opinion that they could go to the court where they were domiciled on the ground of Article 8, 1st para. (2) of the Lugano Convention. The Nice Court and the Aix-en-Provence Court of Appeal both declined jurisdiction on the basis of Article 8 of the Brussels Convention.

30 French Cour de Cassation, 22 February 2000, Bulletin des arrêts, Chambres civiles, 2000 I No. 55, http://www.curia.eu.int/common/recdoc/convention/en/2000/34-2000.htm, Information No. 2000/34.

The French Cour de cassation held that the appeal could not be based on the ground that the courts had applied Article 8 of the Brussels Convention although Article 8 of the Lugano Convention was applicable with regard to the domicile of the Swiss insurer, as the terminology of these provisions is identical. The question decided here has probably never been raised before in Brussels and Lugano Convention cases but may become of particular interest in the near future. Without explicitly saying so the Cour de cassation decided that the mere fact that a court had applied the wrong international instrument may not give rise to an appeal, if the correct ground of jurisdiction has been applied. Before long, the European Commmunity and Lugano States will be confronted with four or even five different international instruments on jurisdiction and enforcement. From 1 March 2002 the Brussels Convention will be replaced by the Brussels Regulation on jurisdiction and enforcement[31], which will be binding from that date upon fourteen EU Member States. Denmark - which has a special position under the EU Amsterdam Treaty - will not be subject to this Regulation and will remain under the Brussels Convention until a new Convention between Denmark and the EU/other member states of the EU, revised along the lines of the Brussels Regulation, will come into force. In the meantime, the Lugano Convention, too, will be revised in the same way. Until such time as every actual Lugano Convention State will have ratified the new Lugano Convention, the jumble will remain in place especially since the drafting of clear disconnection clauses almost seems impossible in legal terms and wholly impossible in political terms.

The Cour de cassation rejected the appeal, stating that on the basis of Article 8, 1st para. (2), courts have jurisdiction at the place where the policy-holder is domiciled only for the benefit of the person who has contracted with the insurer. Heirs may exercise claims formerly owned by the testator but they are not policy-holders as referred to in the mentioned provision.

31 OJ 2001, L 12/1.

This point of the decision discusses the meaning of Article 8, 1st para. (2) of the Lugano Convention. This part of Article 8 is identical to the same part of Article 8 of the Brussels Convention, which, until now, has not given rise to any question of interpretation. The Jenard Report [32]only commented that the policy-holder is the person who has contracted with the insurance company, and that this forum actoris jurisdiction lies with the courts for the place of the policy-holder's domicile at the time of instigating the case. The decision of the Cour de cassation determined the right of the policy-holder to summon the insurer before the courts of the place where he is domiciled, a right which is not open to universal heirs. Whether this opinion is acceptable to all European Union States and all Lugano States, is not certain.

Article 16 (1)

There was interpretation of Article 16 (1) in a ruling given by the Austrian Supreme Court (H. v. K.)[33]. The plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of a contract which both parties described as a "lease agreement". The object of the contract was the lease of exhibition space outside Austria. In addition, the contract settled how electricity, heating and ancillary costs such as telephone units were to be charged. The plaintiff also promised assistance from her PR department and offered to publish the defendant's brochures in-house. The plaintiff provided the defendant with addresses from her customer files for an envisaged mail-shot.

The Austrian court based its ruling on the ECJ's decision in the Rösler v. Rottwinkel[34] case. Having due regard to the circumstances of the individual case - so the court held - the crucial point in a mixed contract was whether the contract was at least primarily a lease/tenancy agreement. The court held that the lower instance had been right not to accord any particular importance to services provided by the plaintiff (advertising, mail-shot) over and above the payment of rent.

34 Slg. 1985 p. 99 (241/83).

In conclusion the Austrian Court qualified the agreement between the parties as a tenancy within the meaning of Article 16. Since the immovable property was situated outside of Austria the court declined jurisdiction.

Article 24

A Swiss commercial court made an interim injunction ordering the defendant to deliver certain goods to the plaintiff on the basis of a contractual agreement. The plaintiff was ordered to pay a security. The defendant appealed, claiming that Article 24 had been infringed. The Swiss Federal Court (SodaStream Ltd. v. Urs Jäger AG)[35], which ultimately rejected the appeal, dealt first with the parties' agreement on jurisdiction. According to the wording of that agreement, the English courts were to have jurisdiction in any proceedings arising out of the contract. An agreement conferring jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 17 was said to have the effect of derogating from the rules of the Convention; the Federal Court concluded that this extended to provisional measures, so that the Swiss court did not have jurisdiction to impose the interim injunction under the Lugano Convention.[36]

The Federal Court then stated that under Article 24 provisional measures could also be based on national jurisdiction rules. The question whether, and under what circumstances, a jurisdiction agreement between parties could also derogate from national jurisdiction rules, was, in the Federal Court's opinion, to be governed by national law. This ruled out any derogation if the court applied to was the only one able to order immediately enforceable interim measures in time. This was held to be the case.

The court then raised the question whether, and under what circumstances, provisional measures under Article 24 could be granted if they were not designed solely to safeguard rights that might be at risk, but to provide temporary satisfaction. The court emphasised first of all that ECJ case law on parallel provisions in the Brussels Convention should be taken into account when interpreting the Lugano Convention. Since Article 24 referred to provisional, including protective, measures, the court found that the provision could not be held to refer solely to protective measures.

Referring to the ECJ's decisions in Reichert v. Dresdner Bank[37], van Uden v. Deco-Line[38] and Mietz v. Intership Yachting[39] the court then pointed to the risk that ordering interim performance might, by its very nature, prejudice the decision on the merits. The court held that an order for interim performance could not be regarded as a provisional measure within the meaning of Article 24 unless two conditions were met. First, the court with jurisdiction on the merits was not (to put it briefly) to be in the position of ordering interim measures in time. Secondly, the defendant had to be guaranteed repayment of the sum awarded if the plaintiff was unsuccessful as regards the merits of his action. The court held that both these conditions were met in the case at issue.

Articles 24 and 31

Article 24 remains an interesting and difficult provision of the Brussels and Lugano Convention, as can also be seen in the case decided by the Swiss Federal Court (S. v. X. en liquidation)[40]. The Civil Court of Oslo had ordered S. to pay to X. a sum of money in point 1) and 2) of the operating part of the judgment. Point 3) stated that a delay of two weeks was granted for the performance of the obligations under 1) and 2), this delay running from the day of the pronouncement of the judgment. The defendant S. appealed against this decision.[41]

41 The law report in which the decision is published does not mention the domicile of S. and X. The decision implicitly indicates that both parties did not have a residence in Switzerland.

A year after, X., then in liquidation, requested the President of the Geneva District Court to authorise sequestration to the detriment of S., referring to the Oslo judgment. The President gave authorisation on the same day, but after opposition by S., he revised his decision one month later. On appeal the Geneva Cantonal Court decided in favour of X. and reconfirmed the authorisation of sequestration. S. submitted the case to the Swiss Federal Court, which annulled the contested decision of the Appellate Court.

The decision of the Federal Court can only be understood after studying Article 271, 1st para. (4) of the Swiss Act on Payment Collection and Bankruptcy. The first paragraph of this Article enumerates the grounds for the seizure of property, sub 4 of this paragraph provides a right of seizure for debts of a foreign domiciled debtor. In such a case seizure may be granted if (1) the claim has a sufficient link with Switzerland, or (2) if it is based on an enforceable judgment, or (3) on an acknowledgement of debt by the debtor.[42]

The Federal Court firstly stated that X.'s claim was not based on an acknowledgement of debt by S. and did not have a sufficient link with Switzerland, which lead to the question whether the claim resulted from a decision which is enforceable as referred to in Article 271, 1st para. (4) of the mentioned Swiss Act. According to some authors, the Federal Court continued, this condition of enforceability is fulfilled if the decision is enforceable in the State where it was delivered, even if according to Swiss law or an international convention like the Lugano Convention that decision is not open to an exequatur. Most authorities on the Convention are of a different opinion, to which the Geneva Cantonal Court implicitly associated itself when it examined whether the Norwegian judgment is enforceable as regards Article 31, 1st para. of the Lugano Convention.

[42] The wording of Article 271 of the Swiss Act on Payment Collection and Bankruptcy:
„(1) Der Gläubiger kann für eine fällige Forderung, soweit diese nicht durch ein Pfand gedeckt ist, Vermögensstücke des Schuldners mit Arrest belegen lassen:
1. ...
2. ...
3. ...
4. wenn der Schuldner nicht in der Schweiz wohnt, kein anderer Arrestgrund gegeben ist, die Forderung aber einen genügenden Bezug zur Schweiz aufweist oder auf einem vollstreckbaren gerichtlichen Urteil oder auf einer Schuldanerkennung im Sinne von Artikel 82 Absatz 1 beruht;
5. ...

Expert reports make it clear that even according to the law of the State of origin, the Norwegian judgment is not enforceable. It is not even comparable with a judgment enforceable in anticipation or a provisional decree, while it has not been declared provisionally enforceable pending an appeal, nor does it contain a provisional order for money preliminary to the proceedings on the merits. The Swiss first and second instance courts did not study any of these qualifications. They considered that the requesting party had made it sufficiently clear that part 3) of the Norwegian judgment gave the possibility of provisional seizure upon the expiry of the period of time provided for in the judgment, now that it had transpired that the defendant did not appeal on that point and that appeal as such did not ex lege suspend the execution. Norwegian authorities are of the opinion that, according to Norwegian law, the Oslo judgment, even without having "force exécutoire", may be used to guarantee the claim by allowing the winning claimant to request provisional seizure or a sequestration over all the defendant's goods in Norway and in any other State which private international law or conventions allow this to be done. Basing its decision on these reports the Geneva Cantonal Court seems to have accepted that the Oslo judgment, although not executory on the merits, nevertheless entitles X. to ask for a provisional seizure of S.' property even if it is located in another State.

The Swiss Federal Court nevertheless rejected this decision and accepted S.' argument. It considered that although Article 25 of the Lugano Convention does not exclude the recognition and enforcement of provisional measures which could justify a sequestration order under Article 271, 1st para. (4), of the said Swiss Act, importance has to be given to the fact that the Norwegian courts had not ordered any freezing of property as a consequence of the Oslo judgment. The Cantonal Court wrongly gave executory power to point 3) of the Oslo judgment, which clearly does not mean that the judgment would be provisionally enforceable on the merits, but only that it allows the winning party to request provisional measures within two weeks after the pronouncement of the judgment. As the Oslo Court did not deliver a decision which can be enforced, and did not order a provisional seizure, the request for sequestration could only be rejected.

This rather complex case deals with the problem under which circumstances an application for a provisional measure may be made to a court which does not have jurisdiction over the substance of the matter. Article 24 of the Lugano Convention entitles Swiss courts to grant provisional measures provided for under Swiss law, like sequestration, even if under that Convention the courts of another Contracting State have jurisdiction to decide on the merits. However, in the case of Article 24, the conditions, the content and the effects of such measures are determined by the national law (in this case the Swiss Act on Payment Collection and Bankruptcy). But do these national requirements need to be in line with the requirements of the ECJ? In applying Article 271, 1st para. (4) of the Swiss Act on Payment Collection and Bankruptcy, the Federal Court dealt with two aspects:

a) As concerns the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments, Article 31 of the Lugano Convention requires that if a foreign judgment is enforceable under the Convention, then it must be - provisionally or definitively - enforceable in the State in which it has been rendered. The Norwegian judgment here discussed did not include any decision as to its enforceability, nor was it considered by any other courts of that State to be enforceable or provisionally enforceable.

b) Secondly the Federal Court dealt with the Article 271-requirement of a sufficient link with Switzerland, now that the requirements of an enforceable judgment and of an acknowledgement of debt were missing. The judgment of the Federal Court to deny X. the right of a provisional measure such as the appointment of a sequestrator, because the claim had no sufficient link with Switzerland, in principle falls into line with the ECJ decision in the Van Uden v. Deco-line case[43]. In the Van Uden case it was decided in the fourth paragraph of its operative part that Article 24, in general, requires a real connecting link between the subject-matter of the measures sought and the territorial jurisdiction of the Contracting State of the court before which those measures are sought. The Federal Court`s decision that it is only the national law of the state where the court is situated, which determines the conditions for an interim or provisional measure is certainly not in line with the Van Uden case.

[43] Slg. 1998 p. I-7091 (391/95).

It would have been desirable if in its decision the Federal Court had gone into detail with regard to the question whether the specific requirements of the Swiss law concerning the real connecting link correspond to the requirements of the ECJ case law.

3) Title III - Recognition and Enforcement
Article 28 (1) in conjunction with Article 16 (1a)

In a decision by the Norwegian Supreme Court (Dansommer AS v. Bardsen)[44] regarding enforcement of a Danish judgment in Norway, the question of the scope of application of provisions on exclusive jurisdiction for proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property, was raised. The parties had concluded an agreement whereby the plaintiff should grant leases over a house, belonging to the defendant, to foreign tourists. The contract gave the right of entire disposal of the house to the plaintiff during a set period of time for a specified sum of money. The defendant had no right to use the house during this period. The plaintiff's rights under the contract would remain unchanged even if the house was sold.

The judgment was handed down by a court in Aarhus, Denmark, ordering the defendant to pay a sum of money to the plaintiff, in accordance with conditions specified in the contract, due to the defendants failure to comply with the agreement. The court assumed jurisdiction relying on an explicit provision in the contract stating that the court in Aarhus had jurisdiction over all disputes that might arise from the contract. The judgment debtor – the defendant in the original proceedings – objected to the judgment being declared enforceable and claimed that the contract was a tenancy of immovable property. Under Article 16 (1a) of the Convention, such proceedings can only be brought before the courts of the Contracting State in which the property is situated, notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary. Enforcement should thus be refused according to Article 28. The plaintiff argued that the agreement was not a tenancy, but an agreement obliging the plaintiff to grant leases over the house.

The Norwegian Supreme Court came to the contrary conclusion, and found the dispute to fall within the scope of Article 16 (1a). The agreement was concluded with the owner and arose out of the owners obligations under the contract. The fact that the plaintiff never intended to live in the property, but to lease it to others, did not change the status of the agreement. A reference was made to two cases from the ECJ, Hacker v. Euro-Relais[45] and Rösler v. Rottwinkel[46]. Regarding the first-mentioned case, in which Article 16 (1) was found not to be applicable, the Norwegian Supreme Court underlined that the agreement in that case was a mixed agreement, and included obligations unrelated to the lease of immovable property. The situation was thus different compared to the present case.

Article 54

In the above mentioned[47] decision of 4 May 1999 the French Cour de cassation also had to decide on Article 54 of the Lugano Convention. The individual contract of employment under discussion was concluded in 1986. On appeal it was decided that the Lugano Convention did not apply since it became binding between France and Switzerland only after February 1992. However, the Cour de cassation ruled that the Lugano Convention was applicable in view of Article 54, since the Convention has been in force from the first of January 1992, while the Labour Court was seized in July 1995. This Cour de cassation decision is in line with the Sanicentral decision[48], in which interpretation was given of Article 54 of the Brussels Convention which is identical to Article 54 of the Lugano Convention. In this decision the ECJ held that "by its nature a clause in writing conferring jurisdiction and occurring in a contract of employment is a choice of jurisdiction; such a choice has no legal effect for so long as no judicial proceedings have been commenced and only becomes of consequence at the date when judicial proceedings are set in motion. … The effect of Article 54 is that the only essential factor for the rules of the Convention to be applicable to litigation relating to legal relationships created before the date of coming into force of the Convention is that the judicial procedure should have been instituted subsequently to that date, …"

The French Cour de cassation did not deal with the fact that the Sanicentral case concerned an employment contract prorogation clause, while the ECJ's decision discussed here concerned an employment contract arbitration clause. However, with regard to Article 54 this question is not of importance.

III. Final considerations

The review of the case law of national courts on the Lugano Convention requires some brief concluding remarks:

National courts tend to follow the case law of the ECJ on parallel provisions of the Brussels Convention. This tendency is revealed not only by the solutions adopted in various decisions, but also by frequent reference in the text of decisions to judgments of the ECJ.

In its decision of 20 January 1999 the Austrian Supreme Court makes specific reference to Protocol No 2 of the Lugano Convention.

National courts are sometimes confronted with cases and problems that have never been dealt with by the ECJ. In deciding such cases, national courts tend to seek solutions which are in line with the case law of the ECJ.

Some courts also draw on the case law of other national courts and on domestic and foreign legal commentaries in their deliberations.[49]

FORTH REPORT ON NATIONAL CASE LAW ON THE LUGANO CONVENTION

by Oliver Parker, Gustav Moeller and Jeannine Dennewald

I Introduction

At its meeting on 13-14 September 1999 the Standing Committee of the Lugano Convention was presented with a report on national case law pertaining to the Convention, based on decisions communicated to the EC Court of Justice by signatory and acceding States in application of Protocol 2 to the Convention. That report which was written by the Greek, Swiss and Spanish delegations[1] covered the decisions contained in the first seven fascicles brought out by the Court of Justice (through its Library, Research and Documentation Centre).

It should be pointed out that the EC Court of Justice (ECJ) is dependent on information on national case law provided by national authorities. Thus, the national decisions pertaining to the Lugano and Brussels Conventions that the Court has been able to disseminate do not necessarily constitute a complete compilation of such decisions by national courts. This should be borne in mind when reading this report.

As was the case with the first, second and third reports, this report will also concentrate on the decisions on the Lugano Convention (13 decisions)[6].

II Overview of the case law

Articles 1(2) and 6(4)

1. In its decision of 25 April 2002 the Norwegian Supreme Court had to consider whether the expression "wills and succession" for the purposes of Article 1, para 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention only covers disputes concerning succession rights or in other words only disputes which could not have arisen independently of succession. The question arose in a dispute between one heir and another heir and his wife concerning the effects of a settlement, including ownership of immovable property, between the administrator of a bankrupt estate of a deceased person and one of the two heirs. The other heir alleged that her rights as an heir of the deceased person had been violated by the settlement. The Court held that the exception in Article 1, para 2(1) of the Convention only applied to disputes concerning purely succession rights and that the Lugano Convention thus was applicable in the matter.

2. In the same decision the Court further held that Article 16(1)(a) of the Convention applied to a dispute concerning ownership of immovable property.

3. Finally the Court had to consider whether it was under Article 6 (4) of the Convention possible for the heir - who alleged that her rights as an heir had been violated by the settlement - to combine her action for repayment of rent relating to that property with her action concerning ownership of the immovable property. The defendants alleged that the dispute was not a matter relating to a contract, since the claimant had denied that there was a valid transfer of ownership of the immovable property from the deceased person to the heir. The Court held that an allegation that the transfer of the immovable property was invalid could not in a case like this render Article 6 (4) of the Convention inapplicable. If that was the case and the claims could not be combined, the consequence would be that the claims had to be brought in two different proceedings even though all claims had arisen out of the same contract. Thus Article 6 (4) was in any case applicable as far as the action was brought against the other heir.

4. As far as the action also was brought against the other heir's wife the Court observed that there was no contract between her and the deceased person. The immovable property had been transferred to her without compensation by her housebound. The latter had acquired the immovable property by a contract from the deceased person In a case like this, where the courts of the Contracting State, in which the immovable property is situated have exclusive jurisdiction as to the dispute concerning immovable property, it would having regard to so-called procedural economy be inappropriate not to allow the claimant to combine his claims concerning ownership and repayment of rents relating to that property.

5. Under Article 6 (4) of the Convention the law applicable to the question whether the actions may be combined was in this case Norwegian law. Since combination of the actions was allowed under Norwegian law, the Norwegian courts had jurisdiction as to all claims in the case.

Article 2

6. In a final judgment dated 12 October 2000 the British House of Lords (Canada Trust Co and others v Stolzenberg and others (No 2[7])) considered the date on which a person is "sued" for the purposes of the Convention's main rule of jurisdiction in Article 2, and the rule on multiple defendants in Article 6(1).

7. In this case the plaintiff wished to bring proceedings in England against multiple defendants, only one of whom, defendant S, was domiciled in England when the writ was issued. The writ was then served on all the defendants, except defendant S, who was served three months later by which time he had left England in an attempt to evade service and it was possible that at that moment he was no longer domiciled in England. Subsequently several of the defendants applied to the English courts to have the service on them set aside on the ground that the English courts had no jurisdiction over them. In respect of the defendants domiciled in Switzerland the plaintiff relied on Articles 2 and 6 on the basis that defendant S was domiciled in England at the time the writ was issued against him. These defendants argued that a person was "sued" for the purposes of these provisions on the day when the writ was served on him, and not on the day when it was issued. This contention was rejected at first instance and in the Court of Appeal, and these defendants then appealed to the House of Lords.

8. The House of Lords held that for the purposes of Articles 2 and 6 the word "sued" referred to the initiation of proceedings and accordingly the English courts took jurisdiction over a defendant, for these purposes, on the date that the writ was issued. The court gave the following reasons for this conclusion. First, such a conclusion was supported by the language of the Convention which used the expressions "sued", "bring proceedings" and "instituted proceedings" interchangeably. Secondly, it protected one of the major aims of the Convention, namely the achievement of predictability and certainty at all stages for all the parties involved. The time of lodging of the legal process with the court would be a matter of record in all national legal systems, whereas proof of valid service depended on evidence. Even if there were differences between legal systems as to how proceedings were initiated, the date of their initiation appeared to be a readily available point of reference. And thirdly, if the date of service was to be used as the operative date for the purposes of Articles 2 and 6, some defendants, like defendant S in this case, would be able to evade the service of process when they became aware of the incipient proceedings. That risk was particularly significant in a claim against a multiplicity of defendants.

9. Another issue decided by this case concerns the standard of proof to be applied by the English courts in considering whether a court's jurisdiction has been established for the purposes of the Convention. In Shevill v Presse Alliance[8] the Court of Justice held that it is for the national court to determine this standard of proof, provided that this does not impair the effectiveness of the Convention. The House of Lords, upholding the decision of the Court of Appeal, held that the plaintiff need only demonstrate a good arguable case that the jurisdictional facts on which he relies are present. This test is applied generally by the English courts to jurisdictional issues outside the context of the Convention.

10. This conclusion has been criticised[9] on the basis that it may impair the practical effect of the Convention. For example an English court may consider that the necessary jurisdictional basis is probably absent perhaps on the ground that there may well be a valid choice of court agreement in favour of the courts of another Contracting State; however the court will continue with the proceedings, provided there is still a good arguable case that the validity of that agreement could be successfully questioned. It may subsequently decide that it has in fact no jurisdiction under the Convention because the agreement is valid, but it will still neveretheless give a judgment on the merits. The problem is that English law appears to preclude any further ruling on the issue of jurisdiction, once an initial finding on that issue has been made. It has been suggested in the light of this that a higher standard of proof should be applied to the determination of such issues, for example the balance of probabilities. In the Canada Trust Co case the House of Lords rejected such a test on the basis that its adoption would sometimes require the trial of the issue or at least the cross-examination of deponents to affidavits and that this would cause significant extra expense and delay for the parties to the litigation.

Article 5(1)

11. In a judgment of 28 June 2000, the Oberster Gerichtshof[10] in Austria, ruled that, for the purposes of applying and interpreting the provisions of the Lugano Convention, it is necessary to apply the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and of the national courts of the Member States on matters concerning the Brussels Convention, so as to obtain uniform application of the Lugano and Brussels Conventions throughout the whole of the territorial area to which those two conventions apply.

12. It was decided that Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention, interpreted in accordance with the case law of the Court of Justice, does not apply to an action brought by the purchaser of a defective product against the manufacturer, when the latter was not the vendor from whom the purchaser had bought the product.

13. It was decided that purely financial loss is not covered by product liability. Apart from in the case of product liability, the purchaser cannot rely on Article 5 (3) of the Lugano Convention to sue the manufacturer of goods which are merely defective and which the purchaser has bought from another vendor.

Article 6(1)

14. The British House of Lords (in Canada Trust Co and others v Stolzenberg and Others (No 2[11])) decided that for the purpose of the rule in Article 6(1) on multiple defendants (and also in relation to Article 2) a person is "sued" on the date a writ is issued, rather than the date on which it is served on him by the plaintiff[12]. The court also rejected the argument that a plaintiff could only rely on this article, if the "anchor defendant", that is the defendant who was domiciled in the jurisdiction in which the proceedings have been brought, had already been served before the other defendants. This conclusion reflected the fact that when a court is considering whether Article 6(1) should be applied, it does so on an inter partes basis. In the light of this the court held that the defendant's interests are protected because he has an opportunity to contest those proceedings and the order in which defendants have been served or whether one was served before the issue of proceedings against another is irrelevant.

Article 8(1)

15. In its decision of 3 January 2000 the Swedish Supreme Court[13] had to consider whether the court for the place where the policyholder is domiciled must exercise its jurisdiction under Article 8, para 1 (2) of the Lugano Convention in a dispute concerning the liability of an insurance association as underwriter of a marine insurance agreement because of damage to the rudder of the tanker M/T Barbro. Article 9 of Chapter 17 of the Swedish Maritime Code (sjölagen) provides that such a dispute shall be tried and decided by an average adjuster (particular average).

16. The Swedish Supreme Court held that the above mentioned provision of the Lugano Convention gives the shipowners the right to sue the insurance association in the court for the place where the shipowners have their seat. The provision meant an advantage for the shipowners who are usually regarded as the weaker party. The Court held further that Article 8 para 1 (2) of the Lugano Convention requires that a party shall have a possibility to institute court proceedings in order to get a judgment, which is entitled to enforcement in the other Contracting States. Since the Lugano Convention prevailed over Swedish national law the shipowners had the right to sue the insurance association in the court for the place where the shipowners had their seat, even though no particular average had been rendered in the dispute

17. In two cases before the German and Austrian courts judgments were given on the basis of Article 17 of the Lugano Convention.

18. In the first case, the applicant, domiciled in Austria, brought an action, before the Austrian courts, for compensation for a loss resulting from a delivery which did not conform to the terms of an exclusive distribution contract. The defendant claimed that the original contract did not include a jurisdiction clause, and that the jurisdiction clause had been added, by the applicant, without his knowledge or consent.

[12] This issue has been dealt with in more detail in an earlier section in this report: see paragraphs 6 to 10 above.
[13] Swedish Högsta domstolen, 3 January 2000, Nytt Juridiskt Arkiv, 2000 1p. 3. Information No 2001/55

19. The court of first instance ruled (and this ruling was confirmed by the Oberster Gerichtshof[14] in Austria, on 29 August 2000) that the concept of jurisdiction is an autonomous concept within the Lugano Convention. In order for a valid jurisdiction clause to exist, it is necessary for the wills of the parties to be in agreement on the principle and content of that clause, and that meeting of wills must be clearly and unequivocally manifest. It is for the courts to examine the question of whether such a meeting of wills exists, and they do so in accordance with the procedural rules of the Lugano Convention and not in accordance with national rules.

20. The Oberster Gerichtshof, finding that the jurisdiction clause relied on by the applicant was not included in the original contract and that it was impossible in point of fact to determine the moment when the said jurisdiction clause was added and thus to determine whether or not there was consent between the parties, made the applicant bear the consequences of this lack of proof by dismissing his action.

21. The other case concerns the procedural conditions of a jurisdiction clause contained in a pro forma, drawn up in advance by the bank and bearing only the bank's stamp.

22. In the case in question, the bank granted a loan to a German company which had its registered place of business in Germany but whose manager was a person domiciled in Switzerland. The wife of the manager of the company, who was acting as guarantor in respect of the said loan, received by post the guarantee form, drawn up in advance and bearing only the stamp of the bank. She signed it and returned it to the bank.

23. When the company became insolvent, the bank claimed payment of the guarantee before the courts specified in accordance with the jurisdiction clause. In order to avoid paying the guarantee, the guarantor claimed that the court seised of the matter did not have jurisdiction because the said clause was invalid. Under the terms of the jurisdiction clause and pursuant to Article 17 (2) of the Lugano Convention, the court of first instance declared that it had jurisdiction.

24, The Oberlandesgericht confirmed the first judgment and ruled that the jurisdiction clause was valid. It held that since the only thing that mattered was that an agreement between the parties determining jurisdiction should exist in writing, in whatever form, the fact that there was no signature by the responsible individual in the bank was regarded as irrelevant.

25. Reviewing the decision by the Oberlandesgericht, the Bundesgerichtshof[15] in Germany, ruled on 22 February 2001 that the disputed jurisdiction clause did not comply with the procedural conditions set by the Lugano Convention. It held that since Article 17 of the Lugano Convention and Article 17 of the Brussels Convention were identical, it was necessary to refer to previous judgments by the Court of Justice of the European Communities. That Court's strict interpretation requires that each party should give its consent in writing and that that consent must be shown clearly in the text, the author of which must be identifiable from that text.

Article 27(1)

26. In this case, the question before the Swiss Federal Court (BGE 126 III 534) was whether a judgment emanating from the English High Court of Justice, awarding the plaintiff in excess of £700,000.- on the basis of a gambling debt, could be refused recognition under Article 27 No. 1 of the Convention. The issue arose for two reasons. First, in March of 1920, the Swiss Constitution was amended to prohibit the operation of any casinos on Swiss territory. Second, Article 513 of the Swiss Code of Obligations provides that gambling debts will not be enforced in the Swiss courts. As a result, in two decisions dating from 1935, the Federal Court had found that the non-enforcement of gambling debts represented a strong public policy in Switzerland, such that even when Swiss conflicts law required the application of foreign law on the gambling contract, that law would not be applied to the extent it allowed for the enforcement of a gambling debt.

27. These decisions remained good law for quite some time. However, during the 1990s, the constitutional prohibition of casinos was abolished and the Code of Obligations amended so as to allow the enforcement of those gambling debts that have been incurred in one of the new federally licensed casinos. As a result, the Federal Court found that the non-enforcement of a gambling debt can no longer be considered a violation of Swiss public policy today. Thus, the judgment of the English High Court could not be refused recognition and enforcement under Article 27 1.

Articles 27(2)

28. Article 27(2) of the Lugano Convention and certain related issues have been the subject of two Austrian decisions.

29. In the first case, on 15 February 1999 the Austrian court of first instance (Bezirksgericht, Villach) dismissed an action seeking a court order enforcing a German executory judgment dating from 1996, on the grounds that the procedures for the serving of the document instituting proceedings required under the Austro-German Convention had not been complied with.

30. On 1 July 1999 the appeal court (Landesgericht, Klagenfurt) confirmed the first decision. Finding that it was not the bilateral convention but rather the Lugano Convention, which had just come into force between Germany and Austria, which was applicable to the case in question, the appeal court ruled that, in accordance with Article 46 the document instituting proceedings had been served, but that no evidence had been produced to prove that the document had been served in accordance with the provisions of Article 27 of the Convention. Because of this, and because of the fact that this problem had not yet been the subject of a judgment by the Oberster Gerichtshof, Austria, the court ruled that it was possible to bring an action.

31. On 12 July 2000 the Oberster Gerichtshof[16] decided that the payment order (Mahnbescheid) constituted a document instituting proceedings and the enforcement order

[16] Published in: Jus-Extra 2000 No 191, p. 51 (summary); Österreichisches Recht der Wirtschaft 2001, p. 154 (summary).

(Vollstreckungsbescheid) constituted a judgment in default of appearance within the meaning of Article 27 (2) of the Lugano Convention. In the absence of any document initiating proceedings which establishes the specific circumstances, under Article 48 (1) of the Convention it is sufficient if there is a certificate indicating that the document has been duly served and giving the date of service.

32. The second case concerns an action before the Austrian courts seeking the enforcement of a German court decision fixing the amount of debts.

33. The Austrian court of first instance (Bezirksgericht, Villach) dismissed this action on 24 January 2000. Taking the view that the Lugano Convention was applicable, it decided that serving the document initiating proceedings by posting it on the court notice board did not meet the conditions for being 'duly served'.

34. On 13 April 2000 the appeal court (Landesgericht, Klagenfurt) overturned the first decision and ruled that the action for review before the Oberster Gerichtshof was admissible on the grounds that, although evidence had been produced to prove that the document instituting proceedings had been served, a judgment given in default of appearance should in any case be regarded as equivalent to a writ of execution.

35. In its judgment of 20 September 2000, the Oberster Gerichtshof[17] in,Austria, ruled that the possibility of bringing a claim, in a State, against a judgment given in default of appearance, did not meet the requirement, set out in Article 27 (2) of the Brussels Convention, that the defendant must be given sufficient time to arrange for his defence before such a judgment is given. Although the posting of the document instituting proceedings on the court notice board may meet the 'duly served' criterion, it does not meet the 'in sufficient time' criterion, unless, owing to special circumstances, the debtor himself is responsible for the fact that the document was unable to reach him. Moreover, an action seeking the fixing of an advocate's fees after the adjournment of the proceedings in which the advocate has represented the debtor party constitutes a document instituting proceedings.

Articles 28 and 54

36. This case before the Swiss Federal Court (BGE 127 III 186) concerned the recognizeability of a judgment given by the English High Court of Justice, which had been rendered by default. Since the parties' contract had included an arbitration clause, the question arose whether recognition of the judgment could be refused for violating a valid arbitration clause. Siding with one opinion represented in the scholarly literature, the Federal Court found that this was not a ground for non-recognition under Article 28 of the Convention. However, the Court nevertheless found the English judgment to be unrecognizeable. The reason for this is no less interesting than the Court's dictum on the issue of recognition of a judgment violating an arbitration clause: in the Court's view, the application of Article 54b(3) requires that there be some way to ascertain the head of jurisdiction on which the rendering court based its authority to adjudicate. This, of course, was not possible since the English court's decision was a judgment by default. Interestingly, however, the judgment creditor, on appeal from the decision not to recognize the English judgment, had produced a certification by a Master of the Supreme Court of England and Wales, to the effect that the English court had based its jurisdiction on Article 17 of the Convention and that service had been properly made.

[17] Published in: Jus-Extra 2000 No 191, p. 51 (summary); Österreichisches Recht der Wirtschaft 2001, p. 154 (summary).

Nevertheless, the Swiss Federal Court was of opinion that this certification did not suffice for the purposes of recognition because it did not fulfill the requirements of a judgment under Article 25; the reason for this was that the defendant could not have participated in the proceedings leading up to the Master's certification.

Article 57 and Protocol No 3

37. A dispute before a German employment tribunal concerned a German association with its own legal personality which had negotiated collective agreements under Norwegian law with a construction company employing employees seconded from Norway to German shipyards.

38. The association asked the employer to apply certain provisions of the collective agreements to seconded employees in Germany.

39. In its judgment of 15 April 1998, the German employment tribunal (Arbeitsgericht Wiesbaden)[18] declared that it had jurisdiction. The tribunal found, first of all, that the Lugano Convention was applicable in Germany and Norway, and that the defendant was domiciled in a Contracting State. It decided that only the jurisdiction rules of the Lugano Convention were applicable, and not the national rules.

40. The tribunal also found that, under Article 57 and Protocol No 3 (1) on the application of Article 57, the Lugano Convention does not generally affect the legal acts of Member States, and in particular Council Directive 96/71/EC of 16 December 1996 on the secondment of employees.

41. Consequently, the jurisdiction rule referred to in Article 6 of that Directive takes precedence over the provisions of Article 6 of the Lugano Convention, by virtue of which the courts of the State to whose territory the employee is or was seconded have jurisdiction.

Article 1a of Protocol 1

42. In a case concerning an application for an order for the enforcement in Switzerland of a German final judgment of 1 August 1997, the Swiss Federal Court[19], on 19 October 2000, gave a ruling on the scope of the Swiss reservation contained in Article 1 a of Protocol 1 of the Lugano Convention. It decided that the reservation ceased to be effective on 31 December 1999 and therefore no longer prevented the recognition and enforcement of judgments given before that date.

43. It confirmed the judgment of the Swiss Obergericht of 18 August 2000 and interpreted Article 1 a as meaning that the grounds for refusing enforcement were valid for the whole of the period of validity of the Swiss reservation, but only for that period, with the consequence that since the expiry of the Swiss reservation any foreign judgment, even if given before 31 December 1999, can be enforced in Switzerland.

FIFTH REPORT ON NATIONAL CASE LAW ON THE LUGANO CONVENTION

By Jean-Pierre Bedin, Peter Arnt Nielson, Jens Røn and Regina Terry

I Introduction

At its meeting on 13 -14 September 1999 the Standing Committee of the Lugano Convention was presented with a report on national case law pertaining to the Convention, based on decisions communicated to the EC Court of Justice by signatory and acceding States in application of Protocol 2 to the Convention. That report which was written by the Greek, Swiss and Spanish delegations[1] covered the decisions contained in the first seven fascicles brought out by the Court of Justice (through its Library, Research and Documentation Centre).

A second report by the Austrian, Italian and Norwegian delegations[2] covered the decisions contained in the 8th fascicle. A third report by the Netherlands, German and Swedish delegations[3] covered the decisions contained in the 9th fascicle and a fourth report by the United Kingdom, Finnish and Luxembourg delegations covered the decisions contained in the 10th fascicle[4]. In September 2002 the Standing Committee decided that the fifth report, covering decisions in the 11th fascicle[5], should be drawn up by the Belgian, Danish and Irish delegations for the meeting of the Standing Committee in September 2003. The 11th fascicle[6] contains decisions pertaining to the Lugano and Brussels Conventions, handed down by the following courts:

As pointed out in previous reports, it should be noted that the EC Court of Justice (ECJ) is dependent on information on national case law provided by national authorities. Thus, the national decisions pertaining to the Lugano and Brussels Conventions that the Court has been able to disseminate do not necessarily constitute a complete compilation of such decisions by national courts. This should be borne in mind when reading this report.

As was the case with the reports drawn up in the last four years, this report will also concentrate on the decisions on the Lugano Convention (15 decisions).

II Overview of the case law

Article 1(1)

Le conseil municipal d'une commune de France[7] a décidé d'accorder la garantie de la commune à une société française X pour le remboursement d'un emprunt contracté par celle-ci auprès d'une autre société française Y.

A cette société Y, s'est substituée une société luxembourgeoise Z.

Le même conseil municipal a autorisé le maire de la commune à intervenir au nom de la commune pour souscrire à l'emprunt garanti et l'a chargé d'établir et de signer la convention fixant, dans les relations entre la commune et l'emprunteur, les conditions de mise en œuvre de la garantie et la mise en œuvre des sûretés offertes.

[7] Information No 2002/33

La convention signée par le maire prévoit que l'emprunt garanti est contracté directement auprès d'une société suisse. Par ailleurs, il s'avère que les conditions de l'emprunt pour lesquelles le maire a engagé la commune, ne sont pas conformes à la délibération du conseil municipal.

La juridiction suisse a décidé de surseoir à statuer jusqu'à ce qu'une décision portant sur la validité de l'engagement de la commune par le maire soit prise par une juridiction française, demandant en quelque sorte que soit posée une question préjudicielle aux juridictions françaises.

La société luxembourgeoise Z demande alors à un tribunal administratif français qu'il soit dit pour droit que le maire n'avait pas outrepassé les pouvoirs que le conseil municipal lui avait conférés.

Le tribunal administratif français a rejeté cette demande.

Le Conseil d'Etat français est, à son tour, saisi du litige et confirme la décision du tribunal administratif en considérant qu'en l'absence de dispositions contraires de la Convention de Lugano, la juridiction administrative française peut se prononcer sur la validité d'un acte de garantie souscrit en faveur d'une société de droit suisse au non d'une commune française.

Bien qu'il soit difficile, à la lecture de l'arrêt, d'appréhender la totalité des faits et du raisonnement tenu par la juridiction suisse, on peut supposer que la commune a invoqué la nullité de la convention pour refuser d'exécuter l'une ou l'autre de ses obligations et que le demander a saisi la juridiction suisse sur la base de l'article l'article 5.1. de la Convention de Lugano. La juridiction suisse a dû constater que pour trancher le litige qui lui était soumis, elle devait se prononcer sur la validité d'un acte posé par un élu local français. Cette question devait être tranchée en appliquant le droit administratif français. Or, la juridiction suisse a dû constater que les règles de droit international public ne lui permettaient pas de faire application d'un droit administratif étranger. Elle n'avait par conséquent, pas d'autre solution que celle de surseoir à statuer aussi longtemps que cette question n'aurait pas été tranchée par la juridiction française compétente. La juridiction française a rendu une décision en indiquant, à juste titre, que la l'appréciation de la validité de sa compétence ne devait en aucune manière être faite à la lumière des dispositions de la Convention de Lugano.

On peut d'ailleurs souligner que l'article 1er, alinéa 1er, de la Convention exclut de son champ d'application les matières administratives.

Articles 1 and 2

Le demandeur, qui est domicilié en France[8], réclame au défendeur, son frère, qui est domicilié en Suisse, sa quote-part dans les pénalités de retard infligées aux héritiers du fait du paiement tardif de droits de succession et que le demandeur a supporté seul.

La juridiction française initialement saisie s'est déclarée incompétente par application de La juridiction française initialement saisie s'est déclarée incompétente par application de l'article 2 de la Convention de Lugano qui dispose, en substance, que les personnes domiciliées sur le territoire d'un Etat contractant, sont attraites, quelle que soit leur nationalité devant les juridictions de cet Etat.

[8] Information No 2002/38

Le demandeur porte le litige devant la Cour d'appel et soutient que c'est à tort que la juridiction initialement saisie s'est déclarée incompétente parce qu'il n'y avait pas lieu à l'application de la Convention de Lugano dont le champ d'application exclut les matières fiscales et les successions.

La Cour d'appel considère que la demande formée est de nature purement civile parce que l'action du demandeur n'est ni de nature fiscale, ni de nature successorale en ce qu'il se borne à réclamer le paiement d'une somme qui lui est due.

Par conséquent, la Cour confirme la décision de la juridiction initialement saisie.

A cet égard, il y a lieu de rappeler que la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes a précisé que la notion de "matières civiles et commerciales" doit être appréciée d'une manière autonome et non par référence à un système national (arrêt Eurocontrol du 14 octobre 1976, aff. 29/76).

En l'occurrence, la décision de la Cour doit être approuvée puisque la demande n'avait pour autre objet que celui de récupérer une créance auprès d'un débiteur. L'origine de cette créance ne permet pas de considérer que le litige est d'ordre fiscal ou successoral au sens de la Convention de Lugano.

Articles 2 and 18

In a case heard before the English Court of Appeal, and decided upon in February 2001[9], a key issue for determination was whether the power to stay proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens was consistent with the Lugano Convention. The claimant's case was for a declaration of non-liability under a contract of reinsurance made with the first defendant, an insurance company domiciled in Switzerland. (The second defendant was a New York company to which the first defendant, as part of a restructuring move, had assigned all rights and liabilities under the relevant reinsurance contract.) It was common cause that the first defendant had submitted to the jurisdiction of the English courts albeit with a reservation which permitted it to argue the point regarding forum non conveniens. Both defendants had been successful at first instance in obtaining a stay of proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens in favour of proceedings which had already commenced in Texas. The original insured was a Texan company and the reinsurance contract had contained a service of suit clause whereby the underwriters had indicated a willingness to submit to a court of competent jurisdiction in the US.

In reaching its determination, the Court of Appeal considered itself to be bound by previous authority (concerning the Brussels Convention) to say that the staying of proceedings against the first defendant would not be inconsistent with the Lugano Convention. It had particular regard to the case of In Re Harrods (Buenos Aires)[10] which answered in the affirmative the question as to whether or not an English court could stay, strike out or dismiss proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens, where the defendant in the English proceedings was domiciled in England but the conflict of jurisdiction was between the jurisdiction of the English court and the jurisdiction of the courts of a state which was not a Contracting State, no other Contracting State being involved. That case had also endorsed an argument which, in essence, put forward the view that the Brussels Convention does not apply so as to regulate jurisdiction issues between the courts of a Contracting State and the courts of a non-Contracting State. The Court of Appeal did not accept that the present case could be distinguished from the Harrods case because the defendant was domiciled not in England but in another Contracting State. Having affirmed the basic principle regarding forum non conveniens, the Court, in application of those principles, proceeded to dismiss the appeal against the stay of proceedings. (A request for a preliminary ruling on a case involving similar legal issues is at present pending before the European Court of Justice C - 281/02).

Article 5(1)

Two cases concerning the interpretation of Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention have been before the Norwegian Supreme Court.

a) In the first decision of 28 November 2001 the Norwegian Supreme Court had to consider where the place of performance for a payment obligation was under a commercial agency contract entered into between a Norwegian firm and a Danish company concerning marketing and sales in Norway of tools[11]. The Norwegian agent instituted proceedings in Norway under Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention against the Danish company claiming payment for commission. The defendant argued that the Norwegian court lacked jurisdiction, since Article 5(1) would lead to forum shopping if applicable on all payment obligations under the contract. The defendant also argued that the place of performance of the payment claim for commission was in Denmark and that Norwegian domestic law was inapplicable to an international contract.

   The Norwegian Supreme Court held that the law applicable to the contract was Norwegian law and that the place of performance of payment obligations under Norwegian law is at the creditor's domicile. The Court added that the decisive obligation providing for jurisdiction under Article 5(1) is the obligation that forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim. Consequently, the Norwegian courts had jurisdiction under Article 5(1) to decide the agent's claim for commission.

   The Norwegian Supreme Court delivered its second judgment concerning Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention on 18 February 2002.[12] A Norwegian company instituted proceedings under Article 5 (1) in Norway against the bankruptcy estates of two Swedish companies. The plaintiff asked the court for a declaration of the non-existence of debts relied on by the defendants. The parties agreed that the place of performance of the obligation in question should be determined in accordance with Norwegian law. The Norwegian company argued that the place of performance of the alleged debts to be discharged was in Norway according to the Norwegian Statute on Financial Contracts (the debtor's domicile), whereas the defendants argued that that place was in Sweden under the Norwegian general rules on place of payment (the creditor's domicile).

   The Norwegian Supreme Court held after examination of the explanatory report of the Norwegian Statute on Financial Contracts and the Community Directive 97/5 on cross-border credit transfers that the statute provided for payment at the creditor's bank. The defendants' bank had its seat in Sweden. Thus, the Supreme Court concluded that the Norwegian courts lacked jurisdiction under Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention.

b) La Cour d'appel d'Innsbruck[13] a été saisie d'un litige relatif à une convention de time-sharing.

Le demandeur réclame au défendeur qui se trouve être une société dont le siège est en Allemagne, des dommages et intérêts pour défaut d'exécution de ses obligations concernant un bien situé en Autriche.

La compétence du tribunal initialement saisi a été fondée sur les articles 16.1, 13.3, 14 et 5.1. de la Convention de Lugano.

Pour rappel:

l'article 16.1.a. vise, notamment et en substance, les droits réels immobiliers et les baux d'immeubles qui fondent la compétence exclusive de la juridiction du lieu de l'Etat où le bien est situé.

l'article 13.3. vise, notamment et en substance, les contrats ayant pour objet la fourniture de services à des consommateurs. Par application de l'article 14, l'action intentée par le consommateur peut être intentée soit devant les tribunaux de l'Etat contractant sur le territoire duquel il est domicilii l'autre partie, soit devant les tribunaux de l'Etat contractant sur le territoire duquel est domicilié le consommateur.

l'article 5.1. dispose notamment que le défendeur domicilié sur le territoire d'un Etat contractant peut être attrait dans un autre Etat contractant, en matière contractuelle, devant le tribunal du lieu où l'obligation qui sert de base à la demande a été ou doit être exécutée.

Les arguments avancés de part et d'autre étaient les suivants:

le contrat de "time-sharing" ne confère aucun droit réel immobilier;

Le contrat de “time-sharing en cause n'est pas un contrat de louage d'immeuble parce que le bien immobilier appartient à un tiers et que la partie défenderesse s'est "bornée" à s'engager à le mettre à disposition du demandeur;

pour le motif que les services prévus au contrat doivent être fournis par un tiers et non par la partie défenderesse, on ne peut non plus parler de convention de fourniture de services entre les deux parties au litige;

il n'existe pas de relation contractuelle entre la demanderesse et la défenderesse de sorte que l'article 5.1. de la Convention ne peut trouver à s'appliquer.

La juridiction initialement saisie du litige a constaté qu'après avoir acquis le droit d'utilisation d'un bien immeuble, l'acquéreur a également acquis le droit de mettre à la disposition d'un tiers son droit d'utilisation en échange d'un autre droit d'utilisation. La même juridiction a également constaté que ce droit d'utilisation avait été cédé.

[13] Information No 2002/18

Par conséquent, conclut cette juridiction, la première caractéristique du contrat en question est le transfert d'un droit d'utilisation d'un immeuble contre rémunération. Il en découle, selon la juridiction, que l'article 16.1.a. de la Convention de Lugano est applicable en l'espèce.

La Cour d'appel saisie du litige commence par rappeler que par application de la Convention de Lugano, il appartient à la juridiction de vérifier d'office si elle compétente et, partant, qu'elle n'est pas liée par les arguments développés par les parties.

La Cour relève ensuite que le tribunal initialement saisi du litige a fait une analyse correcte du contrat et a pu en déduire que les éléments de celui-ci étaient visés par l'article 16.1.a. de la Convention de Lugano.

La Cour observe cependant que cette dernière constatation ne doit pas mener à la conclusion selon laquelle la compétence de la juridiction saisie peut se fonder sur l'article 16.1.a., précité.

En effet, il résulte des affirmations de la demanderesse que sa demande repose sur la non-exécution par la défenderesse, non pas de la convention de time-sharing proprement dite mais de la non-exécution d'un engagement aux termes duquel les droits de temps partagés (bail) des anciens clients seraient repris un tiers. La relation en cause n'est donc pas un louage de bien immeuble, mais un engagement aux termes duquel un tel droit serait attribué par un tiers.

Il n'est pas possible de faire rentrer une telle obligation dans le champ de l'article 16.1.a., mais il y a lieu de faire application de l'article 5.1. qui fonde la compétence internationale de la même juridiction. La notion de "matière contractuelle" doit être entendue dans un sens large et l'indemnisation réclamée par le demander entre dans le champ de cette disposition.

En ce qui concerne la détermination du lieu de l'exécution de l'obligation, il y a lieu de faire application du droit international privé autrichien. Selon ce droit, le lieu de l'exécution est déterminé par l'accord des parties et, à défaut d'accord, par la nature et l'objet de l'engagement. En l'occurrence, le lieu d'exécution est le lieu où le droit d'utilisation de l'immeuble devrait être exercé (Autriche) et le tribunal initialement saisi était donc bien compétent, bien qu'il ait fondé sa compétence d'une manière erronée.

En matière de convention de "time sharing", la question du for et du droit applicable lorsque des personnes acquièrent des droits d'utilisation à temps partiel sur un immeuble situé à l'étranger est complexe. Les avis divergent sur ce point quant à l'interprétation de la Convention de Lugano du 16 septembre 1988 concernant la compétence judiciaire et l'exécution des décisions en matière civile et commerciale. A cet égard, la qualification de ces droits d'utilisation est déterminante. L'une des thèses plaide en faveur de l'application de la protection générale des consommateurs lors de la conclusion d'un contrat. Ainsi, le consommateur peut poursuivre en justice l'autre partie au contrat non seulement à son domicile ou à son siège, mais aussi à son propre domicile. L'autre thèse déclare que les droits d'utilisation à temps partiel relèvent des droits réels immobiliers. Il en résulte que le juge compétent est celui de l'Etat contractant du lieu de situation de l'immeuble en cause. Dans le cas d'espèce rapporté, la juridiction a détaché l'obligation litigieuse du contrat pour conclure que ce qui était, en réalité, en cause dans le litige soumis était non pas l'exécution d'une convention de time-sharing dont il convenait de déterminer la qualification juridique ainsi que l'avait fait la juridiction initialement première saisie, mais bien une obligation contractuelle "banale" tombant, pour la détermination de la compétence internationale, dans le champ d'application de l'article 5.1.

On peut également observer, en ce qui concerne, la notion de relation contractuelle, que la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes a toujours affirmé le caractère autonome de la notion de "matière contractuelle" en lui attribuant un contenu "large" (Arrêt Peters, du 22 mars 1983, aff. 34/82).

Enfin, il peut être observé que la décision rapportée s'inscrit dans la ligne de la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes et, en particulier, de l'arrêt Lieber, du 9 juin 1994, Aff. C-294/92, dans lequel la Cour a dit pour droit qu'il est évident qu'une demande d'indemnisation pour la perte de jouissance d'un immeuble ne peut être invoquée qu'à l'égard du débiteur et qu'elle constitue dès lors un droit personnel.

Article 5(2) (also Article 54)
In a decision dated 5 January 2001, the Polish Supreme Court[14] dealt with a claim brought by a Polish citizen against an Italian citizen for the costs of maintenance during the three-month period close to the time of childbirth and for costs relating to pregnancy and childbirth. While the Court ruled that the jurisdiction rules of the Lugano Convention could not be applied in this case as the proceedings had been instituted in February 1998, the case is of interest for the fact that the Court confirmed that the jurisdiction rules applicable when pursuing ordinary maintenance claims were also capable of being applied to the types of claim at issue given that they were close to maintenance claims in nature. Thus, the claims in question fell within the scope of the relevant provisions of the Lugano Convention. The parallel claim being pursued for the re-imbursement of the relevant pregnancy/childbirth costs also fell within the scope of the Convention but, being a pecuniary claim, would not attract the preferential rules which apply in maintenance cases. (This particular case was referred back to a lower court for reconsideration, particularly in the light of the provisions of relevant international Conventions).

Article 5 (3)
In its decision of 17 October 2001 the Norwegian Supreme Court decided a case concerning certain aspects of Article 5(3) of the Lugano Convention.[15] The case concerned a Swedish broadcasting company that had broadcasted a documentary concerning the seal industry in Norway and the reporter who made the documentary. The programme was received by television viewers in Sweden and Norway. A number of Norwegian seal catchers instituted proceedings in Norway against the broadcasting company and the reporter claiming damages for defamation. The seal catchers relied on Article 5(3) of the Lugano Convention by arguing that the courts of the Contracting State where damage is sustained have jurisdiction and that the plaintiff may choose between instituting proceedings in that State and the State where the event giving rise to the damage occurred. The defendants argued that such an interpretation of Article 5(3) would lead to forum shopping and that Article 5(3) should not be applicable to broadcasting. The defendants finally argued that a Norwegian judgment holding the reporter liable would not be recognized and enforced in Sweden due to public policy (freedom of speech).

The Norwegian Supreme Court relying on ECJ Case 21/76 (Bier) and ECJ Case C-68/93 (Fiona Shevill) found that the Norwegian courts did have jurisdiction. The Court added that the question whether the Norwegian judgment would be against public policy in Sweden had no importance in relation to the question of jurisdiction.

Article 6.1
Le demandeur[16], domicilié en Allemagne, poursuit le défendeur n° 2, domicilié en Suisse en vue d'obtenir le remboursement d'un montant payé à celui-ci en sa qualité d'administrateur d'une société d'investissement.
Les motifs de la demande sont les suivants:

Le demandeur a participé à un fonds d'investissements exploité par une société allemande, dont le gérant est le défendeur n° 1, domicilié en Allemagne. Le défendeur n° 2 avait la qualité d'administrateur de cette société. Le demandeur a versé le montant d'une souscription sur un compte indiqué par la société allemande. Ultérieurement, le demandeur a retiré son dépôt mais n'a obtenu aucun paiement de la société qui, entre-temps, avait été radiée du registre du commerce. Il a donc attrait devant une juridiction allemande, le défendeur n° 1 (gérant de la société) et le défendeur n° 2 (administrateur de cette même société).

En première instance, le demandeur a obtenu gain de cause.

Le défendeur n° 2 a introduit un recours en révision fondé sur la contestation de la compétence de la juridiction allemande au regard de l'interprétation à donner à l'article 6.1. de la Convention de Lugano.

Pour rappel, cet article dispose, en substance que le défendeur domicilié sur le territoire d'un Etat contractant, peut, s'il y a plusieurs défendeurs, être attrait devant le tribunal du domicile de l'un d'entre eux.

La Cour fédérale allemande expose ainsi son raisonnement:

La question de la compétence internationale de la juridiction concernant une demande formulée contre le défendeur n° 2 domicilié en Suisse doit être appréciée au regard de l'article 6.1. de la Convention de Lugano.

[16]Information No 2002/28

La jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice relative à l'application de la Convention de Bruxelles, doit être prise en considération, par application du Protocole n° 2 sur l'interprétation uniforme de la Convention de Lugano.

Il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice que l'application de l'article 6.1., de la Convention de Bruxelles, requiert une connexité des différentes demandes d'un demandeur à l'égard de plusieurs défendeurs afin d'éviter des décisions judiciaires contradictoires.

En ce qui concerne les conditions requises pour qu'une telle connexité soit présente, la Cour de Justice a dit pour droit que la connexité requise n'existe pas lorsque deux conclusions déposées dans le cadre d'une même demande visant à obtenir des dommages et intérêts contre plusieurs défendeurs sont fondées, respectivement sur une base contractuelle pour l'une et sur une base délictuelle pour l'autre.

Or, dans le cas d'espèce, cette condition de la connexité n'est pas présente et, par conséquent, la compétence des juridictions allemandes ne peut être retenue.

A propos de la condition de connexité, on peut relever que l'arrêt Kalfelis de la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes du 27 septembre 1988 a mis en en exergue cette condition qui ne résulte pas directement des termes de l'article 6.1. mais se déduit de son esprit qui tend à éviter que le demander utilise cette disposition pour soustraire à son juge naturel le co-défendeur qui n'a pas son domicile dans l'Etat du for saisi.

Article 10

The decision of 8 February 2002 delivered by the Norwegian Supreme Court concerned a Cypriot ship that was lost in the North Sea and caused pollution of the Norwegian coast.[17] The ship was insured by an English company. The Norwegian State claimed compensation for expenses covering the clean-up and instituted proceedings in Norway against the shipping company which accepted the jurisdiction of the Norwegian courts, and the insurer under Article 10(2) and Article 9 of the Lugano Convention. Both Norwegian and English law provided for direct actions. However, the insurer contested the jurisdiction of the Norwegian courts arguing that English law did not provide for direct action against the insurer taking the circumstances of the facts into consideration.

The Norwegian Supreme Court found that the question whether direct actions are permitted shall be determined by the lex causae in accordance with the choice of law rules of the forum. The Norwegian choice of law rules led to application of Norwegian law.

Articles 13 (1), 14 and 52

The Norwegian Supreme Court took in its decision of 21 January 2002 a stand on a consumer contract.[18] A Norwegian credit card company instituted proceedings against a consumer in Norway under Article 14 of the Lugano Convention. The consumer contested the jurisdiction pointing out that he was no longer domiciled in Norway.

The Norwegian Supreme Court found that the question of whether the defendant was still domiciled in Norway should be determined by Norwegian law in accordance with Article 52 of the Lugano Convention. The Court added while referring to Article 13(1) of the Lugano Convention that a credit card contract in general is not covered by the scope of application of the rules on consumer contracts. Consequently, the issue of jurisdiction should be decided on the basis of Article 2.

Article 17, para 1

a) In a judgment given in July 2000[19], the English High Court of Justice had to determine the scope of a jurisdiction clause in a power of attorney where that power contained a Swiss choice of law clause and a jurisdiction clause in favour of the canton of Zurich. The claimant in question was the beneficiary of a Swiss bank account who had executed a power of attorney in respect of dealings with the bank in favour of his father who, in turn, had executed a substitute power of attorney in favour of the defendant. Alleging misappropriation of funds, he initiated proceedings in the United Kingdom against the defendant, who was domiciled there at the time, against a background where the primary claim was for breach of trust or breach of fiduciary duty. In applying to have the case struck out, the defendant argued that the English courts lacked jurisdiction and that, in accordance with Article 17 of the Lugano Convention, any case must be brought in Switzerland.
During the hearing, evidence was tendered to the effect that the concept of beneficial ownership does not exist under Swiss law which recognises only one type of title which is legal title. The argument was also made that the sole relationship between the claimant and the defendant, in relation to the bank account, was the contractual one of the donor and donee of a power of attorney onto which English concepts of fiduciary duty and trusts assets could not be engrafted. The matter being contractual in nature, the effect of the jurisdiction clause was that disputes arising out of or in connection with the power of attorney must be brought before the relevant Swiss court. On the basis of the evidence presented and the surrounding factual matters, the judge in the case concluded that the claimant's case concerning the jurisdiction of the English court was likely to fail and discharged an ex parte freezing order which had been granted previously.

In its decision of 29 November 2001 the Norwegian Supreme Court examined a jurisdiction clause in a contract between a Norwegian and an Austrian company.[20] According to the clause the plaintiff had the right to choose the competent court. The choice was not limited to the courts of the seat/domicile of the parties. Consequently, the plaintiff could even choose a court in a non-Contracting State. The Norwegian plaintiff instituted proceedings in Norway relying on the jurisdiction clause. However, the defendant contested the jurisdiction by arguing that the clause was invalid under Article 17(1) of the Lugano Convention since the clause did not explicitly provide for jurisdiction for courts in a Contracting State.

The Norwegian Supreme Court held the clause invalid, since the jurisdiction clause did not refer to the courts of a Contracting State. The Court pointed out that the clause gave jurisdiction to an unlimited number of courts whether situated in a Contracting State or a non-Contracting States and that it therefore was not sufficiently predictable to be upheld.

b) En août 1998, A et B, domiciliés dans la Principauté de Monaco[21], d'une part et C et D agissant pour compte d'une société de droit autrichien, X, établie en Autriche, ont signé une convention par laquelle X désigne A en qualité de mandataire intérimaire et B en qualité de "sous-mandataire", moyennant paiement d'honoraires.

[21] Information No 2002/24

La convention précise qu'elle est soumise au droit matériel suisse et que les juridictions de Zurich sont seules compétentes.

Les honoraires convenus ont cessé d'être payées par X, ce qui a conduit A à citer X devant le tribunal de Zurich en vue d'obtenir le paiement des sommes dues et des intérêts.

Le tribunal initialement saisi s'est déclaré incompétent, pour le motif que X n'est pas valablement représenté par C et D et, partant, que la clause d'élection de for, contenue dans la convention ne peut trouver à s'appliquer.

La juridiction d'appel a réformé le jugement pour le motif suivant : De l'avis de la juridiction d'appel, la défenderesse, X, était bien valablement représentée par C et D, agissant en qualité d'organe de X, de sorte que la clause d'élection de for était bien valable et partant, que les juridictions de Zurich étaient bien compétentes.

Le défendeur porte le litige devant le tribunal fédéral en vue d'obtenir l'annulation de la décision de la juridiction supérieure.

Le raisonnement du tribunal fédéral est ainsi développé:

Dans la décision attaquée de la juridiction supérieure, la compétence est fondée sur la clause d'élection de for de la convention intervenue entre les parties et l'article 17 de la Convention de Lugano.

Pour rappel, cet article dispose, en substance et notamment, que les clauses d'élection de for sont, en principe valables lorsqu'une au moins des parties a son domicile sur le territoire d'un Etat partie à la Convention de Lugano et que la convention d'élection de for est conclue par écrit.

Le défendeur reproche à la juridiction d'appel d'avoir méconnu que, par application du droit autrichien, la décision d'une société concernant la désignation d'un gérant est soumise à une obligation d'inscription qui, en l'occurrence, est défaillante. En d'autres termes, la juridiction d'appel aurait fait une mauvaise application du droit autrichien.

Le tribunal fédéral constate que l'article 17 de la Convention de Lugano ne règle pas la capacité de contracter des parties, ni la question de la validité de la représentation de celles-ci.

Puisque la Convention de Lugano ne règle pas cette question, il y a lieu de faire application du droit national. Par application du droit international privé suisse, les sociétés sont régies par le droit de l'Etat dans lequel elles sont organisées. En l'occurrence, c'est le droit autrichien qu'il y a lieu d'appliquer.

Selon le droit autrichien tel qu'il a été considéré par la juridiction de première instance et qui ne peut plus être reconsidéré par le tribunal fédéral, la désignation d'un gérant d'une société GMBH est faite par la décision des associés. Lorsque, comme en l'espèce, il y a un associé unique, sa volonté coïncide avec la volonté des organes habilités à représenter la société.

Le grief du défendeur qui l'amène à contester les constatations de la juridiction d'appel n'est pas recevable.

La décision attaquée est, par conséquent, confirmée.

Toute la philosophie de l'article 17, dont il a été fait une exacte application en l'espèce, est résumée en une phrase qu'on trouve dans l'arrêt Benicasa de la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes, du 3 juillet 1997, aff. C-269/95, selon laquelle l'article 17 a pour objectif de désigner d'une manière claire et précise une juridiction d'un Etat contractant qui soit exclusivement compétente conformément à l'accord de volonté des parties, exprimé selon les conditions de forme strictes y énoncées.

Reste que comme il est dit dans la décision, la Convention de Lugano ne règle pas la détermination de la loi applicable à l'appréciation de la clause d'élection de for au fond. Dans le silence du texte, l'opinion développée par l'avocat général Slynn dans l'affaire Elefanten Schuh,du 29 juin 1981, aff. 150/80, en faveur de la loi du tribunal désigné paraît satisfaisante.

Article 24

In a decision dated 6 April 2001, the Polish Supreme Court[22] considered an application to appoint a court to which a German company could submit an application for a preliminary ruling in order to secure claims lodged against a number of other companies in relation to a disputed share transaction. Some of these companies were based in Germany, others were based in Poland and the substantive action was being tried before a court in Cologne. The Polish Supreme Court confirmed that Article 24 was applicable and that the Polish Courts had jurisdiction to entertain an application to implement provisional measures, including preliminary measures, even where the main action was taking place elsewhere. However, the Court declined to appoint a court to which the application might be submitted. Jurisdiction in this instance was to be determined by reference to the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and, as interpreted by the Court, those provisions pointed to the fact that the competent court (both from a geographical and substantive point of view) was the court in whose jurisdiction the adjudication of an action in the first instance would fall if such action were to be instigated before a Polish court. The combined effect of both the Code and the Lugano Convention was such as to enable the appropriate court to be identified and further intervention by the Supreme Court would, therefore, not be warranted.

As in the previous reports, it should be stressed that as regards national case law, the European Court of Justice is dependent on information provided by national authorities. Therefore, national decisions pertaining to the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention that the Court has been able to disseminate do not necessarily constitute a complete compilation of such decisions passed by national courts. This should be borne in mind when reading this report.

II Overview of the case law

Article 5(1) of the Convention

In the decision dated 11 April 2002, the Norwegian Supreme Court (Høyesterett, case no 2003/42) expressed its opinion on the question of interpretation of Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention, in matters relating to individual contracts of employment.
The facts of the case were as follows:
On 2 December 1997, Martin Openshaw, a British national residing in Scotland, was employed as a drilling master in a Swiss company Saipem AG, which later changed its name to Saipem Services AG, for work on board floating drilling platforms operated by the Italian company Saipem SpA. Saipem Services AG is a subsidiary wholly owned by Saipem SpA. The companies maintain a common branch office in Stavanger, Norway.

Openshaw was engaged as a drilling master on board drilling platform "Scarabeo 6" which was operated on the British continental shelf until the beginning of 1998. According to the employment contract, Openshaw's wages and employment terms were those applicable to the company's employees on the British continental shelf. At the beginning of 1998 the drilling platform was moved to the Norwegian continental shelf and a new contract was concluded on wages and employment terms, conforming to the terms customary for similar work on the Norwegian continental shelf. The contract contained a provision on obligatory transfer, and on 16 March 2001 Openshaw was notified that he was to be transferred to work outside Norway, and would cease to receive wages according to the Norwegian employment contract on 21 March 2001. A contract, which was submitted to him, concerning the work on the Nigerian continental shelf, contained different provisions on wages and employment terms.

Openshaw refused to accept the terms of that contract. He only accepted the transfer for work outside Norway on the condition that he would retain his wages and employment terms. Openshaw was subsequently laid off.

Openshaw began an action in the Stavanger City Court against the Norwegian division of Saipem Services AG. In his action, the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to continue his employment, as well as to compensation for undue and unlawful termination of his employment.

Saipem Services AG requested the dismissal of the case on the grounds that the court did not have jurisdiction.

On 3 August 2001 the Stavanger City Court dismissed the action.

Openshaw appealed against the decision of the Stavanger City Court to the Gulating Court of Appeals, which on 14 January 2002 held that the Stavanger City Court had jurisdiction.

Saipem Services AG appealed the decision of the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court. The company claimed the following:

The employment contracts concluded between the company and Openshaw were so-called international contracts, containing provisions on the employee's obligatory transfer. The contracts also contained provisions specifying that Swiss law was to be applied as regards any dispute, and that the court in Zurich was to have jurisdiction. However, the dispute in question concerns the employee's obligatory transfer, not the internal matters regarding employment terms on the Norwegian continental shelf. The case should consequently be dismissed from the courts of Norway. Openshaw was engaged for employment in Britain and commenced his work on the British continental shelf. When a duty of transfer is imposed, it cannot be maintained that he performs his work in a particular country, cf. Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention. It is therefore possible that he could take legal action against Saipem Services AG in Britain, cf. the final sentence of Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention, but not in Norway, since the Norwegian courts do not have jurisdiction.

Openshaw claimed the following:

Openshaw was employed by Saipem Services AG for work on board the drilling platform Scarabeo 6, which was, and still is, operated for Norsk Hydro on the Norwegian continental shelf. He is willing to work in Nigeria, but only on the same terms as on the Norwegian continental shelf. Transfer involving significantly inferior terms is regarded equal to termination of employment.

There can hardly be any doubt that according to Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention, the courts in Norway have jurisdiction. It follows from paragraph 1.4 of the employment contract that the place of work is the drilling platform Scarabeo on the Norwegian continental shelf, and the work was actually performed there until the dispute arose. There are no provisions in the employment contract to the effect that Openshaw is to perform his work in different places.

The Supreme Court noted that in that case a British national residing in Scotland has brought legal action against a company with head office in Switzerland, the issue of jurisdiction is to be considered pursuant to the provisions of the Lugano Convention.

The Supreme Court agreed with the conclusion of the Gulating Court of Appeals that the provisions of the employment contract concerning the choice of court are not applicable, because the contract was concluded before the dispute arose (Art. 17 (5) of the Lugano Convention).

The Supreme Court assessed further whether the Court of Appeals based its decision on a correct interpretation of Article 5 (1) of the Lugano Convention.

The basic principle of that provision is that in cases involving a contractual relationship, a person domiciled in a Contracting State may be sued in the courts for the place of performance of the obligation in question. It also provides that "in matters relating to individual contracts of employment, this place is that where the employee habitually carries out his work, or if the employee does not habitually carry out his work in any one country, this place shall be the place of business through which he was engaged."

The Court of Appeals has concluded that the place of performance was in Norway, as the employee worked habitually on the Norwegian continental shelf. The duty of movement, provided for in the employment contract, made the employer entitled, subject to conditions provided for in further detail, to transfer the employee to another work location, including a country where the Convention does not apply. During the period of employment, effectuation of the duty of movement will therefore have the effect that the employee performs his work in different countries. It does not, however, prevent an employee from referring his claim to the court having the competence pursuant to the place where the work was performed in cases of individual employment contracts. The Court of Appeals held that the place where the employee "habitually carries out his work" is the Norwegian continental shelf, and that the Stavanger City Court is his proper venue for litigation against the employer.

The Court of Appeals furthermore pointed to the provision 1.4 of the contract, which reads as follows: "The designated work location is aboard the vessel "Scarabeo 6" in the Norwegian Continental Shelf. Depending on operation requirements, the Company reserves the rights to transfer the employee to another work location during the employment period". The work location is thus defined as the drilling platform "Scarabeo 6" on the Norwegian continental shelf. The employment contract does not specify any time limitations, and it is not limited to any particular project. If the employer does not exercise his option of transfer, Openshaw would have his fixed work location on board "Scarabeo 6" on the Norwegian continental shelf. It was also to be noted that in this particular case the employee actually worked on the Norwegian continental shelf for a relatively long period, under terms adapted to Norwegian conditions and Norwegian legislation.

The Supreme Court agreed with this interpretation of Article 5 (1) of the Convention. It noted, in particular, that the above-presented interpretation seems to be well in accordance with the judgment of the European Court of Justice of 27.02.2002 (case C-37/00 Herbert Weber/Universal Ogden Services Ltd., ECR 2002, I-2013) relating to the corresponding provision of Article 5 (1) of the Brussels Convention.

In the judgment referred to by the Norwegian Supreme Court, the European Court of Justice made a thorough interpretation of Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention and set out detailed criteria for the establishment of the place of the habitual performance of work, within the meaning of Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention. That position of the European Court of Justice in fact makes a summary of the previous ECJ's rulings concerning the interpretation of the notion of the place of performance of work as grounds for the establishment of jurisdiction of courts to hear employment disputes. In the ruling the ECJ maintained its position that the place of performance of the obligation upon which the claim is based, as referred to in Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention, must be determined not by reference to the applicable national law, but by reference to uniform criteria. Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention must be interpreted as meaning that where an employee performs the obligations arising under his contract of employment in several Contracting States the place where he habitually works, within the meaning of that provision, is the place where, or from which, taking account of all the circumstances of the case, he in fact performs the essential part of his duties vis-a-vis his employer. In the case of a contract of employment under which an employee performs for his employer the same activities in more than one Contracting State, it is necessary, in principle, to take account of the whole of the duration of the employment relationship in order to identify the place where the employee habitually works, within the meaning of Article 5(1). Failing other criteria, that will be the place where the employee has worked the longest. It will only be otherwise if, in light of the facts of the case, the subject-matter of the dispute is more closely connected with a different place of work, which would, in that case, be the relevant place for the purposes of applying Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Article 6(1) of the Convention

The case where the jurisdiction was considered on the basis of Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention was heard before a German courts and it was finally decided before the Highest Court of Germany (Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf - judgment dated 25 January 2001, no 2003/23 overruled by Bundesgerichtshof - judgment dated 23 October 2001[2]).

The following facts were established in connection with that case:
Mr Düllberg, the plaintiff, pursued forward stock exchange transactions and on that account he participated in a German fund up to the amount of DM 26250. Forward transactions as such were realised by a German limited liability company, which was administered by defendant 1 in the case, domiciled in Düsseldorf. Defendant 2 was a trustee of a German company domiciled in Zurich, which managed the realisation of forward transactions. The plaintiff transferred the amount of DM 26250 to the trustee's account indicated in the subscription agreement.

By way of legal action, the plaintiff claimed the repayment of his deposit with interest. He argued that he was not capable of carrying out forward stock exchange transactions, and moreover that no such transactions were carried out. He also claimed that no information or clarifications concerning the risk of carrying out forward transactions were provided in the subscription prospectus to persons making deposits. Defendant 2 was also familiar with these issues. The plaintiff assumed that both defendants were jointly and severally liable, both in terms of contractual liability and liability in tort. Moreover, he claimed that they were obliged to repay the appropriated amount resulting from unjustified enrichment.

The National Court in Düsseldorf (Landgericht) admitted the action. In the part of the reasons, which referred to its jurisdiction, the court pointed to Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention as the basis of its jurisdiction. At the same time, it confirmed that the actions are closely connected within the meaning of Article 22(3) of the Lugano Convention. As far as the "basis" for the claim is concerned, the court stated that the duty of payment by the defendant 1 was based on liability in tort (§ 826 Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch). As to defendant 2, the court held that he was obliged to reimburse the sum paid by the plaintiff on the grounds of unjustified enrichment according to § 812 I 1 of the German Civil Code (Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch).

The Defendant 2 lodged an appeal against the judgment. He once again questioned the jurisdiction of the Düsseldorf court. He made a reference to the judgments of the European Court of Justice and argued that in the case at issue there was no close connection of actions, which would justify that jurisdiction.

The Higher National Court in Düsseldorf (Oberlandesgericht), which examined the appeal, confirmed the jurisdiction of the lower instance court. The appellate court based its considerations on Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention, which stipulates that a person domiciled in a Contracting State may also be sued, where he is one of a number of defendants, in the courts for the place where any one of them is domiciled. It concluded that the grounds necessary to establish the jurisdiction of the National Court in Düsseldorf, resulting from Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention, had been complied with. One of the defendants was domiciled within the jurisdiction of the court in Düsseldorf and there was also the necessary close connection between the actions addressing the two defendants within the meaning of Article 22, regardless of the fact that the plaintiff employed different claims as the basis of his actions. The Higher National Court in Düsseldorf expressed the opinion that in order to assume the existence of that connection it is sufficient if homogenous facts are the subject of a legal examination. There is always a risk involved that in the case of different jurisdictions, in spite of homogenous facts, irreconcilable judgments are passed. These judgments do not always have to concern the same issues drawn from the facts of the case, pursuant to the national (in that case, German) understanding of the established facts of the case. Even the mere possibility of having different answers to questions concerning preliminary issues (e.g. those referring to the validity of statements of will deposed according to the applicable law or to the effects of particular ways of behaving) justifies the jurisdiction pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention.

The Higher National Court in Düsseldorf also confirmed the considerations of the court of the first instance in respect of the unjustified enrichment. The appellate court in Düsseldorf held that the conditions of § 812 I 1 of the German Civil Code (Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch) were in the present case fulfilled and that the defendant 2 was obliged to reimburse the sum paid by the plaintiff.

The Higher National Court in Düsseldorf, towards the end of its considerations, admitted the possibility of lodging an extraordinary appeal against the judgment passed in that case, however only in a limited scope. He stated that on account of the paramount importance of the issue connected with the scope of application of Article 6(1) of the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention in the case of different grounds for the liability the possibility of carrying out an extraordinary appeal could be admitted.

The extraordinary appeal was lodged. The Highest Court of Germany (Bundesgerichtshof) in its decision dated 23 October 2001 did not agree with the position of courts of the first and the second instance.

By reference to the text of Article 1 of Protocol 2 on the uniform interpretation of the Lugano Convention Bundesgerichtshof emphasised that in this case the case law of the European Court of Justice, as shaped under the Brussels Convention, should be taken into account. It stated that the appellate court did not sufficiently take into account the case law of the European Court of Justice.

Bundesgerichtshof, which heard the extraordinary appeal, agreed with the view that jurisdiction of German courts in the case against the defendant 2), domiciled in Switzerland, should be assessed pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Lugano Convention, which is in force between Germany and Switzerland.

For article 6(1) to apply, there has to be a connection between different actions, which allows a court to make a single judgment in order to avoid the risk of irreconcilable judgments resulting from separate proceedings.

Basically, the Convention grants jurisdiction to courts of the State where the defendant is domiciled, and special jurisdiction provided for in Article 6 (1) is an exception that should be interpreted in a way which does not challenge the principle from Article 2. The plaintiff must not lodge an action against several defendants only for the purpose of avoiding jurisdiction of courts of the state where one of the defendants is domiciled. These principles arise from the case law of the European Court of Justice with regard to the Brussels Convention (judgment of 27 September 1988 in the case Kalfelis/Schröder, no 189/87, ECR 1988, 5565 and judgment of 27 October 1998 in the case Reunion europeenne, nr C-51/97 ERC 1998 I, 6511, 6548) and are also applicable to Article 6 (1) of the Lugano Convention, which has exactly the same wording as Article 6 (1) of the Brussels Convention.

The European Court of Justice – and that fact was overlooked by the appellate court – expressed the opinion that there was no sufficient connection for the application of Article 6 (1) of the Brussels Convention if under one action for compensation against two defendants, one of the claims is based on contractual liability, while the other one on liability in tort.

That legal view should be taken into account while interpreting Article 6 (1) of the Lugano Convention. That view is even more important for the examined case where one action lodged against different defendants comprises the claim based on liability in tort and the claim based on unjustified enrichment. The diversity of legal bases for the claim is here even more important than in the case of contractual and tort-related claims for compensation.

Thus, contrary to the opinion of appellate court, Bundesgerichtshof assumed that in the case in question, the existence of a close connection between actions against two defendants cannot be assumed, and consequently, German courts did not have jurisdiction to examine the claim against the defendant ad 2).

Article 16(5) of the Convention

The interpretation of Article 16(5) of the Lugano Convention was considered by the House of Lords in its decision of 12 June 2003, in the case of Kuwait Oil Tanker Company S.A.K. v. Qabazard (House of Lords, case 2002/36). In that judgment, the House of Lords stated that an English court has no jurisdiction to decide on the making of an order of garnishing a debt due to the judgment debtor if that order would lead to the enforcement of the judgment not in the territory of The United Kingdom, but in the territory of another state.

That conclusion was formulated pursuant to the following facts of the case:

The English court allowed the claims of the creditor (Kuwait Oil Tanker Company S.A.K.), who demanded the payment of the amount of USD 130 mln from the debtor (Mr Qabazard), and ordered the payment of that amount by the debtor. The appeal against that judgment lodged by the debtor was dismissed. The execution against the debtor's property located in the territory of Great Britain made it possible for the creditor to regain some small part of the amount indicated in the judgment. The creditor found out that the debtor held an account in a branch of a Swiss bank and thus he applied to the English court to deliver an order to garnish the debt resulting from the fact of the debtor's holding an account in that Swiss bank. The application was dismissed on the grounds that money garnishment effected on the debtor's account held in a branch of the Swiss bank operating in Switzerland would actually make an enforcement of the judgment in Switzerland, and thus it is the Swiss courts that should take that decision.

In order to justify this position, the House of Lords referred to the report by Mr Jenard who, in respect of Article 16(5) of the Brussels Convention (which is in the same terms in the Lugano Convention), stated that "Article 16(5) provides that the courts of the State in which a judgment has been or is to be enforced have exclusive jurisdiction in proceedings concerned with the enforcement of that judgment. [...] The expression 'proceedings concerned with the enforcement of judgments' [...] means those proceedings which can arise from 'recourse to force, constraint or distraint on movable or immovable property in order to ensure the effective implementation of judgments and authentic instruments. Problems arising out of such proceedings come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts for the place of enforcement. [...]."

The question of application of Article 16(5) of the Brussels Convention, which is worded identically to Article 16(5) of the Lugano Convention, was subjected to the interpretation of the European Court of Justice in case 220/84, AS/Autoteile Service GmbH v. Malhé (case 220/84 ECR 1985, 2267) and in case Reichert/Dresdner Bank (case 261/90 ECR 1992, I –2149). Those ECJ's decisions were referred to by the House of Lords in their judgment.

In order to justify the position that only a court in a state where a judgment is to be enforced is competent to apply the measures aimed at the enforcement of a judgment, the House of Lords referred to the ECJ's judgment dated 21.05.1980, passed in the case Denilauler/Snc Couchet Fréres (case 125/79, ECR 1980, 1553). Though that judgment was not directed to the interpretation of Article 16(5) of the Convention, the observations it contained, according to the House of Lords, would apply with added force to execution. In that judgment, the European Court of Justice stated that "the courts of the place or, in any event, of the Contracting State, where the assets subject to the measures sought are located, are those best able to assess the circumstances which may lead to the grant or refusal of the measures sought or to the laying down of procedures and conditions which the plaintiff must observe in order to guarantee the provisional and protective character of the measures ordered."

The judgment by the House of Lords does not change the hitherto prevailing direction in the interpretation of Article 16(5) of the Convention. The similar attitude was expressed in the ECJ's judgment dated 26 March 1992, in case Reichert/Dresdner Bank (case 261/90 ECR 1992, I –2149). In that judgment the European Court of Justice stated that Article 16(5) grants an exclusive jurisdiction to judicial authorities of the state in which the judgment has been or is to be enforced, for the purpose of carrying out proceedings under which the recourse to force, constraint or distraint on movable or immovable property, in order to ensure the effective implementation of a judgment may take place.

Article 17 of the Convention

In the case heard before Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof (judgment of 29 January 2002, no 2003/16) the question at dispute was the effectiveness of the agreement which granted jurisdiction to the Austrian court. The agreement was concluded between a company seated in Austria and a natural person domiciled in Uzbekistan. The consequence of the assumed absence of effectiveness of the jurisdiction agreement was the absence of jurisdiction of Austrian courts to examine the dispute.

The Austrian Supreme Court considered the effectiveness of the jurisdiction agreement, i.e. whether there were sufficient conditions for the application to of Article 17 of the Convention where at least one party was domiciled in a Contracting State and a suitable form was applied, or whether it was necessary to satisfy other grounds, which do not result directly from a literal wording of Article 17.
In order to deliver a decision, the Austrian court analysed the existing national decisions of Austrian courts, as well as the German and the Italian case law.

According to the opinion of the Supreme Court of Austria, in order to establish the jurisdiction of a court under Article 17 of the Lugano Convention it is not sufficient that the party domiciled (seated) in one of the Contracting States agrees with the party domiciled in a non-Contracting State to the Lugano Convention that the court competent to hear disputes will be the court for the place where the first party is domiciled. Moreover, Article 17 of the Lugano Convention can only be applied to such situations, if either the domicile of one of the parties, or the agreed territorial jurisdiction of the court, from the point of view of an Austrian judge, is in the territory of another Contracting State. It means that the parties to the prorogation agreement cannot establish the territorial jurisdiction of the court in the Contracting State where they are domiciled or seated.

The Austrian Supreme Court admitted that although such a position makes a very limited interpretation of Article 17 of the Convention, it corresponds to the opinions of the German Supreme Court and the Italian Supreme Court (Corte di Cassazione).

Therefore, in the light of the opinion expressed by the Austrian Supreme Court, Article 17 of the Lugano Convention should only be applied if, from the point of view of an Austrian judge, either the domicile (seat) of one of the parties, or the agreed territorial jurisdiction of the court are not in Austria but in the territory of another Contracting State.

The interpretation of Article 17 of the Convention was also considered by the Swiss Supreme Court in its judgment dated 7 August 2001 (Bundesgericht judgment of 7.08.2000, no 2003/21).

The Swiss Supreme Court based its considerations upon the following facts of the case:

The plaintiff (and defendant in the appeal proceedings) was a Swiss railway joint-stock company „TransRail". The defendant (and plaintiff lodging the appeal) in that case was a German limited liability company dealing with forwarding and navigation.

The plaintiff is a forwarding agent of the former Soviet Union's railway. In 1998 it concluded a co-operation agreement with the defendant, which contained, inter alia, the provision saying that:" Disputes arising out of this agreement have to be amicably settled. Otherwise the arbitration rules applied in the defendant's country have to be observed by both parties".

In 1999 the parties concluded an agreement concerning the further development of their co-operation, where some of the provisions of the 1998 co-operation agreement were changed. It introduced, inter alia, the provision worded as follows: "Commercial contacts between the two companies shall be subject to the Swiss law. The court which shall have territorial jurisdiction in respect of both parties is the Swiss Court in St. Gallen CH-9000."

Since the German navigation company failed to comply with the obligation, the plaintiff began an action in the Circuit Court in St. Gallen, in which it demanded the payment. The Circuit Court in St. Gallen referred the case to the Commercial Court of the St. Gallen Canton, which limited the hearing of that case to the question of jurisdiction only. The Commercial Court dismissed the plea of the absence of its jurisdiction, raised by the defendant in first instance-the German company, and accepted the action in order to hear it. The proceedings resulted in delivering the decision that was unfavourable to the defendant, who appealed against it by raising, inter alia, that the Commercial Court in St. Gallen was not competent to hear that case.

The Supreme Court of Switzerland, which examined the appeal, stated that the jurisdiction of the Commercial Court of St. Gallen was based on the agreement concluded in 1999 between the plaintiff and the defendant (which amended the 1998 co-operation agreement). According to that agreement the court competent in respect of both parties of that agreement was a court seated in St. Gallen – i.e. only judicial courts seated in the Canton of St. Gallen. The defendant, however, claims that such a statement is contrary to the law, which is in force in Switzerland, and that the court competent to hear that case is an arbitration court (which would result from the original co-operation agreement of 1998). According to the Supreme Court, if the parties of the proceedings are domiciled in different Contracting States to the Lugano Convention and they identify the courts of one of the Contracting States as competent to hear disputes, which might result from a particular legal relationship, then the agreements concluded between the parties with regard to the jurisdiction of the court should, as a principle, be examined pursuant to Article 17 of the Lugano Convention.

Prior to the examination of the jurisdiction of a particular court, however, it should be decided according to which law this jurisdiction should be interpreted.

However, although in the Swiss academic writing it has been pointed out that the Lugano Convention regulates not only the form but also the contractual element of an agreement of the parties concerning international and territorial jurisdiction, and as such it prevails over the application of the national law, the Swiss lower instance court, by way of the application of lex fori, pointed to the Swiss law as the law relevant for the purpose of examining that issue.

However, what was most important for the court, was not the question of form, nor the very agreement concluded between the parties, but the dispute over the interpretation of parties' agreements.

In 1999 the parties chose the Swiss law as the law relevant for the purpose of carrying out a substantial examination of disputes. Therefore, according to the Supreme Court, the interpretation of the provisions concerning jurisdiction, contained in the agreement, carried out pursuant to autonomous principles should be rejected; Article 17 of the Lugano Convention does not contain interpretation principles. Thus, the disputed agreement concerning the jurisdiction of a court should be interpreted pursuant to the lex causae principle, that is, according to the Swiss law.

The Supreme Court focused on the examination of a concerted will of the parties of the agreement, which should be assessed pursuant to the wording and the purpose of the agreement, taking all the attendant circumstances into account. Pursuant to the decisions of the Swiss Supreme Court, in case of an objective interpretation of contradicting contractual rules for jurisdiction relating to the same legal relationships, the starting point should be, as a principle, the assumption that later agreements (in that case the 1999 agreement) take precedence over, or even abate, the former ones. According to the Court, this solution is applied only if the circumstances of the case do not suggest that it should be assessed according to differing presumed wills expressed by the parties, which also was subject to the Court's assessment in the present case.

In conclusion, the Supreme Court decided that there were no circumstances, if the objective interpretation was applied, that would allow establishing that the agreement concerning jurisdiction, which the parties concluded in 1999, is not absolute. It should be assumed that the conclusion of that agreement gives the possibility of withdrawing from the former arbitration clause. After the parties agreed upon the territorial jurisdiction of the St. Gallen court – while the agreement they concluded does not mention the jurisdiction of the arbitration court as well – it should be assumed that judicial courts seated in St. Gallen will be competent to hear disputes.

Protocol 1 Article I paragraph 2 in connection with Article 17 of the Convention

In a judgment dated 25 April 2002, "la Cour d'Appel" of Luxembourg (Cour d'appel no 2003/40) applied paragraph 2 of article I of Protocol n. 1 of the Lugano Convention. To our knowledge, this is the first time that a decision applying this provision has been reported under protocol n. 2 of the Lugano Convention.

In this case the plaintiff (M), whose registered office was in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, brought proceedings in Luxembourg against a company (E), whose registered office was in Austria. Later, the plaintiff asked for the intervention in the proceedings of another firm (Z) with registered office in Belgium. The court of first instance declared itself competent but considered both requests non admissible; the first on the basis of its obscurity and the second for lack of object.

M was suing E for damages related to a defective performance of a contract of sale of goods because this company (E) had allegedly delivered old material that was not functioning.

In the appeal proceedings, E pleaded the existence of a choice of court agreement in favour of an Austrian court, and, consequently, the lack of jurisdiction of the court that had decided the case. The alleged choice of court agreement was, in fact, a statement in the invoices that E sent to M and to which M did not oppose.

The court decided that paragraph 2 of article I of Protocol n.1 of the Lugano Convention was applicable and interpreted it as "requiring a provision dealing exclusively with conferral of jurisdiction and specifically signed by the party residing in Luxembourg". The court concluded that those requirements were not fulfilled in the case sub judice and considered that the court had jurisdiction under paragraph 1 of article 5 of the Lugano Convention because the parties had agreed that the merchandise was to be delivered in Luxembourg.

In this case, the Lugano Convention had to be applied instead of the Brussels Convention because proceedings were initiated in June 1998, when the Convention on the Accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden to the Brussels Convention was not yet in force.

The decision makes no reference to previous case law; however, the Court of Justice in the case Porta-LeasingGmbh/Prestige International, SA (Case 784/79, ECR 1980, 1517) had already interpreted the similar provision of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention. In paragraph 9 of that case the ECJ decided that "a clause conferring jurisdiction within the meaning of that provision may not be considered to have been expressly and specifically agreed to by a person domiciled in Luxembourg unless that clause, besides being in writing as required by article 17 of the Convention, is mentioned in a provision specially and exclusively meant for this purpose and specifically signed by the party domiciled in Luxembourg; in this respect the signing of the contract as a whole does not in itself suffice".

The two interpretations are in line and coincide with the comments in Jenard's report[3]. Apparently, this provision was inspired by the Benelux Treaty and derives from the fact that a large number of contracts entered into by residents in Luxembourg are, in fact, international.

Although the Appeal Court's (la Cour d'Appel) decision mentions "commercial relations between the parties during a reasonably long period of time and relating to repetitive purchase orders"[4], the possibility of the existence of a usage between the parties or an international trade usage, under b) or c) of paragraph 1, Article 17.º (1) of the Lugano Convention, was not analysed. It would have been interesting to analyse the relation between paragraph 2 of article I of the Protocol n.1 to the Lugano Convention and the existence of a usage in compliance with article 17. When the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention was negotiated the Convention only made reference to agreements in writing or evidenced in writing. The international trade usage was introduced with the Convention on the Accession of the Kingdom of Denmark, of Ireland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the usage between the parties in the Lugano negotiations. However, paragraph 2 of article I of the Protocol annexed to the Brussels Convention remained the same in the Protocol n.1 to the Lugano Convention and the report[5] to that Convention makes no reference to any discussion on the subject.

This issue, however, is no longer relevant within the scope of application of Regulation (EC) 44/2001, as that provision was not maintained. It is certainly an issue that will be taken into account in the negotiations for the revision of the Lugano Convention.

Article 24 of the Convention

[3] OJ [1990] C 189, p. 177.
[4] Case n. 2003/40, p. 7.
[5] OJ [1990] C 189, p. 86.

Jurisdiction to adjudicate on the application of provisional and protective measures was referred to by the Supreme Court of the Netherlands, in its judgment of 21 June 2002 (Hoge Raad, judgment of 21.06.2002, no 2002/45). In the judgment, the Court has definitely supported the necessity to preserve the uniform character of decisions passed under the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention and emphasised that, according to the undertakings given by the signatories to the Lugano Convention the courts of those States, whether they fall within the EC or the EFTA, must take account when applying the provisions of the Lugano Convention which also feature in the Brussels Convention, of the case-law of the European Court of Justice and of the courts of the Member States concerning those provisions. Consequently, the Supreme Court of the Netherlands, while examining the submitted case, has taken into account the decisions of the European Court of Justice.

By reference to the hitherto existing decisions of the European Court of Justice, the Supreme Court of the Netherlands stated that as regards an application for provisional measures, brought before the Netherlands court seeking payment of a sum in that court while the main proceedings are pending before a court in Norway, the Netherlands court is entitled to grant such a measure solely under Article 24 of the Lugano Convention only where there is a real connection between the subject-matter of that measure and its territorial jurisdiction.

The judgment has been delivered pursuant to the following circumstances:
The plaintiff seated in Amsterdam has lodged an action against 7 defendants domiciled or seated in the territory of Norway. The plaintiff has applied to the President of the Circuit Court in Amsterdam (President van de Rechtbank te Amsterdam) to issue an interim order consisting in the payment of a demanded amount for the plaintiff, or, in event the application was rejected, consisting in the provision of a security for the payment of the amount of 300 mln Norwegian crowns.

The President of the Circuit Court in Amsterdam decided that the court had no jurisdiction to examine the application for provisional measures.

The applicant appealed against that judgment and the appellate court reversed the judgment of the President of the Circuit Court in Amsterdam. It decided that the President of the Circuit Court in Amsterdam had jurisdiction to examine the application.

One of the defendants applied for the appeal of the judgment of the second instance court.

Having examined the appeal, the Supreme Court in the Netherlands stated that as regards that case, it is necessary to decide whether under the Lugano Convention, which is applicable to that case, the President of the Circuit Court in Amsterdam is competent to deliver an interim order consisting in the payment of the disputed amount in the situation where in the main case there is a pending judicial proceeding before a competent Norwegian court.

The issue of jurisdiction to decide on the provisional or protective measures pursuant to Article 24 of the Brussels Convention, which is worded identically as Article 24 of the Lugano Convention, has been considered in the ECJ's rulings.

The Supreme Court of the Netherlands reversed the decision of the appellate court . It has referred to the ECJ's judgment of 17 November 1998, delivered in the case Van Uden Maritime BV/Deco-Line (case C-391/95, ECR 1998, I-7091). In that judgment, the European Court of Justice stated that in the situation where the subject-matter of the case in connection with which the issuing of provisional measures is requested falls within the objective scope of the Convention, the court having jurisdiction to decide on the merits of the case pursuant to Article 2 and Articles 5 to 18 of the Convention also has jurisdiction to decide on provisional or protective measures and that jurisdiction is not dependent on any further conditions. However, if a court requested to decide on provisional or protective measures has no jurisdiction to decide on the merits of the case, then jurisdiction to decide on provisional and protective measures may be conferred on it pursuant to Article 24 of the Brussels Convention, even though it is possible that the proceedings concerning the merits of the dispute have been already, or may be, instituted before another court or are already pending before an arbitration court. In that judgment, the European Court of Justice also emphasised that the application of provisional or protective measures pursuant to Article 24 of the Brussels Convention of 27 August 1968 is conditional on, inter alia, the existence of a real connecting link between the subject-matter of the measures sought and the territorial jurisdiction of the Contracting State of the court before which those measures are sought. In that judgment, the ECJ examined, with regard to the above factor, the measure consisting in an immediate payment of a contractual consideration.

The European Court of Justice decided that provisional or protective measures relating to matters excluded from the scope of the Convention are also excluded from the scope of Article 24 of the Convention, because there is no legal basis for arguing for a different scope between provisional measures and definitive measures (also in the case De Cavel/De Cavel judgment of 27.03.1979, ECR 1979, 1055).

In its earlier judgment, dated 21.05.1980, issued in the case Denilauler/Snc Couchet Fréres (case 125/79, ECR 1980, 1553), the European Court of Justice stated that the courts of the place – or, in any event, of the Contracting State – where the assets subject to the measures sought are located are those best able to assess the circumstances which may lead to the grant or refusal of the measures sought or to laying down of procedures and conditions which the plaintiff must observe in order to guarantee the provisional and protective character of the measures authorised. It follows that the granting of provisional or protective measures on the basis of Article 24 is conditional on, inter alia, the existence of a real connecting link between the subject-matter of the measures sought and the territorial jurisdiction of the contracting State of the court before which those measures are sought. That court should take up the measures in order to ensure the provisional or protective character of the adjudicated measures. In that judgment, the ECJ stated that the application of such measures requires particular care and knowledge and that the court must have a possibility of imposing a time limit with regard to the judgment or of limiting it to certain assets and objects, or else, of demanding bank guarantees or the designation of a depository in order to ensure the provisional or protective character of the adjudicated measure. It also stated that the most competent court to assess these circumstances is the court of the place where the assets subject to the measures sought are located. Article 24 of the Convention does not prohibit recognising and declaring the enforceability of provisional measures ordered in another state in litigious proceedings, pursuant to the conditions set out in Articles 25 to 29 of the Convention. On the other hand, the conditions set out in Title III are not complied with in the case of provisional and protective measures, which have been adjudicated or approved by the court in the absence of a party they concern, as well as in the case of the measures to be enforced without prior notification on that party. Measures, which do not comply with these conditions, are not subject to simplified enforcement procedure specified in Title III of the Convention.

Article 27(1) of the Convention

The case dated 5 July 2001 (Tribunal Fédéral, case no 2003/23), refers to an opposition to the execution of a judgment of the High Court of Justice of London in Switzerland, on the basis of violation of public policy. Party X pleaded that in the proceedings in London the court had not considered the legal opinion submitted by that party as an affidavit, while considering as such the legal opinion submitted by the other party.

However, after analysing the case, the Federal Court decided that there was no violation of public policy as the legal opinion in question did not satisfy the requirements of English law on taking of evidence, while the other did. Moreover, the court concluded from the analysis of the facts, that the procedural rights were granted to both parties and that for procedural public policy purposes, it is not relevant if the party did, in fact, make use or not of those rights, as long as they were available.

Article 27(2) of the Convention

In the decision dated 10 May 2002, the Finnish Supreme Court (Korkein oikeus, no 2003/47) expressed its opinion on the question of interpretation of Article 27(2) of the Lugano Convention. The case concerned a default judgment, the enforcement of which was applied for in Finland and the question whether a summons had been served on the defendant in the manner provided for in Article 27 (2) of the Lugano Convention.
The French Societé Chantiers et Ateliers de la Perriere (hereinafter referred to as CAP) applied for the enforcement of a judgment rendered by the Court of Appeals in Rennes (France) against Hollming Ltd (hereinafter referred to as Hollming). On 6 February1998 the Rauma District Court (Finland) decided that the judgment of the French court was to be enforced in accordance with Articles 31, 34 and 36 of the Lugano Convention.

Hollming lodged an appeal to the District Court's decision on the grounds that Hollming had not received a summons and had not been properly represented during the proceedings in France; consequently the judgment of the Court of Appeals in Rennes could not be enforced in Finland.

The Finnish Court of Appeals found the case chiefly to involve the question whether Hollming had been properly represented, which concerned the fair trial requirement during the proceedings in the first instance in France, i.e. the Commercial Court in Lorient, and the related question whether Hollming had been served with a summons to appear before the commercial court or whether it had any other reliable information other than that contained in the summons concerning its status as a defendant.

The Finnish Court of Appeals referred to the judgment of the Lorient Commercial Court, according to which the barrister Possoz represented Hollming. The Court held that the entry of this point into the record was not necessarily true to fact, as the barrister was only obliged to produce a power of attorney if a request was made to that effect.

According to the wording of the judgment of the Lorient Commercial Court, Hollming had been summoned to appear. Nevertheless, the case file does not make it clear whether a summons concerning Hollming existed. At any rate, Hollming's assertion that the company itself had not been summoned, and that instead Hollming's commercial agent in France, Sofaret had received a summons at that company's address, was considered reliable. The Court of Appeals concluded that no summons could be found that had been served on Hollming. A summons served at the premises of Sofaret could not replace a summons served on Hollming directly, and was not binding upon Hollming. Thus, Hollming had not been summoned to appear before the commercial court. The relationship on the grounds of which Sofaret was acting as a commercial agent to Hollming did not render Sofaret competent to defend Hollming in court, whether in the Commercial Court or in the Court of Appeals. There was no indication that Hollming had granted a power of representation in the case to Sofaret, the defendant, or to Sofaret's barrister, Possoz.

According to Article 27 of the Lugano Convention, a judgment will not be recognised if its recognition is contrary to public policy in the State in which recognition is sought. According to Article 29 of the Convention, no facts relating to the resolution of a case in a foreign judgment shall be reviewed under any circumstances. Matters concerning the representation and the service of summons have no relation to the subject matter of a judgment. Hollming itself did not receive a summons. Actually, Hollming did not possess information to the effect that the case had been filed in the Commercial Court or on its status as a defendant there. Nor had CAP asserted that Sofaret or the barrister Possoz possessed a mandate of legal representation from Hollming. It was found that Hollming, not having been summoned, was absent from the proceedings of the commercial court. Consequently the proceedings could not be said to constitute a fair trial of the absent party. The fact that the proceedings may have been fair in other respects was not relevant. Recognition of the judgments of the Lorient Commercial Court of 17 December 1993 and the Rennes Court of Appeals of 13 March 1996 was contrary to the basic principles of Finnish procedural law.

The Court of Appeals therefore denied CAP's application.

CAP was entitled to lodge an appeal.

In its appeal, the CAP requested a reversal of the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and granting its application for recognition of the decision of the Court of Appeals in Rennes, making the judgment enforceable.

In its decision issued on 10 May 2002, the Supreme Court, which examined the appeal, stated that according to Article 34 (2) of the Lugano Convention, a court handling an application for a decision on enforcement may only refuse such application for one of the reasons specified in Articles 27 and 28 of the Convention. According to Art. 27 (2), a judgment shall not be recognised if it was given in default of appearance, and the defendant was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence. Thus, Article 27 (2) of the Convention relates only to judgments rendered in default of appearance. It can be noticed in the case Hendrikman and Feyen/Magenta Druck&Veerlak GmbH (case C-78/95, judgment of 10 October 1996; OJ 1996 p. 1-4943) the Court of Justice stated that where proceedings are initiated against a person without his knowledge and a lawyer appears before the court first seised on his behalf but without his authority, such a person is quite powerless to defend himself and must be regarded as a defendant in default of appearance, within the meaning of Article 27(2) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, even if the proceedings before the court first seised became, in point of form, proceedings inter partes.

Article 27(2) of the Convention therefore applies to judgments given against a defendant who was not duly served with, or notified of, the document instituting proceedings in sufficient time and who was not validly represented during those proceedings, albeit the judgments given were not given in default of appearance because someone purporting to represent the defendant appeared before the court first seised.

According to the judgment of the Lorient Commercial Court of 17 December 1993, two barristers were registered as representatives of the defendant Hollming. Thus, the judgment was not rendered in the defendant's absence. The first question to be resolved was whether Hollming had been duly represented in the Lorient Commercial Court. Against Hollming's denial it was not established that Hollming provided the said barristers with a power of representation before that court. Nor has it been established that the company Sofaret, which acted as Hollming's commercial agent in France, was by virtue of that function or for some other reason empowered to represent Hollming in the course of the litigation.

Thus, the Supreme Court holds that, within the meaning of Article 27 (2), the judgment was given in default of appearance on the part of Hollming.

A judgment given in default of appearance can only be enforced in the absence of the faults referred to in Article 27 (2). The provision requires that a document instituting the proceedings be served on the defendant in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence. Its purpose is to ensure that a judgment is not enforced on the basis of the Lugano Convention if the defendant did not have an opportunity to defend himself during the proceedings.

According to a submitted exposition, a summons for appearance before the Lorient Commercial Court was served on the company Sofaret ("Ste Hollming SA co Sofaret"). It was not explained that Sofaret was, on the basis of an agreement between that company and Hollming, empowered to receive a summons or an equivalent document on Hollming's behalf, or that Sofaret was otherwise in possession of such a mandate. As a summons was not served on Hollming at all, it follows that such a document was not served on Hollming in sufficient time to arrange for its defence.

On this basis, the Supreme Court denied CAP´s application for the enforcement of the judgment of the Rennes Court of Appeals.

III.Final considerations

The review of the national decisions on the Lugano Convention contained in the twelfth fascicle issued by the Court of Justice confirms the tendency of national courts to follow the case law of the ECJ pertaining the Brussels Convention.

Numerous references to the case law of the European Court of Justice, made by national courts in their judgments, seem to prove that the ECJ's decisions are in general well known. The fact that national courts, while deciding on the issues pertaining to the Lugano Convention, analyse the decisions of the European Court of Justice and make in their judgments direct references to the case law worked out by the ECJ, proves that they take a proper care to have homogenous decisions passed with regard to both Conventions, i.e. the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention.

On the other hand none of the decisions of the European Court of Justice contained in the twelfth fascicle can be cited as an example of the ECJ paying due account to the rulings contained in the case-law of the Lugano Convention according to the Declaration of the Representatives of the Governments of the States signatories to the Lugano Convention which are members of the European Communities.

It is worthy of appreciation that national courts make references to the case laws of other Contracting States. Due to the fact that judgments passed by national courts are most frequently published in their original language versions, it is worth noting the effort of the courts of some countries in establishing a uniform interpretation of the Lugano Convention.

The fact that national decisions are published in national language versions may limit the general knowledge of the content of these decisions. Therefore, these Reports may be a valuable auxiliary to national courts, especially if translated into all national languages and widely disseminated.

SEPTIÈME RAPPORT
SUR LA JURISPRUDENCE NATIONALE
DE LA CONVENTION DE LUGANO

I. Introduction

Lors de sa 11ème Session, tenue à Neuchâtel (Suisse), les 6-7 septembre 2004, le Comité Permanent de la Convention de Lugano a chargé les délégués de l'Espagne, l'Italie et la Suisse de préparer le septième rapport sur la jurisprudence nationale de la Convention de Lugano sur le 13ème envoi (septembre 2004) issue par la Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes au titre du Protocole nº 2 annexé à la Convention de Lugano.

Des 38 décisions contenues dans cet envoi, seules neuf se réfèrent à la Convention de Lugano. Il s'agit des décisions suivantes :

- Arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 21 février 2003 (n° 2004/16)
- Arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 6 juin 2003 (nº 2004/17)
- Arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 23 juin 2003 (nº 2004/18)
- Arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 30 juillet 2003 (nº 2004/19)
- Arrêt du Oberlandesgericht München (Allemagne) du 15 mai 2003 (nº 2004/21)
- Arrêt du Tribunal Supremo (Espagne) du 9 octobre 2003 (nº 2004/25)
- Arrêt du Hoyeserett (Norvège) du 20 décembre 2003 (nº 2004/33)
- Arrêt du Hoyeserett (Norvège) du 5 février 2003 (nº 2004/34)
- Arrêt du Sad Najwyzszy (Pologne) du 19 décembre 2003 (nº 2004/38).

Quelques remarques à caractère préalable peuvent être faites.

D'abord, les auteurs ont eu connaissance d'une autre décision relative à la Convention de Lugano rendue dans la période considérée, l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 23 décembre 2003, qui est commenté dans le présent rapport. L'arrêt a été communiqué à la Cour de Justice qui s'est déclarée prête à l'inclure dans l'information officielle.

Ensuite, la délégation norvégienne a fait parvenir aux rapporteurs une traduction en anglais d'un arrêt de la Cour Suprême norvégienne du 14 juin 2004, pour laquelle les rapporteurs la remercient. Ils ont considéré cependant que l'arrêt appartiendra au 14ème envoi (septembre 2005), et par conséquent, cette décision sera commentée dans le huitième rapport. Comme les rapporteurs n'ont pas eu à disposition des traductions des autres décisions norvégiennes, ils se sont bornés à une brève référence à ces arrêts, sur la base du résumé qui se trouve dans le 13ème envoi.

II. Aperçu sur la jurisprudence

1. Art. 1 al. 2 Convention de Lugano

Dans l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 6 juin 2003 (ATF 129 III 683), une décision d'un tribunal autrichien devait être reconnue et exécutée en Suisse. Le jugement concernait une action révocatoire (actio pauliana) dans une faillite introduite en Autriche.

Le Tribunal fédéral rappelle sa jurisprudence selon laquelle les procédures qui trouvent leur origine dans le droit des poursuites et de la faillite et qui, selon toute vraisemblance, n'auraient pas été conduites sans l'existence d'une procédure spéciale prévue par ce droit, sont exclues du champ d'application matériel de la Convention de Lugano. Comme sa fonction est de faire grossir la masse de la faillite, une action paulienne révocatoire comme en l'espèce est une procédure dans le sens décrit.

La question de la compatibilité de cette jurisprudence avec celle de la CJCE développée en relation avec les affaires AS Autoteile (n° C-220/84, datée du 4 juillet 1985) ainsi que Reichert I (n° C-115/88, datée du 10 janvier 1990) et Reichert II (n° 261/90, datée du 26 mars 1992) peut se poser. Dans les affaires mentionnées, il s'agissait d'apprécier diverses actions pauliennes (du droit français dans les deux derniers cas) au regard des fors de la Convention de Bruxelles. La Cour trouva dans ces trois cas que les actions pauliennes tombaient dans le champ d'application de la Convention de Bruxelles; elle rejeta en outre explicitement la subordination de l'action paulienne à l'art. 16 para. 5 en tant qu'action en exécution (Reichert II). Il apparaît toutefois essentiel que les actions pauliennes mentionnées n'aient pas été en relation avec une procédure d'exécution générale (faillite), mais bien en rapport avec une procédure d'exécution spéciale (saisie). L'exception de l'art. 1 al. 2 para. 2 CB et CL ne se référant pas aux procédures d'exécution individuelles, le jugement en l'espèce concernant une action révocatoire dans le cadre d'une exécution collective est compatible avec la jurisprudence de la CJCE. Une exclusion pure et simple des procédures ayant leur origine dans le droit des poursuites et de la faillite du champ d'application de la Convention de Lugano serait, par contre, incompatible avec cette jurisprudence.

2. Art. 1, al. 4 Convention de Lugano

L'arrêt du Tribunal Supremo (Espagne) du 9 octobre 2003 applique correctement l'art. 1, al. 4 de la Convention de Lugano en rejetant l'application de la Convention pour l'exequatur d'une sentence arbitrale. Mais cette exclusion de l'arbitrage du domaine d'application de la Convention de Lugano, ainsi que de la Convention de Bruxelles pose des questions (à cet égard, arrêt de la Cour de Justice du 25 juillet 1991, affaire C 190/89, Marc Rich, et conclussions de l'Avocat générale Darmon, points 50-76 ; parmi les nombreux commentaires, M. Amores-J. Serra dans Revista de la Corte Española de Arbitraje, 1991, pp. 85-93 ; A. Borrás, dans Revista Jurídica de Catalunya, 1992, pp. 571-574 ; G. Gaja, dans Rivista de l'arbitrato, 1992, pp. 116-121 ; T. Hartley, dans European Law Review, 1991, pp. 529-533 ; A. Huet, dans Journal de Droit interntional, 1992, pp. 488-493 ; R. Monaco, dans Etudes de Droit international en l'honneur de Pierre Lalive, Bâle, 1993, pp. 587-594 ; H. Tagaras, dans Cahiers de Droit Européen, 1992, pp. 668-671 ; P. Volken, dans Schweizerische Zeitschrift für internationales und europäisches Recht, 1992, pp. 239-240). Mais, dans le cas d'espèce, seules les questions relatives à l'exequatur sont pertinentes.

Les faits sont les suivants : La société espagnole Unión Naval de Levante S.A. (ci-après : Unión Naval.) et la société de Panama Bisca Comercial Inc (ci-après : Bisca) ont soumis leur différend à l' arbitrage. La sentence arbitrale était rendue à Genève le 28 février 1997 par un Tribunal désigné par la Cour d'Arbitrage de la Chambre internationale de Commerce condamnant à Unión Naval à payer une certaine somme d'argent à Bisca. Contre cette sentence arbitrale, un recours a été interjeté auprès du Tribunal Fédéral suisse, lequel, par arrêt du 16 octobre, a refusé les deux recours d'annulation interposés par les parties.

Sur requête de Bisba, le Juzgado de Primera Instancia nº 3 de Madrid, a prononcé l'exequatur ; cette décision a été confirmée par la Audiencia Provincial de Madrid. Ainsi, la voie prévue par les articles 32 et 37 de la Convention de Lugano doit être suivie. Union Naval a formé un pourvoi en cassation, invoquant la violation de l'art. 1, al. 4, de la Convention de Lugano, des articles I et III de la Convention de New York, de l'art. 1 de la Convention entre l'Espagne et la Suisse du 19 novembre 1896 pour la reconnaissance et exécution des décisions en matière civile et commerciale par rapport à l'art. 55 de la Convention de Lugano, de l'art. 3 de ladite Convention, ainsi que de l'art. 24 de la Constitution espagnole relatif au droit à un procès contradictoire et aux droits de la défense.

Le Tribunal Supremo a fait une distinction claire entre l'exequatur de l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral et l'exequatur de la sentence arbitrale.

Selon le Tribunal Supremo, s'agissant de l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral, la Convention de Lugano devrait s'appliquer, à l'exclusion de la Convention bilatérale entre l'Espagne et la Suisse, en conformité avec la dérogation expresse faite à l'art. 55, deuxième tiret, de la Convention de Lugano. Cette décision prend partie dans le débat entre ce que dit le Rapport Schlosser (Point 65 du Rapport relatif à la Convention d'adhésion du Danemark, de l'Irlande et du Royaume Uni à la Convention de Bruxelles, et, dans le même sens, point 35 du Rapport Evrigenis et Kerameus à la Convention relative à l'adhésion de la Grèce à la Convention de Bruxelles) en ce que les décisions des tribunaux étatiques annulant la sentence, ou encore accordant ou refusant l'exequatur à cette sentence échappent aussi au champ d'application de la Convention et l'opinion du même Schlosser (dans son article « The 1968 Brussels Convention and Arbitration », Rivista di diritto internazionale privato e processuale, 1989, p. 545), lequel, contrairement à l'opinion exprimée dans son rapport, estime que la Convention de Bruxelles doit s'appliquer à toutes les instances judiciaires étatiques ayant trait à une question d'arbitrage. C'est un point dont il faut tenir en compte, bien que dans le cas d'espèce cette question ne soit pas importante parce que l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse n'a pas annulé la sentence arbitrale.

S'agissant de la sentence arbitrale, le Tribunal Supremo a clairement jugé que la Convention de Lugano n'est pas applicable, en raison du fait que l'arbitrage est exclu de son champ d'application en vertu de l'art. 1, al. 4. En conséquence, l'exequatur de la sentence arbitrale doit suivre la procédure établie aux articles I et III de la Convention de New York sur la reconnaissance et l'exécution des sentences arbitrales étrangères. L'arrêt du Tribunal Supremo espagnol mentionne aussi, sans nécessité, l'éventuelle violation des articles 1 et 3 de la Convention entre la Suisse et l'Espagne, pour le cas où la Convention de New York ne serait pas applicable.

Il faut rappeler qu'au moment où l'arrêt a été rendu, la requête d'exequatur devait dans tous les cas être présentée, en conformité avec l'art. 955 de la Loi espagnole de procédure civile de 1881, devant le Tribunal Supremo. Toutefois, en vertu des Conventions internationales, telles que la Convention de Bruxelles, la Convention de Lugano ou toute autre Convention bilatérale, il était possible de présenter la requête devant le Juzgado de Primera Instancia. La décision sur l'exequatur de la sentence arbitrale était de la compétence du Tribunal Supremo parce que, en vertu de l'art. III de la Convention de New York, la procédure d'exequatur est régie par les règles de procédure en vigueur dans l'Etat où l'exequatur est demandé. On peut ajouter que, par Loi 62/2003, de 30 décembre XXX(ANNEE ???), l'art. 955 a été modifié et le Juzgado de Primera instancia est compétent en matière d'exequatur de manière générale et aux conditions établies par ledit article pour la détermination de la compétence territoriale.

3. Art 5, al. 1 Convention de Lugano

Aux termes de l'arrêt du Hoyeserett (Norvège) du 20 décembre 2003, un acheteur de marchandises domicilié sur le territoire d'un Etat contractant peut être attrait, en application de l'art. 5, point 1, de la convention de Lugano, dans un autre Etat contractant, devant le tribunal du lieu où l'obligation de payer le prix de vente doit être exécutée, bien que ce lieu ne soit pas déterminé par le contrat de vente, mais par la loi du for et la Convention des Nations Unies de 11 avril 1980 sur les contrats de vente internationale de marchandises à laquelle deux Etats contractants ont adhéré et dont l'art. 57 prévoit que le lieu d'exécution de l'obligation de payer le prix de vente est le domicile commercial du vendeur.

4. Art. 2 et 5 ss Convention de Lugano

L'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 23 décembre 2003 (ATF 130 III 285) concerne un litige entre A., domicilié à Genève, et la banque X., sise à Lyon. L'application correcte de l'action en libération de dette (Aberkennungsklage) selon la Convention de Lugano se trouve au cœur de ce litige. L'action en libération de dette est une particularité du droit suisse d'exécution brièvement expliquée ci-après afin de permettre une meilleure compréhension de l'arrêt.

La procédure suisse d'exécution forcée applicable aux créances se déroule en deux phases: la procédure d'introduction et la procédure d'exécution forcée proprement dite. La procédure d'introduction prépare l'exécution forcée proprement dite: Tout d'abord, dans le cadre de la procédure d'introduction, un commandement officiel de payer sera adressé au débiteur. Cette procédure offre ensuite le cadre et l'occasion de clarifier – par diverses procédures– la légitimité du créancier à exiger l'exécution forcée.

Dans la première phase, l'Office des poursuites – donnant suite à la demande du créancier – notifie au débiteur un commandement de payer sans procéder à un examen de l'existence et de l'exigibilité de la créance alléguée. Cet acte ordonne au débiteur soit de payer la créance dans les 20 jours, soit de faire opposition au commandement de payer dans les 10 jours. Dans le cas où le débiteur n'a ni payé ni fait opposition dans le délai imparti, la procédure de poursuite entre dans la seconde phase, celle de l'exécution forcée proprement dite. Une opposition au commandement de payer, qui, soit dit en passant, ne doit pas être nécessairement motivée, suspend la poursuite dans tous les cas.

Dans le cas où aucun jugement n'a été prononcé en faveur du créancier, celui-ci doit initier une procédure civile ordinaire dans laquelle il conclura, en plus des conclusions au fond, à la levée définitive de l'opposition ("mainlevée définitive"). Si, par contre, il produit une reconnaissance (écrite) de dette, il peut, basé sur ce moyen de preuve, requérir la levée provisoire de l'opposition dans une procédure sommaire ("mainlevée provisoire"). La partie adverse peut opposer toute exception à condition qu'elle la rende immédiatement vraisemblable.

Lorsque la mainlevée provisoire a été accordée, le débiteur peut intenter une action dite en libération de dette au for de la poursuite dans les 20 jours à compter de la mainlevée. Cette action est une action négatoire de droit matériel visant la constatation de l'inexistence ou de l'inexigibilité de la créance invoquée. Lors de cette procédure – comme lors de procès civils ordinaires – la cognition du juge n'est limitée dans aucune mesure. Si le débiteur n'use pas de son droit d'intenter une action en libération de dette ou s'il est débouté de celle-ci, la mainlevée provisoire ainsi que, le cas échéant, la saisie provisoire deviennent définitives et le créancier peut demander l'exécution forcée.

Dans le cas présent, la banque X., sise à Lyon, avait fait notifier à A., par l'Office des poursuites de Genève, un commandement de payer auquel A a fait opposition. La banque X. a requis et obtenu la mainlevée provisoire. Par la suite, A. a intenté une action en libération de dette auprès de la même juridiction – le tribunal genevois. La banque X. a alors contesté la compétence de ce tribunal et soutenu que, selon l'art. 2 CL, l'action en libération de dette devait être intentée au for de son siège à Lyon.

Se basant sur le principe de la primauté de la Convention de Lugano en tant que traité international sur toute disposition contraire de la loi nationale, le Tribunal fédéral a examiné si, à la lumière de cette Convention, le tribunal genevois était compétent pour statuer sur l'action en libération de dette exercée devant celui-ci, c'est-à-dire au for de la poursuite.

S'appuyant sur le principe général actor sequitur forum rei posé à l'art. 2 CL, le Tribunal fédéral a d'abord constaté que si la banque X. avait intenté une action en paiement contre A., le tribunal genevois aurait été compétent. La banque X. a néanmoins préféré faire d'abord notifier à A. un commandement de payer à son lieu de domicile à Genève. Le commandement de payer ne peut vraisemblablement pas être qualifié d'acte juridictionnel au sens de la Convention de Lugano puisqu'il est émis par une autorité administrative. Le Tribunal fédéral a cependant laissé la question de la soumission du commandement de payer à la Convention ouverte puisque l'autorité émettrice au domicile de A. aurait été compétente en vertu de l'art. 2 CL. Comme le for du lieu de la poursuite auquel a été aussi déposée l'action en mainlevée provisoire de l'opposition correspond au domicile du débiteur poursuivi, le Tribunal fédéral laissa également ouverte la question de savoir si la décision de mainlevée provisoire correspond à un procès au fond au sens de l'art. 2 et ss CL.

Le Tribunal fédéral a toutefois constaté que l'action en libération de dette est un procès au fond et que par conséquent les dispositions des arts 2 ss. CL s'appliquent. Il observe que l'action en libération de dette est une action négatoire de droit matériel, mais explique le renversement du rôle procédural des parties par le fait que la procédure est intégrée dans la phase introductive de la procédure de poursuite. Le fardeau de la preuve reste ainsi le même que lors d'une action en reconnaissance de dette. Comme l'art. 2 CL ne mentionne pas expressément le défendeur mais fait référence à la personne attraite devant les juridictions de l'Etat contractant de son domicile, il apparaît que le rôle formel des parties n'est pas nécessairement décisif.

Selon la doctrine dominante concernant les Conventions de Bruxelles et de Lugano, les actions négatoires de droit matériel doivent également être initiées au for du défendeur (sur le plan formel). Dans son jugement, le Tribunal fédéral s'appuie sur l'arrêt, AS-Autoteile de la CJCE (n° 220/84, daté du 4.7.1985). La Cour avait alors décidé que les actions en opposition à exécution prévues par l'art. 767 du code allemand de procédure civile peuvent en principe tomber dans le champ d'application des arts 2 et ss CB. AS-Autoteile, partie défenderesse dans la procédure de poursuite, avait intenté une action en opposition à exécution en Allemagne et invoqué une créance compensatoire contre le demandeur. En relation avec cette créance, la Cour négligea la position des parties sur le plan formel et retint uniquement des considérations matérielles. Elle admit finalement la compétence des tribunaux qui auraient été compétents pour statuer si la créance avait fait l'objet d'une action autonome.

Dans son argumentation concernant le cas présent, le Tribunal fédéral se réfère expressément à l'art. 2 CL en tant que principe fondamental; malgré tout, il convient d'admettre que les fors alternatifs pour le procès au fond sont également examinés. Lorsque leurs conditions spéciales sont remplies, le demandeur a le choix entre les fors spéciaux de la CL et le for général de l'art. 2 CL.

Plusieurs autres raisons pourraient être citées pour la prise en compte de considérations matérielles lors de l'évaluation d'une action négatoire de droit matériel en relation avec une procédure d'exécution. La situation qui nous occupe est ainsi comparable à celle d'une demande reconventionnelle au sens de l'art. 6 para. 3 CL. Leur point commun est que le demandeur sur le plan formel se trouve dans une situation de défense sur le plan matériel. Une comparaison avec le cas de figure de la comparution au sens de l'art. 18 CL paraît également possible: Dans le cas d'espèce, la demanderesse sur le plan formel avait fait notifier le commandement de payer et initié la procédure de mainlevée à Genève, il convient donc d'admettre que l'action en libération de dette doit également pouvoir être déposée à ce même for par le débiteur poursuivi.

Le Tribunal fédéral fait allusion à ces considérations sans toutefois entrer dans les détails. Nous retenons en l'espèce que le Tribunal fédéral a suivi la jurisprudence de la CJCE du cas AS-Autoteile et qu'il l'a appliquée de façon analogue aux particularités de la procédure suisse d'initiation de poursuite. Ceci lui donne la possibilité de développer ultérieurement sa jurisprudence de manière conséquente et de qualifier expressément de procédure au sens des arts 2 et ss CL la procédure de mainlevée provisoire. Une décision du Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf du 16 mars 2004 (I-3 W 373/03) s'exprime d'ailleurs aussi en faveur d'une telle qualification. Ce tribunal a statué qu'une décision de mainlevée provisoire suisse est une décision au sens de l'art. 25 CL et peut être déclarée exécutoire en Allemagne selon la CL.

5. Art. 16 para. 4, Convention de Lugano

A) Dans le cas de l'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 21 février 2003 (ATF 129 III 295), le demandeur, une société italienne, avait fait établir par le tribunal cantonal des Grisons qu'il ne violait pas les droits découlant d'un brevet européen appartenant au défendeur, une société anonyme domiciliée en Suisse, dans les six Etats européens en cause.

Le Tribunal fédéral constatait que le cas considéré n'entrait pas dans le champ d'application de l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Lugano, il entrait donc en matière. Cette interprétation de l'art. 16 para. 4 CL semble en ligne avec celle de la CJCE. En effet, bien que la CJCE n'ait pas encore décidé ce genre de cas précisément, il est possible de se baser sur la décision Duijnstee (n° 288/82, datée du 15 novembre 1983). La CJCE distinguait un litige portant sur les droits respectifs d'un employé, auteur d'une invention pour laquelle un brevet a été demandé ou obtenu, et de son employeur – litige découlant de leur relation de travail – de ceux concernant l'inscription ou la validité du brevet et tombant dans le champ d'application de l'art. 16 para. 4 CB. Pour ce faire, la Cour se basait sur la distinction retenue tant par la Convention de Munich du 5 octobre 1973 sur le brevet européen que par la Convention de Luxembourg du 15 décembre 1975 sur le brevet communautaire entre la compétence pour les litiges concernant le droit au brevet et la compétence pour les litiges en matière d'inscription et de validité d'un brevet. La CJCE déclarait également dans cet arrêt que "si […] le litige ne porte pas lui-même sur la validité du brevet ou l'existence du dépôt ou de l'enregistrement, il faut estimer qu'aucune raison particulière ne plaide pour l'attribution d'une compétence exclusive aux juridictions de l'Etat contractant ou le brevet a été demandé ou délivré et que, par conséquent, un tel litige ne relève pas de l'art. 16 para. 4 [CB]" ; la Cour appliquera donc "les règles générales de la Convention" à ces "autres actions".

De plus, l'avocat général L.A. Geelhoed reprend dans ses conclusions concernant l'affaire pendante Gesellschaft für Antriebstechnik (n° C-4/03) l'argumentation de la CJCE dans le cas Duijnstee qui justifie l'art. 16 para. 4 CB aussi par le fait que "les juridictions [nationales] sont les mieux placées pour connaître des cas dans lesquels le litige porte lui-même sur la validité du brevet ou l'existence du dépôt ou de l'enregistrement". L'avocat général donne finalement le cas d'un litige concernant la violation d'un brevet comme exemple type d'une "autre action" pour laquelle l'art. 16 para. 4 CB n'est pas applicable.

B) Parmi les jugements qui traitent de l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Lugano s'inscrit également l'arrêt de l'Oberlandesgericht München (Allemagne) du 15 mai 2003 (MarkenR, 2003, 397-401), qui présente une raison supplémentaire (???) d'intérêt parce qu'il interprète et applique à la fois cette disposition et la disposition correspondante de la Convention de Bruxelles.

Il s'agissait en effet dans l'espèce d'une demande introduite par les demanderesses devant le Landgericht München simultanément à l'encontre d'un défendeur domicilié en Suisse et d'un défendeur domicilié en Autriche. L'action visait à constater l'inefficacité sur le territoire allemand d'une marque de fabrique internationale enregistrée en Suisse, auprès de l'Organisation mondiale de la propriété intellectuelle (OMPI), par le premier défendeur (D1), lequel agissait en tant que fiduciaire du deuxième défendeur (D2), qui était le seul bénéficiaire des droits de propriété découlant de l'inscription de la marque, suite à son dépôt prioritaire en Autriche. Le Landgericht München a rejeté la demande en statuant que tant en vertu de l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Lugano qu'en vertu de la disposition correspondante de la Convention de Bruxelles les tribunaux suisses étaient seuls compétents, au détriment des tribunaux allemands.

L'Oberlandesgericht s'est prononcé de la manière contraire, et a affirmé l'existence de la juridiction des tribunaux allemands à l'encontre des défendeurs. D'abord, il a remarqué que les dispositions de la Convention de Lugano, notamment celles de la section prévoyant des compétences exclusives, doivent être appliquées d'office, alors même que le demandeur ne les a pas invoquées expressément en instance. Pour ce qui est du défendeur D1, domicilié en Suisse, il a observé que l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Lugano donne la compétence en la matière, sans considération de domicile, aux juridictions de l'Etat contractant sur le territoire duquel le dépôt ou l'enregistrement a été demandé, a été effectué ou est réputé avoir été effectué aux termes d'une convention internationale. L'enregistrement ayant été effectué aux termes de l'Arrangement de La Haye concernant le dépôt international des dessins ou modèles industriels, il a ensuite observé que c'est à ce dernier qu'il faut se référer pour déterminer le territoire visé par la fiction contenue dans l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Lugano. D'après l'art. 7 al. 1 let. a de l'Arrangement de La Haye tout dépôt au Bureau international produit, dans chacun des Etats contractants désignés par le déposant dans sa demande, les mêmes effets que si toutes les formalités et touts les actes administratifs prévus par la loi nationale pour obtenir la protection avaient été respectés et accomplis par le déposant. A son tour, l'art. 7 al. 1 let. b prévoit que la protection des dessins ou modèles enregistrés auprès du Bureau international est régie dans chacun des Etats contractants par les dispositions de la loi nationale qui s'applique dans ledit Etat aux dessins ou modèles dont la protection est revendiquée par la voie du dépôt national et pour lesquels toutes les formalités ont été remplies et tous les actes administratifs ont été accomplis. Il en résulte, selon l'Oberlandesgericht , qu'en cas de litige portant sur l'efficacité ou l'inefficacité, sur le territoire de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, d'une marque de fabrique internationale, ce sont les tribunaux allemands qui sont compétents, sans considération du domicile du défendeur.

Des considérations analogues ont conduit le tribunal, dans la décision examinée, à affirmer la compétence des tribunaux allemands pour connaître de l'action en constatation de droit intentée par les demanderesses à l'encontre du défendeur D2, domicilié en Autriche, en vertu de l'art. 16 para. 4 de la Convention de Bruxelles. Le texte des dispositions concernées dans les deux conventions étant le même, la cour en donne la même interprétation.

Il faut encore remarquer que l'Oberlandesgericht s'est prononcé en faveur de la recevabilité de l'action en constatation de la non-existence d'un rapport de droit, en considérant qu'il y avait un intérêt juridique pour les demanderesses à intenter l'action. Leur situation juridique était menacée par un danger actuel du fait que D2 avait intenté une action à leur encontre pour violation de la marque internationale en question devant le tribunal NF, et que le procès était pendant au moment du jugement. L'action en constatation de droit a été considérée par la cour allemande comme une mesure visant à clarifier le rapport de droit, dans la mesure où l'action pendant devant le tribunal NF repose sur une violation de la marque de fabrique. Quant à D1, l'intérêt juridique réside dans sa qualité de détenteur inscrit auprès de l'OMPI de la marque de fabrique en question. En faveur de la recevabilité de l'action milite enfin, selon la cour, le fait que les demanderesses n'avaient pas d'autres voies de recours à leur disposition.

6. Arts 25 et 31 Convention de Lugano

Cet arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 30 juillet 2003 (ATF 129 III 626) concerne une mesure provisionnelle conservatoire prononcée par la Haute Cour de Justice de Londres (en l'occurrence une "Freezing Injunction") à l'encontre d'un débiteur résidant en Turquie, demandant le blocage d'une partie de ses avoirs en Suisse. Le tribunal cantonal de Zurich avait accordé la reconnaissance et l'exécution de cette "Freezing Injunction" et le débiteur avait déposé un recours de droit public auprès du Tribunal fédéral contre cette décision. Il faisait valoir que son droit d'être entendu n'avait pas été respecté et que la compétence territoriale de la Haute Cour de Justice de Londres n'avait aucun lien réel avec les avoirs situés en Suisse entraînant, selon la jurisprudence de la CJCE, l'incompétence de la Cour en la matière.

Le Tribunal fédéral constatait dans un premier temps que la "Freezing Injunction" du droit anglais pourrait être une décision au sens de l'art. 25 CL. Il appliquait la règle développée par la CJCE dans l'affaire Denilauler (n° 125/79, datée du 21 mai 1980) selon laquelle une mesure provisionnelle conservatoire ne peut être reconnue que si la partie concernée par cette mesure a été entendue dans la procédure aboutissant à celle-ci. Dans le cas d'espèce, le défendeur n'avait été entendu qu'après que la Cour avait décidé une extension de l'exécutabilité de l'injonction initiale au territoire étranger. Le Tribunal fédéral constatait ensuite que la jurisprudence restrictive de la Cour concernant l'application de l'art. 25 CL au mesures «ex parte» était controversée dans la doctrine, mais décidait néanmoins de s'y conformer au regard de l'art. 1 du protocole II. De plus, le Tribunal fédéral observait que le débiteur avait été entendu dans la procédure initiale à Londres ordonnant la "Freezing Injunction" qui prévoyait déjà en principe la possibilité d'une extension de l'exécutabilité à l'étranger. En outre, le défendeur avait la possibilité de se défendre contre cette extension après la décision. Le Tribunal fédéral arrivait donc à la conclusion que la partie en question avait eu suffisamment d'opportunités pour faire valoir ses objections. Ce résultat correspond également à la jurisprudence de la CJCE dans les affaires Klomps (n° 166/80, datée du 16.06.1981) et Brennero (n° 258/83, datée du 27.11.1984).

Le Tribunal fédéral a ensuite examiné la deuxième objection du débiteur à la lumière de la jurisprudence de la CJCE. Dans l'affaire Van Uden (n° C-391/95, datée du 17 novembre 1998), la CJCE considérait que l'art. 24 CB devait être interprété en ce sens que son application était subordonnée, notamment, à la condition de l'existence d'un "lien de rattachement réel" entre l'objet de cette mesure et la compétence territoriale de l'Etat contractant du juge saisi. La Cour s'était alors référée à sa propre jurisprudence développée dans l'arrêt Denilauler précité qui établissait que "c'est certainement le juge du lieu ou en tout cas de l'Etat contractant où sont situés les avoirs qui feront l'objet des mesures sollicitées qui est le mieux à même d'apprécier les circonstances qui peuvent amener à octroyer ou à refuser les mesures sollicitées […]".

Le Tribunal fédéral observe cependant que, dans l'affaire Mietz (n° C-99/96, datée du 27 avril 1999), la CJCE avait requis un lien réel entre la compétence territoriale du tribunal prononçant la mesure provisionnelle et les avoirs concernés uniquement dans les cas où les mesures provisionnelles conservatoires avaient été prononcées par un tribunal virtuellement incompétent sur le fond. Le Tribunal fédéral décidait donc que comme dans le cas d'espèce la Haute Cour de Londres s'était déclarée compétente pour connaître du fond de l'affaire, un lien réel entre la compétence territoriale du tribunal anglais et les avoirs concernés n'était pas nécessaire pour fonder la compétence dudit tribunal. Il rejetait ainsi la deuxième objection du débiteur et confirmait la décision du tribunal cantonal.

7. Arts. 26, 27.1 et 54, 2 Convention de Lugano

Decision of the Court of Sad Najwyzszy (Supreme Court of Poland) of December 19, 2003: A Swedish national logded with the Circuit Court of Kraków an application for recognition of a judgment of a Swedish District Court decision dating from October 31, 2000 and of a judgment of the Court of Appeal of Stockholm of November 17, 2000 confirming the District Court decision. The Swedish decision dealt with a maintenace case between the party seeking recognition, a father domiciled in Sweden, and his child. It condemned the Poland-based mother to the procedural costs awarded to the father after the child had withdrawn its action. For reasons of incompatibility with substantive Polish public policy the Circuit Court in Kraków rejected the request for recognition. In the following proceedings before the Court of Appeal of Kraków the rejection by the Circuit Court was quashed, and it was ruled that the major part of the Swedish judgment could be recognized.

The Supreme Court of Poland decided that the question of recognition was governed by the Lugano Convention. It held that, according to Article 25, the Convention applied to the recognition of the allocation of costs if the principal issue of the proceedings fell within the scope ratione materiae of the Convention. This was the case as the Swedish proceedings were on child maintenance.

As to the application of the Convention ratione temporis the Supreme Court came to the following conclusions.

The Swedish judgments had both been rendered after the entry into force of the Lugano Convention between Sweden and Poland on February 1, 2000. However, the files led the Supreme Court to the assumption that the Swedish proceedings had been instituted before that date. Based on Article 54 of the Lugano Convention the Supreme Court examined whether the Swedish court had indirect jurisdiction pursuant to the rules of the Lugano Convention or any other Convention concluded between the State of origin and the State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted. Although the judgment itself contained nothing on that issue the Supreme Court, in the spirit of favour recognitionis, was able to conclude from the files that the party seeking recognition who was the defendant in the maintenance proceedings had its domicile in Sweden at the time of the institution of the proceedings and that the indirect jurisdiction of the Swedish court was therefore in accordance with Article 2 of the Lugano Convention.

This ruling could be regarded as taking a direction that is developing further an existing case law as to the duties of the court addressed to establish the factual basis of indirect competence. In a proceeding based on Article 54 (2) concerning recognition and enforcement of a German default decision, the Swiss Federal Tribunal (decision of June 12, 1997; BGE 123 III 374; N° 1998/15) found itself unable to verify the indirect competence on the basis of the German decision because, on one hand, according to Article 28 (3) of the Lugano Convention, the recognizing court would have been bound to the findings of fact on which the first court based its jurisdiction, but, on the other hand, the German decision contained neither a summary of the facts nor the grounds it was based on. Since the indirect jurisdiction of the German court was contested and its jurisdiction was not obvious from the files, the judgment was denied enforceability (see also denial of enforceability in BGE 127 III 186 E.4.b, but in the different context of Article 54 b (3)).

The Polish court of appeal pointed out that, on top of the fact that the Swedish court's jurisdiction was in accordance with the Lugano Convention, a treaty dealing exclusively with recognition and enforcement was in force between the States involved at the time of the institution of the proceedings: the Hague Maintenance Convention of 1973, in force between Poland and Sweden since July 1, 1996. The indirect jurisdiction of the Swedish court could be founded on that convention. For the purposes of Article 54 paragraph 2 of the Lugano Convention, according to the Polish Supreme Court, it already would be sufficient to establish the jurisdiction of the State of origin, based on an international Convention dealing with indirect jurisdiction only, and not with direct competence.

Independently from these findings, the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the Hague Maintenance Convention of 1973 didn’t apply to the recognition of the Swedish judgment as the latter dealt with the payment of procedural costs by the mother as the statutory representative of the child rather than by the child itself.

In addition to the Maintenance Convention, the Supreme Court examined the application of the Hague Convention of 1980 on Access to Justice, also in force between the two countries. However, the court didn’t apply this Convention as it found the case did not fall under its Articles 14 and 15.

The court then went on to examine whether the public policy exception of Article 27 (1) applied. First it recognized that the public exception of Polish national law was considerably broader than Article 27 (1) of the Lugano Convention. It stressed the exceptional character of the public policy clause which could only be applied in particularly flagrant cases of departure from crucial and fundamental principles of the national legal order. The mere fact of divergence between legal provisions applied by the State of origin and the rules which the recognizing State would have applied if it had had the case in hand was not sufficient for the application of Article 27 (1). This seems to be in line with the Report Jenard (ad Article 26) and a rich case law by the Court of Justice and national Supreme Courts on the narrow interpretation and exceptional nature of the public policy exception.

In this connection, it was found that Polish law only excluded the imposition of court fees on the child, but did not prevent the court from awarding the opposing party its procedural costs against the child. The difference to Swedish law lay in the fact that the latter prevented the courts from awarding procedural costs of the opposing party against the child, but instead allowed the imposition of these costs on its statutory representative. Thus the only difference beween the two regimes lay in the fact that from a formalistic point of view the procedural costs of the opposing party were awarded against different persons. From an economic point of view, the costs were borne by the same person, the statutory representative of the minor. Thus the Polish Supreme Court held that Art. 27 para. 1 was not violated .

Finally, the court turned to the fact that the applicant had requested recognition of the Swedish judgment without asking for its enforcement. The Supreme Court held that, pursuant to Article 26 of the Lugano Convention, each judgment, regardless of the fact whether it was enforceable according to Articles 31 ff. or or not, could be recognized in other Contracting States. Although the conditions for recognition and declaration of enforceability were mostly convergent, the two proceedings were regulated separately in the Lugano Convention as well as in Polish national procedural law. Thus the Swedish judgment of October 31, 2000 was not declared enforceable but only recognized as containing the decision on the costs of the proceedings. Indeed, with respect to the treatment of a request as a mere request for recognition where enforcement of the decision could be directly sought there seems to be no relevant case law asking for a special interest for a decision on recognition according to Article 26 (2) of the Lugano Convention.

9. Arts 37 et 38 Convention de Lugano

L'arrêt du Tribunal fédéral suisse du 23 juin 2003 (ATF 129 III 574) traitait de la reconnaissance et de l'exécution en Suisse d'un jugement conditionnel (Vorbehaltsurteil) rendu par le Landgericht Düsseldorf en application du droit de procédure civile allemand. Le Tribunal fédéral suisse avait rejeté le recours introduit contre la décision du juge suisse de l'exécution (tribunal cantonal de Zurich) d'octroyer la reconnaissance et l'exécution en Suisse. Le recourant demandait la suspension de la procédure d'exequatur en application de l'art. 38(1) CL et faisait valoir la violation des arts 30 et 38 CL.

Se basant sur la définition du "recours ordinaire" au sens des arts 30 et 38 de la Convention de Bruxelles donnée par la CJCE dans l'affaire Diamond Supplies (n° 43/77, datée du 22 novembre 1977), le Tribunal fédéral avait tout d'abord constaté que la procédure subséquente (Nachverfahren), constituant selon le droit allemand la condition résolutoire du jugement conditionnel, ne peut être assimilée à un "recours ordinaire" au sens des arts 30 et 38 CL. En effet, la définition donnée par la CJCE de l'expression "recours ordinaire" englobe "tout recours qui est de nature à pouvoir entraîner l'annulation ou la modification de la décision faisant l'objet de la procédure de reconnaissance ou d'exécution selon la Convention [de Bruxelles] et dont l'introduction est liée, dans l'Etat d'origine, à un délai déterminé par la loi prenant cours en vertu de cette décision même". Il convient de noter que la notion de "recours ordinaire" est une notion autonome dont la détermination se fait dans le seul cadre de la Convention de Bruxelles, resp. de Lugano. Or, comme le droit allemand (§600 ZPO) ne prévoie aucun délai pour engager la procédure subséquente, celle-ci ne peut être qualifiée de "recours ordinaire" au sens des arts 30 et 38 CL. Ces dispositions ne pouvant donc pas s'appliquer à ce genre de procédure, elles ne peuvent être violées par le refus du tribunal cantonal de surseoir à statuer.

Le Tribunal fédéral note ensuite que, selon §599(3) ZPO, le jugement conditionnel est exécutoire en Allemagne. A ce stade, il serait intéressant de remarquer qu'une exécution dans un autre Etat contractant sur la base de l'art. 31 CB et CL pourrait, dans certaines situations, entrer en conflit avec certains buts des conventions de Bruxelles et Lugano: Dans l'affaire Diamond Supplies précitée, la CJCE rappelle d'abord que le but général des conventions est d'"assurer l'exécution rapide des décisions avec un minimum de formalités, dès lors que celles-ci ont un caractère exécutoire dans l'Etat d'origine" ; elle décrit ensuite le but des arts 30 et 38 comme étant celui d'"empêcher que des décisions soient obligatoirement reconnues et exécutées dans d'autres Etats contractants à un moment où subsiste la possibilité qu'elles soient mises à néant ou modifiées dans l'Etat d'origine". Dans le cas qui nous occupe, le Tribunal fédéral s'est cependant limité à l'examen de la violation alléguée des arts 30 et 38 CL et ne s'est donc pas référé à cette jurisprudence. Le Tribunal fédéral avait également constaté que le recourant n'avait engagé la procédure subséquente en Allemagne que plus de cinq ans après le jugement conditionnel, afin de pouvoir invoquer l'art. 38(1) CL et demander la suspension de la procédure d'exequatur. Le Tribunal fédéral finit enfin par faire remarquer que les arts 30 et 38 CL n'établissent qu'une simple possibilité – et non pas une obligation – de surseoir à statuer notamment lorsqu'un recours a été intenté dans l'Etat d'origine contre la décision étrangère; il appartient ainsi au juge de l'exécution d'exercer librement son pouvoir d'appréciation.

III. Considérations finales

Une année de plus, on peut constater une tendance des cours des Etats parties à la Convention de Lugano à prendre en considération la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice des Communautés Européennes relative à l'interprétation de la Convention de Bruxelles. Ce qui montre, sans doute, une intention d'appliquer dans le même sens la Convention de Bruxelles et la Convention de Lugano. Les mentions de la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne sont fréquentes. Cela montre une bonne connaissance de cette jurisprudence aussi bien par les juges des Etats membres de la Communauté européenne que les juges des autres Etats parties à la Convention de Lugano, ou, au moins, une bonne connaissance de cette jurisprudence par les conseils qui assistent les parties dans les affaires pouvant mettre en cause cette jurisprudence ou se prévaloir de celle-ci.

On peut signaler, par contre, que les jugements rendus dans d'autres Etats parties à la Convention sont rarement mentionnés dans les arrêts. Un résultat normal pour deux raisons. En premier lieu, parce que les juges internes ne sont pas habitués à citer la jurisprudence étrangère. En deuxième lieu, en raison des difficultés linguistiques.

De manière plus générale, il y a lieu de remarquer qu'à côté des décisions qui ne font que reprendre de solutions déjà consolidées dans la jurisprudence de la Cour de justice, d'autres ont trait à des espèces qui présentent des éléments juridiques et de fait nouveaux sur lesquels les juges se penchent pour la première fois. La recherche de solutions qui s'insèrent dans la ligne de la jurisprudence de la Cour, ou qui sont au moins compatibles avec celle-ci, constitue une contribution importante dont la Cour elle-même est appelée à tenir compte lorsqu'elle aborde des espèces analogues. De ce point de vue, la richesse de la jurisprudence sur la Convention de Lugano confirme encore un fois le rôle essentiel joué par la convention parallèle dans le cadre de l'harmonisation du droit de la coopération judiciaire en Europe.

II. Notes on National Case Law

1. Area of Applicability of the Lugano Convention

In its judgment of 15 December 2004 (No. 2005/23) the Federal Supreme Court of Switzerland (Tribunal fédéral) addresses the question of the application of the Lugano Convention to revocatory actions under bankruptcy law. The judgment also discusses the question of the extent to which Swiss courts must take account of the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities (hereinafter: ECJ) on the parallel Brussels Convention.

The judgment is based upon the following set of facts:

Company A, headquartered in Geneva, entered into bankruptcy in 2000. It was a creditor of Company X, headquartered in Warsaw (Poland), to which it had granted a remission of debt two times prior to the opening of the bankruptcy proceedings. The bankruptcy trustee filed a revocatory action ("Paulian action") against Company X in Geneva as the place of the bankruptcy proceedings pursuant to Articles 285 et seq. of the Federal Law on Debt Recovery and Bankruptcy (Loi fédérale sur la poursuite pour dettes et la faillite, hereinafter: LP) with the goal of rescinding the remission of debt. The defendant Company X unsuccessfully argued at each instance of the proceedings against the international jurisdiction of the Swiss courts. In the defendant's opinion the proceedings were required to be conducted at its headquarters in Warsaw in accordance with the Lugano Convention.

The Federal Supreme Court decided that the Lugano Convention was not applicable to revocatory actions under bankruptcy law pursuant to Articles 285 et seq. LP because the latter fulfill the exclusion provision of Article 1(2)(2) of the Lugano Convention. If a revocatory action is filed after the insolvency proceeding is opened, its legal basis is the opening of the insolvency proceeding and results directly from this proceeding. Thus, there is a direct connection between the two proceedings.

In the bases for its judgment the Federal Supreme Court referred to the principles on the interpretation of the Lugano Convention developed by it in previous judgments. In this context it expressly emphasized the requirement to take into account the case law of both the ECJ and the courts of the EU Member States on the provisions of the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (hereinafter: Brussels Convention) and Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (hereinafter: Brussels I Regulation) in reaching judgment.

The Swiss Federal Supreme Court supported its opinion with the principles of the judgment of the ECJ in the matter of Gourdain v. Nadler of 22 February 1979 (C-133/78). In that judgment, “en comblement de passif social” (for the payment of company debts), a lawsuit specially regulated in French bankruptcy law, is part of bankruptcy and bankruptcy-like proceedings within the meaning of Article 1(2)(2) of the Brussels Convention.

However, the Federal Supreme Court expressly made clear that there are limits to the interpretation of the Lugano Convention oriented toward the case law of the ECJ on the Brussels Convention and the Brussels I Regulation. If the interpretation of the above-named “parallel provisions” are determinatively influenced by the Treaty on the European Communities or by secondary legal acts, the contracting states to the Lugano Convention are not required to take these into account.

The Federal Supreme Court held that the particularly narrow interpretation of the exception provision in bankruptcy matters, which is currently under discussion within the context of Article 1(2)(b) of the Brussels I Regulation (Geimer/Schütze, Europäisches Zivilverfahrensrecht, 2nd Ed., Munich 2004, margin notes 130 et seq. on Article 1) was not applicable to the situation of a Non-EU Member State. In accordance therewith, complementary interpretation of this legal act and Council Regulation (EC) No 1346/2000 of 29 May 2000 on insolvency proceedings (Regulation on Insolvency) must take place. Under this view both regulations must be seen as a unit because they attempt comprehensive rules on international jurisdiction for individual and collective proceedings. If an individual proceeding such as a revocatory action could not be subsumed under the Regulation on Insolvency, in any event it would have to be encompassed within the area of applicability of the Brussels I Regulation. Contrary to the view of the Federal Supreme Court, the exclusion provision as to insolvency matters would not apply under this view.

2. International Jurisdiction

a) General Jurisdiction

Article 2(1) of the Lugano Convention

In its judgment of 23 December 2003 (2005/21) the Federal Supreme Court of Switzerland (Tribunal fédéral) addresses the special problem of the action for release from the debt within the context of Swiss debt collection proceedings, which are governed by the Federal Law on Debt Recovery and Bankruptcy (Loi fédérale sur la poursuite pour dettes et la faillite, hereinafter: LP). This was the first opinion by the Federal Supreme Court regarding jurisdiction over an action for release from the debt within the area of applicability of the Lugano Convention, which is an extremely disputed question in Switzerland.

The legal situation is briefly described as follows:

Enforcement conducted as part of collection proceedings based upon a monetary claim begins with a debt collection request (Art. 67 LP). The competent debt collection office issues a summons for payment to the debtor without substantive assessment of the creditor's request (Art. 69 et seq. LP). The debtor can file a formal complaint against this debt collection request. This results in a suspension of the debt collection proceedings (Art. 78 LP).

If the claim relates to an enforceable judgment or to a title placed on equal footing pursuant to Art. 80 subsec. 2 LP, the creditor can then request a final dismissal of objection (cf. Art. 80 LP). The debtor is limited to the objections set forth in Art. 81 of repayment, deferral of payment, or the tolling of the statute of limitations since the judgment was issued. This proceeding is generally viewed as an enforcement proceeding and allocated within the area of applicability of Art. 16(5) of the Lugano Convention.

The situation is different in regard to provisional dismissal of objection proceedings pursuant to Art. 82 et seq., set forth below.

If the claim relates to a debt established by a public document or an acknowledgment of debt confirmed by signature, the creditor can (only) request a provisional dismissal of objection (Art. 82 LP). A provisional asset seizure of the objects against which enforcement is intended to take place, thus, becomes possible. The debtor can lodge an action for release from the debt within 20 days of the dismissal of objection (Art. 83 subsec. 2 LP). If he misses the deadline, the provisional dismissal of objection becomes final (Art. 83 subsec. (3) LP).

The provisional dismissal of objection proceedings also begins without substantive assessment of the claim, however, in the proceedings on the action for release from the debt the debtor can raise substantive law objections against the claim. The court decides on the existence of the claim in a “regular proceeding” (cf. Art. 83 subsec. (2) LP). The action for release from the debt thus contains an action for a negative declaratory judgment to deny the substantive law claim. As a result, the choice of provisional dismissal of objection proceedings offers the creditor the advantage of a quick and low-cost proceeding placing on the debtor the burden of initiating a court decision regarding the existence of the claim while avoiding the filing of an action for specific performance.

The judgment of the Federal Supreme Court was based upon the following set of facts:

A bank headquartered in France had loaned money to a French company. A, headquartered in Switzerland, provided a guarantee for the repayment of the loan claim. The French company did not meet its repayment obligation. Therefore the bank claimed against A as to its guarantee for repayment of the remaining amount of the loan. It instituted debt collection proceedings against it before the Swiss courts and obtained a summons for payment. After A lodged a formal objection against this, the bank applied for a provisional dismissal of objection, which also was granted. Subsequent thereto debtor A filed an action for release from the debt in Switzerland (action en libération de dette) pursuant to Article 83 subsec. (2) LP. The bank objected to the international jurisdiction of the Swiss courts involved. Pursuant to Article 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention, it contended, it must be sued at its headquarters in France. There is no special jurisdiction pursuant to the Lugano Convention.

The Federal Supreme Court confirmed the judgments of the lower courts. It also affirmed the international jurisdiction of the Swiss courts at the location of debt collection proceedings pursuant to Article 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention for the provisional dismissal of objection as well.

The Federal Supreme Court presented the bases of its judgment as follows:

In the determination of the court with international jurisdiction within the context of Article 83 LP, pursuant to Article 30a LP the provisions of the Lugano Convention must also be taken into consideration. Article 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention, which is applicable on its own, enables the debtor to file an action for release from the debt at the place of the debt collection proceedings and, thus, usually at his domicile. The wording of the provision is not contrary to this, because the reference here is not formally to a plaintiff or defendant, but rather, only that “persons domiciled in a Contracting State shall (…) be sued in the courts of that State.” The purpose of the provision relates to persons that are materially in the position of a defendant and not to those who formally assume the role of a defendant in the proceedings. The particular design of Swiss law on debt collection proceedings – other than enforcement law in other legal systems – accords the material role of defendant to the debtor. The proceedings for release from the debt replace the normal proceedings for the creditor in other states. If the creditor itself had taken legal action it would have been required to claim against defendant A before the Swiss courts. The creditor should not benefit from the fact that it made use of a different option for realizing its claim made available by Swiss law. Jurisdiction pursuant to Article 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention also is not displaced by the exclusive jurisdiction pursuant to Article 16(5) of the Lugano Convention. The proceedings on release from the debt are not merely enforcement proceedings within the meaning of the provision, but rather, are an actio negatoria under substantive law. They are aimed at establishing that the claim does not exist or is not enforceable.

In reaching its judgment, the Federal Supreme Court found a parallel to the case decided by the ECJ SAS-Autoteileservice Gmbh v. Pierre Malhé (ECJ of 4 July 1985, C-220/1984). It sees it as the underlying idea of the judgment that persons that must defend themselves at a substantive law level, in principle can defend themselves at their place of domicile

b) Special Jurisdiction

Article 5(1) of the Lugano Convention

aa) In its judgment of 20 August 2003 (No. 2005/25) the Federal Labour Court (Bundesarbeitsgericht, Germany) addressed the question of when an employment relationship exists within the meaning of Article 5(1) 2nd half sentence of the Lugano Convention. The result was a rejection of the international jurisdiction of the German labour courts.

The judgment was based on the following set of facts:

The plaintiff, domiciled in Germany, is a pilot and also an attorney. The defendant operates an alliance of European airlines headquartered in Switzerland. The plaintiff and defendant concluded a framework agreement whereby the plaintiff was to work for one company of the defendant's as pilot and for another company of the defendant's as managing director. Details regarding the scope and conduct of duties were to be contractually agreed with each company. The plaintiff initially worked as managing director and pilot, but then was not employed further.

He filed a lawsuit against the defendant with the German labour courts for a determination that the contractual employment relationship continued to exist, for payment of the agreed compensation, and for contractual damage compensation by the defendant for breaches of obligation. The German labour courts, finding that they lacked international jurisdiction, rejected the lawsuit as inadmissible.

The Federal Labour Court, with reference to the definitions and principles of interpretation developed by the ECJ regarding the Brussels Convention, argued as follows:

International jurisdiction of German labour courts does not arise from Article 5 (1) 2nd half sentence of the Lugano Convention, because an employment agreement was not concluded between the parties. Pursuant to the case law of the ECJ, a fundamental characteristic of an employment relationship is that a person provides services for another in accordance with their instructions during a particular time and for which they receive compensation in return. It is a requirement that the claims made by the employee are directly aimed at the employer. These prerequisites were not fulfilled because the plaintiff did not owe the main services agreed upon to the defendant, but rather, to each subsidiary and, thus, third parties.

With these arguments the Federal Labour Court adhered to the case law of the ECJ on Article 5(1) 2nd half sentence of the Brussels Convention in the matter of Rutten v. Cross (ECJ of 9 January 1997, C-383/95).

The Federal Labour Court consistently subsequently examines the jurisdiction of German courts in accordance with general jurisdiction of the place of performance arising from Article 5(1) 1st half-sentence of the Lugano Convention. It was rejected for the reason that the determinative place of performance was not located in Germany. The place of performance is not autonomous, but rather, to be determined in accordance with the law that is determinative for the disputed obligation (lex causae). In this regard it also depends on the place of performance of the principle contractual obligation if secondary claims, which could be caused by a breach of a collateral duty, are concurrently a subject matter of the legal dispute. From the principle that in the context of the determination of jurisdiction in relation to numerous concurrently asserted obligations arising from one contract collateral matters follow the main matter, the court derives priority of the claims for payment asserted by the plaintiff over the claim for determination. Because the plaintiff at the time of the conclusion of the contract had his usual place of residence in Germany, German law is applicable in the case at issue. Pursuant to section 269 subsec. (1) of the German Civil Code (Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch), the place of performance of the determinative claims for payment is the place where the debtor has his domicile at the time the debt arose, which in this case is the defendant's headquarters in Switzerland.

In this respect the Federal Labour Court also expressly adhered to the case law of the European Court of Justice, in this case to Article 5(1) 1st half-sentence of the Brussels Convention.

bb) In its judgment of 14 June 2004 (No. 2005/42) the Supreme Court of Norway (Høyesterett) addressed the question of which jurisdiction is available under the Lugano Convention when claims for damage compensation are brought based on a breach of an exclusive marketing agreement that relates to the entire territory of a contracting state.

The judgment is based on the following set of facts:

A Finnish company concluded an exclusive marketing agreement with a Norwegian company. In accordance therewith the Norwegian company had the exclusive right to market agricultural machinery of the Finnish company in Norway. In the agreement the Finnish company obligated itself not to make any sales to other Norwegian traders. In breach of this obligation, the Finnish company apparently also sold agricultural machinery where the Norwegian company was located.

Thereafter the Norwegian company filed a lawsuit for damage compensation based upon breach of the exclusive marketing agreement at the court where its headquarters are located.

The Norwegian Supreme Court rejected the applicability of Article 5(1) 1st half sentence of the Lugano Convention. In its judgment the court took account not only of the case law of the ECJ, in particular here the judgment of 19 February 2002 in the matter of Besicks v. WABAG, but also referred to – at the suggestion of the plaintiff – the case law of EU Member States, in this case one from the Netherlands (Nederlandse Jurisprudentie 1991, No. 676) and a Danish judgment (UfR 1991, p. 244).

The Norwegian Supreme Court presented the bases of its judgment as follows:

The obligation that is determinative regarding the place of performance is the obligation to refrain from action arising from the exclusive marketing agreement. This obligation to refrain from action relates to the entire Norwegian market and, thus, does not exist in just one location. However, the wording of Article 5(1) 1st half sentence of the Lugano Convention requires the determination of a specific place (of performance). The provision does not generally reference the courts of a state, but rather the court in one location. The provision, thus, also requires connection to a specific court location because it not only governs international jurisdiction, but also venue.

Article 5(1) 1st half sentence of the Lugano Convention also cannot be extensively interpreted as an exception provision to Article 2. Otherwise the principle in the Convention that the defendant is to be sued before the courts of his domicile could be undermined.

In the bases for its judgment the Norwegian Supreme Court expressly relied upon the case law of the ECJ on Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention. The ECJ found the provision inapplicable when the place of performance of the obligation that is the object of the proceedings cannot be determined because the disputed contractual obligation is a geographically unlimited prohibition of competition to be performed or that would be performed at numerous locations. In such a case jurisdiction can only be determined pursuant to Article 2 (1) of the Lugano Convention (cf. ECJ of 19 February 2002, Besicks v. WA-BAG).

It must be noted that the facts at the basis of the ECJ judgment last mentioned differ from those at issue here in that there the obligation to refrain from action extended to a number of Member States, while the obligation to refrain from action here only related to one Member State, although to numerous possible locations within this Member State. Currently, a more comparable case is before the ECJ for interpretation. The object of the proceedings, however, is not an obligation to refrain from action but supply obligations. The Supreme Court of Austria (Oberster Gerichtshof) presented the following question for interpretation to the Court of Justice in matter C-386/05:

"Is Article 5(1) (b) of Council Regulation (EC) No. 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (Official Journal 2001, L 12, p. 1) to be interpreted that a seller of movable goods who has his headquarters in the territory of a Member State and agrees to supply goods to a variety of locations in this other Member State to the purchaser who has his headquarters in the territory of a different Member State can be sued by the purchaser in regard to a contract claim relating to all partial deliveries at the sole discretion of the plaintiff before the court of this place (of performance)?"

Article 5(1) and (3) of the Lugano Convention

In its judgment of 30 March 2004 (No. 2005/32), the French Supreme Court (Cour de Cassation) addressed the scope of Article 5(1) and (3) of the Lugano Convention in regard to claims arising from the dissolution of a commercial partnership between the parties.

The Plaintiff, a company headquartered in France, and the defendant, a company headquartered in Austria, worked together in international transportation on a contractual basis. The contract regarding the commercial partnership contained an agreement for a three month termination notice period, which was guaranteed by a contractual penalty. The Austrian company terminated the cooperation without adherence to this notice period. The French company thereafter sued in the French courts for payment of the contractual penalty and for payment of damage compensation based on unfair competition. The Tribunal de Commerce accepted international jurisdiction based on Article 5(3) of the Lugano Convention. The Supreme Court upheld this only in regard to the lawsuit for damages based on unfair competition. Regarding this, it presented the following arguments:

When claims based on contract are brought in addition to claims based on tort (claim for payment of the agreed contractual penalty), the petitioned court can only decide the matter in international jurisdiction if the prerequisites of Article

5(1) of the Lugano Convention are fulfilled. However, there is a lack of conclusive argumentation by the plaintiff for this.

The Supreme Court (France) applies ECJ case law on the relationship of Article 5(1) and (3) of the Brussels Convention to the Lugano Convention (Kalfehlis v. Schröder), however, without express reference thereto.

Article 5(5) of the Lugano Convention

aa) In decision dated 3 February 2003, the Court of Appeal, London, delivered a judgment on the question of interpretation of Article 5(5) of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: A Norwegian bank has a branch situated in London. That branch, hereafter referred to as the defendants, is morgagee of a vessel. Due to default to pay the underlying loan, the vessel was arrested in Panama upon instructions of the branch in London. This arrest caused damage to goods transported by the vessel, and the buyers, hereafter referred to as claimants, wants to sue the defendants.

The claimants argued that the arrest arose out of a London branch loan. Further it was pointed to the fact that it was the London branch that had taken the decision to arrest the vessel and also ordered the arrest, which nevertheless was performed by Panamanian lawyers.

The defendants alleged that according to article 5(5), it was not enough to establish a link with the branch in question; it was also necessary to establish a link between the dispute and the English court. In defending this position it was referred to two decisions by the ECJ, first Somafer v Saar Fern Gas AG [1978] ECR 2183 and secondly Lloyd's Register of Shipping v Society Campenon Bernard [1995] ECR I-961.

The court stated that the legal question was whether article 5(5) conferred jurisdiction to the English court.

As to the interpretation of article 5(5), the court first turned to the commentary to the Brussels Convention by Jenard specifying, "adoption of the special rule on jurisdiction is justified by the fact that there must be a close connecting factor between the dispute and the court with jurisdiction to resolve it". Furthermore the court referred to observations by the ECJ, which echoed that proposition.

The court also briefly mentioned the rejection by the lower court of the argument by the claimants that jurisdiction could be established under article 5(3) on the ground that England was the place where the harmful event occurred. The lower court admitted that there is a connection between the decision to order arrest and the interference with the contracts of carriage that ultimately led to the damage. However, it is not a "particular close connecting factor", which is the relevant applicable criterion in order to uphold the restrictive approach to the application of article 5. This part of the judgment by the lower court is not appealed.

Regarding the two judgments by ECJ that the defendants referred to, the court stated that they were to be given their natural effect. When it comes to the Lloyd's Register case, it demonstrates that there must be a link between the branch and the dispute so as to render it natural to describe the dispute as one arising out of the activities of the branch. When the claim is in tort, the events that give rise to liability can vary widely. However, instead of going into a specific analysis of this issue, the court turned to some general observations of article 5. This article addresses specific causes of action except for paragraph 5, which is of general application.

The court then expressed its support for the conclusions of the Advocate General in the Lloyd's Register case. There the purpose of article 5(5) is seen as approximating the place where a branch carries on with business with third parties to the point of departure of the first paragraph of article 2 – regardless of where the underlying activity takes place. Subsequently, the court pointed out that the correct comparison was the connection between the dispute and London, with the connection between the dispute and Norway. That analysis led to the conclusion that the dispute arose out of the activities of the defendants' London branch. The agreement was negotiated in London, the decision to enforce the security over the vessel was taken in London and finally it was also the London branch that gave instructions to enforce the security and the power of the attorney to enable it to be done.

bb) In decision dated 2. March 2004, the Court of Appeal (Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf) in Germany, delivered a judgment on the question of interpretation of Article 5(5) of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: A German company gave a loan to a Polish company. The purpose was to establish a branch in Germany. Later the loan was defaulted. Consequently the German company sued the Polish company in Germany on the ground that the Polish company had a branch in Germany.

The claimant – the German company – argued that the court had jurisdiction with respect of the Polish company. The Polish company had a branch in Germany and the loan should finance the establishment of that branch.

The defendant – the Polish company – opposed this, arguing that the German court did not have jurisdiction.

The court stated that the legal question was whether article 5(5) conferred jurisdiction to the German court.

With reference to the ECJ decision in Somafer v Saar Fern Gas AG [1978] ECR 2183, the court found that the branch of the Polish company met the criteria decided on by that judgment. The court pointed out that the Polish company had decided upon the establishment of a German branch which was subordinated the Polish board of directors. The branch had also entered into contracts with German companies. That the application for registration of the branch had been withdrawn did not change that conclusion, as the business did not seize to exist in Germany. The branch was only being moved to a neighbouring city.

Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 9 June 2004, the Swiss Supreme Court (Bundesgericht), delivered a judgment on the question of the interpretation of Article 6(1) of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: The customers to a Swiss tailor paid by transferring money to an invoice company owned by the tailor's wife. The couple divorced and the tailor moved to Austria. The invoice company thereafter sued the tailor as well as one customer. The lower Swiss court (Bezirksgericht Bischofszell) dismissed the claim against the customer. As regards the claim against the ex-husband, the court found that it did not have jurisdiction. The appeal court (Obergericht des Kanton Thurgau) upheld that judgment. The case was then brought before the Swiss Supreme Court (Bundesgericht).

The claimant – the invoice company – argued that the court had jurisdiction with respect of both defendants, cf. article 6(1) "more than one defendant".

The defendants – the ex-husband and one customer – argued that the Swiss court did not have jurisdiction.

The court upheld the decision to dismiss the claim against the customer. In situations where there is a dispute regarding a cession agreement between a cessionary and a cedent, it cannot under any circumstances involve the debtor.

As regards the ex-husband, the legal question is whether article 6(1) confer jurisdiction to the Swiss court. As a point of departure the court states that, as this is an exception to the basic principle of domicile in article 2, it is necessary to apply a restrictive interpretation of article 6(1). According to the court, one condition when applying article 6(1) is that there is such a connection between the claims that a joint decision is necessary in order to avoid conflicting judgments. The court further stated that it is up to the national courts to examine whether this requirement is fulfilled.

The court cannot find that such connection exists between the defendants. The claim against the customer cannot be upheld for reasons described above. Consequently, conflicting judgments against the customer and the ex-husband, cannot occur either.

It is true that this result is based on an assessment of the underlying claim against the customer. Is must nevertheless be acceptable in this case as it is obvious that that claim cannot succeed. Due to the costs of legal procedure, it is justifiable to dismiss the claims.

c) Jurisdiction over Consumer Contracts

Article 13(3) of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 13 October 2004, the Appeal Committee of the Supreme Court (Høyesteretts kjæremålsutvalg) in Norway, delivered a judgment on the question of interpretation of Article 13(3) – consumer contracts – of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: A consumer domiciled in Oslo, Norway, participated in a reality show on TV about cosmetic surgery. The advertisement for participation in this TV programme was done in Norway. Except for the invitation to undergo cosmetic surgery, the ad mentioned neither the doctor nor the clinic. Prior to participation she signed two contracts, one in Oslo with the television company, and one in Malmö, Sweden with the doctor and the clinic. After the operation she filed a suit against both the doctor who performed the operation and the clinic he is working at, both seated in Malmö.

The claimant – the consumer – argue that the Norwegian court has jurisdiction with respect of the Swedish doctor and clinic.

The defendants – the doctor and the clinic – opposed this, arguing that the Norwegian court did not have jurisdiction.

The court stated that the legal question was whether article 13(3) conferred jurisdiction to the Norwegian court. Both the conditions in article 13 (3) letter a and b must be met in order to deviate from the general provision in article 2.

According to article 13(3) letter a, conclusion of the contract with the consumer must have been “preceded by a specific invitation addressed to him or by advertising” in the state of the consumer’s domicile.

The court found that the connection between the advertisement in Norway and the agreement with the Swedish clinic concerning performance of the surgery, was so closely interrelated that the conditions in article 13(3) letter a was met. Even though the advertisement did not refer to the Swedish clinic, it was obvious that surgery was to be performed. Further, the clinic had a clear interest in this advertisement as it generated new assignments for them. The applicability of this provision is not conditional upon the defendant's own advertising.

Furthermore, it is a requirement according to article 13 (3) letter b that the consumer, in his state of domicile, has taken the steps necessary for the conclusion of the contract.

The court also found that this requirement was met. It was in Oslo that the consumer was introduced to the television program where participation also included cosmetic surgery. The contract, signed in Oslo with the television company included cosmetic surgery performed by the Swedish clinic, and the consumer committed herself to undergo this treatment. The owner of the clinic was also present in Oslo at the time of conclusion of the contract between the consumer and the broadcasting company. He examined her and informed her about the clinic. Due to his arrangement with the broadcasting company, he could offer her a discount.

The clinic argued that the owner was in Oslo only due to the contract with the broadcasting company. The owner solely performed a general assessment of the possible candidates. However, the court found that even if he weren't representing the clinic, the consumer had good reason to assume that. That a more thorough examination was needed prior to the surgery (took place in Malmö) and that the definite contract between the consumer and the clinic also was signed there did not alter the stand of the court. Neither did the fact that the examination in Oslo was only preliminary and that the consumer at that point could have withdrawn from the project if she had wanted to.

The court commented on the wording "steps necessary". Even though it primarily refers to mail orders, the wording nevertheless also covers situations like these. This interpretation was also found to be in line with the general principle of a restrictive approach to the application of provisions on special jurisdiction.

As far as the doctor is concerned, the court's assessment of the suit against the clinic, applies accordingly to the suit against him. Even if the clinic is party to the contract entered into in Sweden, the contract mentions the name of the doctor in question in the title. So, he is regarded as a party to the contract as well. Consequently, his participation in this programme, including the publicity, is such as he may be sued in Oslo on the same grounds as the clinic.

Article 16(2) and article 21 of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 12 November 2004, the England and Wales Court of Appeal, London, delivered a judgment on the question of interpretation of Article 16(2) – exclusive jurisdiction in proceedings regarding companies – of the Lugano Convention. Further, the court also decided upon the relationship between article 16 and article 21 on lis pendens.

As to the facts:
"FOH" is seated in the UK. It is owned by SLEC which is a holding company seated in Jersey. SLEC is owned by two holding companies "Speed" and "Bambino", which are both seated in Jersey. Speed, Bambino FOH and others are all parties to an agreement called the SLEC Shareholders agreement. By clause 30, the parties submit to "the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of Geneva Switzerland". However, it is common ground that this may be displaced, if they apply, by the exclusive jurisdiction provisions of the Judgments Regulation or the Lugano Convention.

The parties to the dispute is on one side Speed and SLEC, and on the other hand Bambino and two individuals domiciled in Switzerland (the Argands), who by Bambino were appointed to the board of directors of FOH. The dispute concerns the legality of that appointment.

The claimants – Speed and SLEC – argue that the court of England and Wales has jurisdiction according to article 16(2) of the Lugano Convention.
The defendants – Bambino and the Argands – oppose this, arguing that the court of Geneva, Switzerland has jurisdiction. Further, The Argands also argue that the Swiss court were first seized and that the English court shall stay its proceedings according to article 21 (lis pendens) of the Lugano-convention.

The appeal court agreed with the court of first instance.

The court of first instance found that the case concerned the composition of the board of directors and consequently fell clearly within article 16(2). That solution also accorded with “practical convenience, and with the reasonable expectations of those involved”. That interpretation involved some expansions of the language of the Article, since it did not strictly concern the “validity” of the constitution or, of any actual board decisions. However, the court found that determining the composition of the Board is “clearly essential for the validity of future decisions”. Further, that interpretation was found to be in line with the objective of assimilation the jurisdiction under the Convention rules to choice-of-law principles of private international law. Finally, support for that interpretation was found in Professor Jenard’s authoritative report concerning article 16(2) where he says: “It is important, in the interests of legal certainty, to avoid conflicting judgments being given as regards the existence of a company or association or as regards the validity of the decisions of its organs.” The defendants however argued in vain that the article should be given a “restrictive” interpretation.

The appeal court supported the view that the real subject matter of the dispute is the composition of the Board of directors. It is not changed by the fact the answer may require one to look beyond the strict limits of the company’s constitution, technically speaking.

As to the stay issue, the Argands showed that Bambino commenced proceedings in Geneva confirming the validity of their appointment, a few days before the proceedings in the UK were served on the Argands. They alleged that since the Swiss court was first seized, the UK court “shall of its own motion stay its proceedings”, according to article 21 in the Lugano convention.

The court found that article 21 on lis pendens did not apply when the second seized court had exclusive jurisdiction. The court first referred to two judgments by the European Court of Justice: Overseas Union Insurance v New Hampshire [1992] and Eric Gasser v MISAT [2004]. However, the first judgment left the question open and the second one only decided upon the relationship between article 21 and article 17 on choice of forum agreements. Nevertheless, in judicial theory this issue had been discussed, and support had been given for the view that article 21 was inapplicable in the second seized court and the latter need not therefore decline to adjudicate. Reference was given to the spirit and policy of the Convention as well as to the fact that the first seized court's judgment would not be entitled to recognition in other Contracting states. Consequently, recognition would not be required to be given to two possibly conflicting judgments. Finally, the court thought that any other solution in fact would not serve any purpose but to increase delay and expenses.

e) Prorogation of Jurisdiction

Article 17(1) of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 16 February 2004, the Court of Appeal, Poznan, delivered a judgement on the question of interpretation of Article 17(1) of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: The company Exact Software Poland Sp. z o.o. in Poznan made (as a licensor) a written offer to the company Prestige S.S. in Poznan (a licensee) for the conclusion of a set of agreements in the area of using computer software. The offer contained, in addition to other terms, the following provision: "The Licensee hereby confirms that it has been acquainted with the General Terms and Conditions and undertakes to act in compliance with the aforementioned rules, unless agreed otherwise." This offer was signed by a person authorised to represent the company Exact Software Poland Sp. z o.o. and the signature was attached below the text quoted above. One of the provisions of the General Terms and Conditions to which the offer refers stipulates that "Any and all disputes arising from or in connection with the agreements shall be heard and resolved by the competent court in the Netherlands. However, if the software was acquired outside the territory of the Netherlands and the above provision is invalid pursuant to the domestic laws, any and all disputes arising from or in connection with the agreements shall be heard and resolved by the competent court of the capital city of the state where the software was acquired."

The claimant (licensee) requested in its petition that the court declare the legal relationship invalid. The defendant (licensor) objected that the case does not fall within the jurisdiction of courts in Poland. The defendant based its objection on Article 17 of the Lugano Convention and Article 1105 (5) of the Polish Civil Procedure Code and requested that the District Court in Poznan dismiss the petition. However, the District Court in Poznan did not satisfy the defendant's request and did not dismiss the petition. It stated in its judgement that the case did not contain a foreign element and, therefore, the defendant's arguments were not relevant.

The defendant filed a complaint to the Court of Appeal, Poznan, against the judgement of the District Court in Poznan on 4 September 2003 under file no. IX GC 290/03. The Court of Appeal rejected the defendant's complaint by its judgement of 16 February 2004, file no. I Acz 2601/03.

In its judgement, the Court of Appeal stated that the contents of Article 17 of the Lugano Convention did not indicate that the conclusion of an agreement on exclusion of Polish courts jurisdiction would be conditional upon the existence of the so-called foreign (international) element in the dispute. Article 17 of the Lugano Convention stipulates that if the parties of which at least one resides in the territory of a contracting state agree that a dispute arising from a certain legal relationship be resolved by a court or courts of a contracting state, then the courts of such Contracting State shall have exclusive jurisdiction. The court jurisdiction clause must be concluded in writing or in verbal form (which must be confirmed) or in another form corresponding to the customs established between both parties. Pursuant to the provisions of Article 1105 (1) of the Polish Civil Procedure Code, the parties may, within the scope of their contractual obligations, agree on writing on excluding the jurisdiction of Polish courts in favour of another country's courts, if permissible pursuant to the laws of such a country. The above provisions of the Lugano Convention and the Polish laws really do not indicate their applicability only to disputes with an international element. For this reason, the statement of the District Court in Poznan that the parties cannot refer to these provisions is incorrect.
The Court of Appeal in its judgement further stated that the agreement between the claimant and the defendant was undoubtedly concluded on the basis of an offer, but only with respect to the offer subject (provision of software, including licence). However, an agreement containing a court jurisdiction clause in a manner stipulated in Article 17 (1) of the Lugano Convention or Article 1105 (1) of the Polish Civil Procedure Code was not concluded. The defendant proved neither the conclusion of such an agreement, nor signing by the claimant of the offer acceptance, including the General Terms and Conditions to which the offer refers. Besides, the General Terms and Conditions were formulated in a way linking the court jurisdiction to the software origin. The defendant did not prove in which state the software was acquired and whether the change of jurisdiction was effective pursuant to the laws of such state.

Finally, it must therefore be stated that the Court of Appeal, Poznan, rejected the defendant's complaint primarily because the defendant could not bear the burden of proof that the application of the provisions of Article 17 (1) of the Lugano Convention or Article 1105 (1) of the Polish Civil Procedure Code was adequate in the given dispute.

f) Lis pendens - Related Actions

Article 21 of the Lugano Convention

The Supreme Court of Austria decided by its judgement dated 28 April 2004 with respect to the issue regulated in the provisions of Article 21 of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: Grazyna J. (the defendant) holds execution against Mag. Stefan C. (the claimant) on the basis of the Regional Court of the City of Warsaw, Poland, dated 21 October 1997, file no. Zl XRC 463/96, with the aim to recovering receivables arising from a failure to pay the alimonies to his wife. The above judgement of the Polish court was declared enforceable in Austria on 29 January 1999.

On 10 January 2000, the claimant filed a petition with the competent Polish court for determination that the obligation to pay alimonies to his ex-wife (the defendant) stipulated by judgement dated 21 October 1997 was already extinct. The claimant further filed an opposition petition on 5 December 2002 with the District Court in Baden, requesting that the claims of his ex-wife set forth in the aforementioned judgement of the Polish court be declared fully extinct. In the opposition petition, the claimant stated that the financial situation of the defendant had significantly improved, while the claimant's income had significantly fallen.

The defendant filed an objection of the lack of jurisdiction pursuant to Article 21 of the Lugano Convention as to the opposition petition. The first instance court satisfied the defendant's objection, declared itself incompetent to decide the case and rejected the opposition petition. It stated that the parties in both proceedings were identical and both disputes related to the same issue (determination of the ex-wife's claims as extinct). The first instance court stated that the petition with it was filed later, which was why it declared itself incompetent in favour of the Polish court to which the petition was delivered already on 10 January 2000.

The Court of Appeal confirmed the judgement of the first instance court. It based its decision on the fact that both Poland and Austria are contracting states to the Lugano Convention and stated that the objective of the petition and the reasons of the claimant's claims were identical in both proceedings and both petitions had the same objective – cancellation of the execution title. The claimant filed a protest against the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 22 May 2003, file no. 16 R 132/03f-9, requesting a review.
The Supreme Court decided to dismiss the protest requesting a review. In its judgement, the court stated that there were no doubts regarding the need to apply the Lugano Convention in this case, which prevails over the Austrian laws. The sense of Article 21 of the Lugano Convention is to eliminate the existence of several proceedings on the same claim before courts of various Contracting States to the Convention, thus eliminating the danger of incompatible judgements that could not be consequently recognised pursuant to Article 27 (3) of the Convention.

The term "identical claim" must be interpreted independently within the context of the Lugano Convention, not pursuant to the application of domestic laws. The identity of the subject of dispute is specified if both petitions have the same basis and relate to the same issue. The claim basis includes the situation and legal regulations on which the petition is based. The Supreme Court stated in the reasoning of its judgement that the first instance court and the Court of Appeal correctly concluded that the termination of execution against the claimant in Austria was only a consequence of the judgement proposed by the claimant in the opposition petition. However, the main objective of the opposition petition was, same as in the case of the petition filed by the claimant with the Polish court on 10 January 2000, the extinction of the claim for alimonies.

As for the reason on which the claimant based his protest, i.e. that the Supreme Court did not provide its opinion on the interpretation of the term "identical claim" in Article 21 of the Lugano Convention, the Supreme Court concluded that this was not a substantial legal issue that needs to be assessed in the given case pursuant to Austrian laws. The only decisive aspect is the independent interpretation of the subject of dispute within the context of the Convention (see above), which was why the claimant's protest against the judgement of the appeal court was dismissed.

3. Provisional, including protective, measures

Article 24 of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 19 March 2004, the Supreme Court in the Netherlands delivered the judgement on the question of interpretation of Article 24 of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: The company Koninklijke Philips Electronics N.V. (hereinafter "Philips") is the holder of rights pertaining to specific European patents relating to information carriers in the form of a compact disc. These discs are also known as "recordable CDs" or CD-R. The companies Postech, Princo Tai-wan, and Princo Switzerland manufacture and trade CD-Rs. The companies Postech and Princo Tai-wan have their registered office in Tai-wan, the company Princo Switzerland has its registered office in Switzerland. Philips was of the opinion that the above foreign companies breach the European patents of which it is a holder. Based on an applicable EU Regulation on piracy, it applied with the Dutch customs authorities to inform it of the occurrence of CD-R shipments sent from Tai-wan by the companies Postech c.s. and Princo Tai-wan. The Dutch customs authorities identified in total six such shipments and informed of them the company Philips that restrained them upon a court order.

Subsequently, Philips invited Postech and 7 other companies to participate in summary proceedings before the Court in s'Gravenhage. It requested that Postech be prohibited from violating the patent rights of Philips and that the court order Postech to withdraw its CD-Rs and ensure their liquidation. In its judgement dated 11 January 2001, the Court in s'Gravenhage confirmed the requested measures against Postech.

Postech filed an appeal against the judgement in which it objected in particular the lack of the international jurisdiction of the Dutch court. The Court of Appeal in s'Gravenhage cancelled the disputed first instance judgement and resolved the case following complex evidence proceedings by prohibiting the company Postech and each of its members individually from violating the rights of Philips in the Netherlands subject to financial sanctions only.

Philips filed a protest (cassation) against this judgement, as the judgement did not grant it a sufficient protection of its intellectual property.

The Supreme Court in its judgement dated 19 March 2004, file no. C02/110 HR, cancelled the judgment of the Court of Appeal in s'Gravenhage of 1 October 2001 and returned the case to this court for new hearing and resolution. The Supreme Court concluded that the Court of Appeal in s'Gravenhage incorrectly assessed its jurisdiction with respect to foreign companies. If a Dutch judge is entitled, pursuant to any rules of the international law, to review a request relating to violation of intellectual property rights in another country, the judge may, if necessary, prohibit unlawful activities carried out abroad. There is no reason for adopting a restriction specified in the judgement of the EC Court of Justice dated 21 May 1980 in the case of Denilauer/ Couchet Fréres in the cases falling outside the formal area of applicability of the EEX or EVEX Treaty. The objective of the Regulation on piracy in EU with respect to Article 8 (1) and point 11 of the Preamble is to enable that the goods violating the intellectual property rights be liquidated without any damage compensation.

4. Recognition and Enforcement

Article 27 (3) of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 27 May 2004, the Svea Court of Appeal (Svea hovrätt) delivered the judgement on the question of interpretation of Article 27 (3) of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: L.N. and C.N. entered into marriage in 1965. On 5 April 1993 a French court decided on their separation. This judgement approved a final agreement between the spouses that stated, among other things, that L.N. undertook to pay alimonies to C.N. amounting to FRF 10,000 to be indexed pursuant to a certain index. The judgement further states that the spouses were instructed of the fact that the judgement may only be transformed from separation to divorce on the basis of their joint proposal. The spouses undertook that this joint proposal would be submitted for decision pursuant to the French laws, unless they agree otherwise.

In 1997, L.N. filed a proposal for the marriage divorce with the District Court in Stockholm. This court passed a partial judgement on the marriage divorce on 9 January 1998. In the proceedings before this court C.N. requested that the District Court in Stockholm confirm the part of the above mentioned French judgement regarding the alimonies since 8 September 1998 and that L.N. be obliged to pay her alimonies amounting to FRF 10,000 as of this date. The District Court in Stockholm dismissed the requests of C.N. in its final judgement dated 13 November 2002. In the reasoning of its judgement it stated that pursuant to the Lugano Convention, the recognition of a French court judgement in Sweden was conditional upon its review by the Court of Appeal. If it is found possible to recognise the French judgement in Sweden in its part relating to the alimonies, there will be an obstacle of a decided case (res iudicata).
The Court of Appeal (as the first instance body) declared in its judgement dated 7 July 2003, on the proposal of C.N., that the above mentioned French judgement in its part relating to the alimonies was exercisable in Sweden. L.N. filed an appeal against this judgement. In the appeal, he stated that the proposal of C.N. should be dismissed pursuant to Article 34 (2) and Article 27 (3) of the Lugano Convention. He performed his alimental obligation towards C.N. until the effectiveness of the Swedish judgement on the divorce. The proposal for declaration of the French judgement on alimonies of 1993 was filed by C.N. only after the issuance of the Swedish court judgement on the divorce. In the opinion of L.N., both judgements were incompatible, because the French judgement was based on a situation when the marriage is not divorced, i.e. its legal existence continues.

C.N. stated with respect to the appeal filed by L.N. that she insisted on the declaration of the French judgement on alimonies of 1993. She considers the judgement compatible with the judgement of the Swedish court on the divorce. Separation of husband and wife pursuant to French laws means that their common life is terminated once for all, which allows for the decision of alimonies. The Swedish laws also grant the wife the right to alimonies, which means that both judgements are not incompatible, but supplementary to each other.

The Svea Court of Appeal decided by the judgement of its appeal body of 27 May 2004, file no. Ö 6034-03, on dismissing the proposal of C.N. for the declaration of the French judgement as exercisable. It explained its judgement by stating that the Court of Appeal (its first instance body) cannot be reviewed pursuant to Article 34 of the Lugano Convention. The proposal for its recognition may only be dismissed for one of the reasons set forth in Article 27 and 28. For this reason, the Court of Appeal dismissed the proposal of L.N. for rejecting the declaration of the French judgement on alimonies as exercisable in Sweden.

At the same time, the Court of Appeal (its appeal body) decided in its judgement dated 27 May 2004 to change the judgement on its first instance body so that the proposal of C.N. for declaration of the French judgement on alimonies be dismissed. In the reasoning of its judgement, it pointed out the incompatibility of both decisions. The French judgement presumed continued existence of the marriage of C.N. and L.N., the husband and wife were released from the obligation to live together, but their obligation to take care of each other still existed (Bell m. fl. Principles of French Law, Oxford University Press, 1998, page 266). The Swedish judgement is incompatible with the French judgement, because it divorces the marriage of C.N. and L.N., which means the marriage termination. When evaluating both judgements with respect to their compatibility or incompatibility, the Court of Appeal (its appeal body) took into consideration a similar judgement of the EC Court dated 4 February 1988, file no. 145/86, in the case of Hofmann / Krieg. In this case, the EC Court decided that the German judgement on alimonies for the separated wife was incompatible with the Dutch judgement on divorce. It is obvious that the proceedings on the proposal of C.N: before the Court of Appeal met the criteria for the rejection of its non-recognition pursuant to Article 27 (3) of the Lugano Convention.

Article 40 of the Lugano Convention

In decision dated 14 July 2004, the Supreme Court in Poland delivered the judgement on the question of interpretation of Article 40 of the Lugano Convention.

As to the facts: The creditor ERMEWA S.A. in Geneva filed a proposal with the Regional Court in Białymstok for the eenforcement of a judgement in contumatiam issued on 1 February 2002 by the first instance Court of the republic and canton of Geneva, under which the debtor Mirosław S. was to pay financial amounts in EUR at the amounts set forth in articles 1 – 28 of the judgement.

The Regional Court in Białymstok found out that the Court in Geneva summoned the parties for the hearing to be held on 17 January 2002. The summons were to be delivered to the defendant, Mirosław S., through the chairperson of the District Court in Białymstok on 2 November 2000, pursuant to Article 5 a) of the Hague Convention. The defendant did not accept the summons letter within the prescribed period after its deposition on the post office. The judgement in contiumatiam issued by the Court in Geneva was delivered to the defendant, Mirosław S., in the same manner, the letter with the judgement not collected at the post office was filed as delivered.

The Regional Court in Białymstok concluded that the first notice delivery was incorrect, because the notice should have been delivered to the defendant in person. The substitute delivery, i.e. the notice deposition with the effect of delivery, is only permissible in the case of further notices and after the addressee has been informed of procedural consequences of such a delivery. Due to the first incorrect delivery of the notice to Mirosław S., the Regional Court in Białymstok dismissed the proposal of the creditor ERMEWA S.A. for the enforcement of the judgement in contiumatiam.

By its decision of 9 June 2003, Court of Appeal in Białymstok changed the judgement of the Regional Court in Białymstok and permitted the enforcement of the judgement against the debtor, Mirosław S. It disagreed with the legal opinion of the District Court and referred to the provisions of Article 139 of the Polish Civil Procedure Code that allows delivery of notices by means of their depositing at a post office or a municipal authority. A notice of such delivery must be inserted into the addressee's mailbox or posted on the door. The debtor filed a protest against the judgement of the Court of Appeal and objected against a breach of specific provisions of the Polish Civil Procedure Code, as well as a breach of Articles 40 (2), Article 34 (2) and 27 (2) of the Lugano Convention.

The Supreme Court cancelled the above mentioned judgement of the Regional Court by its judgement dated 14 June 2004, file no. IV CK 495/03. It stated that it undoubtedly possible to apply the provisions of the Lugano Convention to this case, as both Poland and Switzerland were parties to the Convention. It pointed out that Article 40 of the Lugano Convention did not stipulate a time period for filing an appeal against a judgement on dismissal of the creditor's proposal for the judgement execution. This time period must be determined in compliance with the domestic laws of the country in which the judgement execution is being requested. The appeal must be filed with a court set out in Article 40 of the Lugano Convention, i.e. with a court that will decide on the appeal.

In the given case, the appeal should have been filed within one week of delivery of the judgement of the Regional Court in Białymstok to the creditor and the debtor. The appeal should have been filed with the court that decides on it pursuant to Article 40 of the Lugano Convention, i.e. the Appeal Court. The creditor filed the appeal after the expiry of the one-week period set forth in Article 394 (2) of the Polish Civil Procedure Code with the Regional Court in Białymstok, not with the Appeal Court in Białymstok. For this reason, the Supreme Court cancelled the decision of the Appeal Court challenged by the protest (cassation). At the same time, it stated that the creditor's appeal against the judgement of the Regional Court in Białymstok dated 28 March 2003 was dismissed for the same reasons.

III. Final considerations

The rulings of national courts on the Lugano Convention during the reporting period confirm a tendency already observed in the past several years: The national courts are not only well aware of the case law of the European Court of Justice regarding the parallel provisions of the Brussels Convention and the Brussels I Regulation; indeed, they expressly take it into consideration with the goal of ensuring the uniform interpretation of the provisions of the two parallel conventions.

This is shown not only by the numerous references to ECJ decisions in solving already-familiar problems. The national courts also use the statements of the ECJ, and to some extent those of the parties as well, in the search for solutions to new problems (cf. Court of Appeal, United Kingdom, No. 2005/37). Continuing the ECJ's approach, they seek answers to legal questions that have thus far not been submitted for decision to the ECJ.

In contrast, only in isolated cases were the rulings of the courts of the EU Member States considered as well, consistent with Protocol no. 2 to the Lugano Convention (cf. HØyesterett, Norway, no. 2005/42). In that case as well, this occurred only on the initiative of one of the parties to the proceedings.

Finally, it should be emphasised that the limits of the binding nature of ECJ case law on the courts with regard to the Brussels parallel convention in the scope of the Lugano Convention are being increasingly addressed and placed in more precise terms (cf. Federal Court, Switzerland, no. 2005/23).

[Final Act of the Twentieth Session]

CONVENTION ON CHOICE OF COURT AGREEMENTS
(Concluded 30 June 2005)

The States Parties to the present Convention, Desiring to promote international trade and investment through enhanced judicial co-operation,
Believing that such co-operation can be enhanced by uniform rules on jurisdiction and on recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments in civil or commercial matters,
Believing that such enhanced co-operation requires in particular an international legal regime that provides certainty and ensures the effectiveness of exclusive choice of court agreements between parties to commercial transactions and that governs the recognition and enforcement of judgments resulting from proceedings based on such agreements,
Have resolved to conclude this Convention and have agreed upon the following provisions -

CHAPTER I – SCOPE AND DEFINITIONS

Article 1 Scope
1. This Convention shall apply in international cases to exclusive choice of court agreements concluded in civil or commercial matters.

3. For the purposes of Chapter III, a case is international where recognition or enforcement of a foreign judgment is sought.

Article 2 Exclusions from scope

p) the validity of entries in public registers.
3. Notwithstanding paragraph 2, proceedings are not excluded from the scope of this Convention where a matter excluded under that paragraph arises merely as a preliminary question and not as an object of the proceedings. In particular, the mere fact that a matter excluded under paragraph 2 arises by way of defence does not exclude proceedings from the Convention, if that matter is not an object of the proceedings.
4. This Convention shall not apply to arbitration and related proceedings.
5. Proceedings are not excluded from the scope of this Convention by the mere fact that a State, including a government, a governmental agency or any person acting for a State, is a party thereto.
6. Nothing in this Convention shall affect privileges and immunities of States or of international organisations, in respect of themselves and of their property.

Article 3 Exclusive choice of court agreements

b) a choice of court agreement which designates the courts of one Contracting State or one or more specific courts of one Contracting State shall be deemed to be exclusive unless the parties have expressly provided otherwise;
c) an exclusive choice of court agreement must be concluded or documented -

i) in writing; or
d) an exclusive choice of court agreement that forms part of a contract shall be treated as an agreement independent of the other terms of the contract. The validity of the exclusive choice of court agreement cannot be contested solely on the ground that the contract is not valid.

Article 4 Other definitions
1. In this Convention, "judgment" means any decision on the merits given by a court, whatever it may be called, including a decree or order, and a determination of costs or expenses by the court (including an officer of the court), provided that the determination relates to a decision on the merits which may be recognised or enforced under this Convention. An interim measure of protection is not a judgment.
2. For the purposes of this Convention, an entity or person other than a natural person shall be considered to be resident in the State -

a) where it has its statutory seat;
b) under whose law it was incorporated or formed;
c) where it has its central administration; or

d) where it has its principal place of business.

CHAPTER II – JURISDICTION

Article 5 Jurisdiction of the chosen court

1. The court or courts of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement shall have jurisdiction to decide a dispute to which the agreement applies, unless the agreement is null and void under the law of that State.
2. A court that has jurisdiction under paragraph 1 shall not decline to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that the dispute should be decided in a court of another State.
3. The preceding paragraphs shall not affect rules -

a) on jurisdiction related to subject matter or to the value of the claim;
b) on the internal allocation of jurisdiction among the courts of a Contracting State. However, where the chosen court has discretion as to whether to transfer a case, due consideration should be given to the choice of the parties.

Article 6 Obligations of a court not chosen

A court of a Contracting State other than that of the chosen court shall suspend or dismiss proceedings to which an exclusive choice of court agreement applies unless -

a) the agreement is null and void under the law of the State of the chosen court;
b) a party lacked the capacity to conclude the agreement under the law of the State of the court seised;
c) giving effect to the agreement would lead to a manifest injustice or would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the State of the court seised;
d) for exceptional reasons beyond the control of the parties, the agreement cannot reasonably be performed; or
e) the chosen court has decided not to hear the case.

Article 7 Interim measures of protection

Interim measures of protection are not governed by this Convention. This Convention neither requires nor precludes the grant, refusal or termination of interim measures of protection by a court of a Contracting State and does not affect whether or not a party may request or a court should grant, refuse or terminate such measures.

CHAPTER III – RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 8 Recognition and enforcement

1. A judgment given by a court of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement shall be recognised and enforced in other Contracting States in accordance with this Chapter. Recognition or enforcement may be refused only on the grounds specified in this Convention.
2. Without prejudice to such review as is necessary for the application of the provisions of this Chapter, there shall be no review of the merits of the judgment given by the court of origin. The court addressed shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of origin based its jurisdiction, unless the judgment was given by default.
3. A judgment shall be recognised only if it has effect in the State of origin, and shall be enforced only if it is enforceable in the State of origin.

4. Recognition or enforcement may be postponed or refused if the judgment is the subject of review in the State of origin or if the time limit for seeking ordinary review has not expired. A refusal does not prevent a subsequent application for recognition or enforcement of the judgment.
5. This Article shall also apply to a judgment given by a court of a Contracting State pursuant to a transfer of the case from the chosen court in that Contracting State as permitted by Article 5, paragraph 3. However, where the chosen court had discretion as to whether to transfer the case to another court, recognition or enforcement of the judgment may be refused against a party who objected to the transfer in a timely manner in the State of origin.

Article 9 Refusal of recognition or enforcement Recognition or enforcement may be refused if -

a) the agreement was null and void under the law of the State of the chosen court, unless the chosen court has determined that the agreement is valid;
b) a party lacked the capacity to conclude the agreement under the law of the requested State;
c) the document which instituted the proceedings or an equivalent document, including the essential elements of the claim,

i) was not notified to the defendant in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant entered an appearance and presented his case without contesting notification in the court of origin, provided that the law of the State of origin permitted notification to be contested; or
ii) was notified to the defendant in the requested State in a manner that is incompatible with fundamental principles of the requested State concerning service of documents;
d) the judgment was obtained by fraud in connection with a matter of procedure;
e) recognition or enforcement would be manifestly incompatible with the public policy of the requested State, including situations where the specific proceedings leading to the judgment were incompatible with fundamental principles of procedural fairness of that State;
f) the judgment is inconsistent with a judgment given in the requested State in a dispute between the same parties; or
g) the judgment is inconsistent with an earlier judgment given in another State between the same parties on the same cause of action, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the requested State.

Article 10 Preliminary questions
1. Where a matter excluded under Article 2, paragraph 2, or under Article 21, arose as a preliminary question, the ruling on that question shall not be recognised or enforced under this Convention.
2. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment was based on a ruling on a matter excluded under Article 2, paragraph 2.
3. However, in the case of a ruling on the validity of an intellectual property right other than copyright or a related right, recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused or postponed under the preceding paragraph only where -

a) that ruling is inconsistent with a judgment or a decision of a competent authority on that matter given in the State under the law of which the intellectual property right arose; or
b) proceedings concerning the validity of the intellectual property right are pending in that State.
4. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment was based on a ruling on a matter excluded pursuant to a declaration made by the requested State under Article 21.

Article 11 Damages

1. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment awards damages, including exemplary or punitive damages, that do not compensate a party for actual loss or harm suffered.
2. The court addressed shall take into account whether and to what extent the damages awarded by the court of origin serve to cover costs and expenses relating to the proceedings.

Article 12 Judicial settlements (transactions judiciaires)

Judicial settlements (transactions judiciaires) which a court of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement has approved, or which have been concluded before that court in the course of proceedings, and which are enforceable in the same manner as a judgment in the State of origin, shall be enforced under this Convention in the same manner as a judgment.

Article 13 Documents to be produced

1. The party seeking recognition or applying for enforcement shall produce -

a) a complete and certified copy of the judgment;
b) the exclusive choice of court agreement, a certified copy thereof, or other evidence of its existence;
c) if the judgment was given by default, the original or a certified copy of a document establishing that the document which instituted the proceedings or an equivalent document was notified to the defaulting party;
d) any documents necessary to establish that the judgment has effect or, where applicable, is enforceable in the State of origin;
e) in the case referred to in Article 12, a certificate of a court of the State of origin that the judicial settlement or a part of it is enforceable in the same manner as a judgment in the State of origin.
2. If the terms of the judgment do not permit the court addressed to verify whether the conditions of this Chapter have been complied with, that court may require any necessary documents.
3. An application for recognition or enforcement may be accompanied by a document, issued by a court (including an officer of the court) of the State of origin, in the form recommended and published by the Hague Conference on Private International Law.
4. If the documents referred to in this Article are not in an official language of the requested State, they shall be accompanied by a certified translation into an official language, unless the law of the requested State provides otherwise.

Article 14 Procedure

The procedure for recognition, declaration of enforceability or registration for enforcement, and the enforcement of the judgment, are governed by the law of the requested State unless this Convention provides otherwise. The court addressed shall act expeditiously.

Article 15 Severability

Recognition or enforcement of a severable part of a judgment shall be granted where recognition or enforcement of that part is applied for, or only part of the judgment is capable of being recognised or enforced under this Convention.

CHAPTER IV – GENERAL CLAUSES

Article 16 Transitional provisions
1. This Convention shall apply to exclusive choice of court agreements concluded after its entry into force for the State of the chosen court.
2. This Convention shall not apply to proceedings instituted before its entry into force for the State of the court seised.

Article17 Contracts of insurance and reinsurance
1. Proceedings under a contract of insurance or reinsurance are not excluded from the scope of this Convention on the ground that the contract of insurance or reinsurance relates to a matter to which this Convention does not apply.
2. Recognition and enforcement of a judgment in respect of liability under the terms of a contract of insurance or reinsurance may not be limited or refused on the ground that the liability under that contract includes liability to indemnify the insured or reinsured in respect of -

a) a matter to which this Convention does not apply; or
b) an award of damages to which Article 11 might apply.

Article 18 No legalisation

All documents forwarded or delivered under this Convention shall be exempt from legalisation or any analogous formality, including an Apostille.

Article 19 Declarations limiting jurisdiction
A State may declare that its courts may refuse to determine disputes to which an exclusive choice of court agreement applies if, except for the location of the chosen court, there is no connection between that State and the parties or the dispute.

Article 20 Declarations limiting recognition and enforcement
A State may declare that its courts may refuse to recognise or enforce a judgment given by a court of another Contracting State if the parties were resident in the requested State, and the relationship of the parties and all other elements relevant to the dispute, other than the location of the chosen court, were connected only with the requested State.

Article 21 Declarations with respect to specific matters
1. Where a State has a strong interest in not applying this Convention to a specific matter, that State may declare that it will not apply the Convention to that matter. The State making such a declaration shall ensure that the declaration is no broader than necessary and that the specific matter excluded is clearly and precisely defined.
2. With regard to that matter, the Convention shall not apply -

a) in the Contracting State that made the declaration;
b) in other Contracting States, where an exclusive choice of court agreement designates the courts, or one or more specific courts, of the State that made the declaration.

Article 22 Reciprocal declarations on non-exclusive choice of court agreements
1. A Contracting State may declare that its courts will recognise and enforce judgments given by courts of other Contracting States designated in a choice of court agreement concluded by two or more parties that meets the requirements of Article 3, paragraph c), and designates, for the purpose of deciding disputes which have arisen or may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, a court or courts of one or more Contracting States (a non-exclusive choice of court agreement).

2. Where recognition or enforcement of a judgment given in a Contracting State that has made such a declaration is sought in another Contracting State that has made such a declaration, the judgment shall be recognised and enforced under this Convention, if -

a) the court of origin was designated in a non-exclusive choice of court agreement;
b) there exists neither a judgment given by any other court before which proceedings could be brought in accordance with the non-exclusive choice of court agreement, nor a proceeding pending between the same parties in any other such court on the same cause of action; and
c) the court of origin was the court first seised.

Article 23 Uniform interpretation
In the interpretation of this Convention, regard shall be had to its international character and to the need to promote uniformity in its application.

Article 24 Review of operation of the Convention
The Secretary General of the Hague Conference on Private International Law shall at regular intervals make arrangements for -

a) review of the operation of this Convention, including any declarations; and
b) consideration of whether any amendments to this Convention are desirable.

Article 25 Non-unified legal systems
1. In relation to a Contracting State in which two or more systems of law apply in different territorial units with regard to any matter dealt with in this Convention -

a) any reference to the law or procedure of a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to the law or procedure in force in the relevant territorial unit;
b) any reference to residence in a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to residence in the relevant territorial unit;
c) any reference to the court or courts of a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to the court or courts in the relevant territorial unit;
d) any reference to a connection with a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to a connection with the relevant territorial unit.
2. Notwithstanding the preceding paragraph, a Contracting State with two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply shall not be bound to apply this Convention to situations which involve solely such different territorial units.
3. A court in a territorial unit of a Contracting State with two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply shall not be bound to recognise or enforce a judgment from another Contracting State solely because the judgment has been recognised or enforced in another territorial unit of the same Contracting State under this Convention.
4. This Article shall not apply to a Regional Economic Integration Organisation.

Article 26 Relationship with other international instruments

1. This Convention shall be interpreted so far as possible to be compatible with other treaties in force for Contracting States, whether concluded before or after this Convention.
2. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty, whether concluded before or after this Convention, in cases where none of the parties is resident in a Contracting State that is not a Party to the treaty.
3. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty that was concluded before this Convention entered into force for that Contracting State, if applying this Convention would be inconsistent with the obligations of that Contracting State to any non-Contracting State. This paragraph shall also apply to treaties that revise or replace a treaty concluded before this Convention entered into force for that Contracting State, except to the extent that the revision or replacement creates new inconsistencies with this Convention.
4. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty, whether concluded before or after this Convention, for the purposes of obtaining recognition or enforcement of a judgment given by a court of a Contracting State that is also a Party to that treaty. However, the judgment shall not be recognised or enforced to a lesser extent than under this Convention.
5. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty which, in relation to a specific matter, governs jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments, even if concluded after this Convention and even if all States concerned are Parties to this Convention. This paragraph shall apply only if the Contracting State has made a declaration in respect of the treaty under this paragraph. In the case of such a declaration, other Contracting States shall not be obliged to apply this Convention to that specific matter to the extent of any inconsistency, where an exclusive choice of court agreement designates the courts, or one or more specific courts, of the Contracting State that made the declaration.
6. This Convention shall not affect the application of the rules of a Regional Economic Integration Organisation that is a Party to this Convention, whether adopted before or after this Convention -

a) where none of the parties is resident in a Contracting State that is not a Member State of the Regional Economic Integration Organisation;
b) as concerns the recognition or enforcement of judgments as between Member States of the Regional Economic Integration Organisation.

COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

Brussels, 5.9.2008
COM(2008) 538 final

Proposal for a

COUNCIL DECISION

on the signing by the European Community of the Convention on Choice-of-Court Agreements

(presented by the Commission)

{SEC(2008) 2389}
{SEC(2008) 2390}

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

Objective

1. The Convention on Choice-of-Court Agreements was concluded on the 30 June 2005 under The Hague Conference on Private International Law. The Convention is designed to offer greater certainty and predictability for parties involved in business-to-business agreements and international litigation by creating an optional worldwide judicial alternative to the existing arbitration system.

2. Conclusion of the Convention by the Community would reduce legal uncertainty for EU companies trading outside the EU by ensuring that choice-of-court agreements included in their international trading contracts were respected, and by ensuring that the judgements issued by the courts designated in such agreements would be eligible for recognition in the other Contracting Parties to the Convention.

3. The European Commission negotiated the Convention on behalf of the European Community on the basis of a Council Decision, and the resulting Convention is in line with the negotiating guidelines given by the Council.

Development of a common judicial area within the Community

4. The European Community has set itself the objective of creating a genuine judicial area based on the principle of mutual recognition of judicial decisions.

5. Conclusion of the Convention by the Community would complement realisation of the aims underlying existing Community rules on recognition and enforcement of judgments, in particular Regulation (EC) 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on the jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters ("the Brussels I Regulation"), by creating a harmonised set of rules within the Community in respect of third countries which will become Contracting Parties to the Convention.

The 2005 Choice-of-Court Convention

6. The objective of the Convention is to promote international trade and investment through enhanced judicial cooperation by introducing uniform rules on jurisdiction based on exclusive choice-of-court agreements and on recognition and enforcement of judgments given by the chosen courts in its Contracting States. The aim of the Convention is to improve legal certainty and predictability in enforcement of decisions relating to international commerce.

7. The Convention seeks to achieve a balance between (i) the need to guarantee to the parties that only the courts chosen by them will hear the case and that the resulting judgment will be recognised and enforced abroad, and (ii) the need to allow States to pursue some aspects of their public policy related in particular to protection of weaker parties, protection against serious unfairness in particular situations and guaranteed respect for some grounds of exclusive jurisdiction of States.

8. The relationship between the rules contained in the Convention and the existing and future Community rules is set out in Article 26(6) of the Convention as follows:

"This Convention shall not affect the application of the rules of a Regional Economic Integration Organisation that is a Party to this Convention, whether adopted before or after this Convention

a) where none of the parties is resident in a Contracting State that is not a Member State of the Regional Economic Integration Organisation;

b) as concerns the recognition or enforcement of judgments as between Member States of the regional Economic Integration Organisation."

9. Consequently the Convention affects the application of the Brussels I Regulation if at least one of the parties is resident in a Contracting State to the Convention, with the exception of the rules on recognition and enforcement contained therein.

10. The Convention contains the possibility for a Regional Economic Integration Organisation to conclude the Convention together with its Member States (Article 29) or alone, with the consequence of binding its Member States (Article 30).

Commission proposals

11. According to the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice[1], the issues of international jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments with respect to third countries come under exclusive external Community competence. Consequently, the European Community will conclude the Convention while using Article 30 thereof.

12. Article 30 of the Convention allows the European Community to make a declaration, at the time of signing, acceptance, approval or accession, saying that it exercises competence over all the matters governed by the Convention and that its Member States will not be Parties to the Convention, but shall be bound by it. In view of the political importance to third countries of the Community signing the Convention, it is advisable to make such a declaration at the time of signing to clarify the situation as to the lack of signatures by those Member States of the European Community which have transferred competence to the European Community.

13. The Commission has prepared an Impact Assessment on conclusion of the Convention by the European Community which is annexed to this proposal. The Impact Assessment concludes that conclusion of the Convention may be beneficial to promoting legal certainty and predictability for European businesses in respect of third countries.

14. The Impact Assessment also indicates that it might be necessary for the Community to make a declaration under Article 21 of the Convention and thereby exclude from the scope of the Convention matters relating to insurance contracts where the policyholder is domiciled in the EU and the risk or insured event, item or property is related exclusively to the EU and copyright and related rights where the validity of these rights is linked to a Member State.

[1] Judgment of the Court of 31 March 1971, Case 22-70, Commission v Council — European Agreement on Road Transport, Opinion 1/03 of the Court of 7 February 2006 on the competence of the Community to conclude the new Lugano Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters.

15. Declarations under Article 21 of the Convention can be made at any time. It is suggested that such declarations be made at the time of conclusion of the Convention by the Community, as the feasibility and the extent of such exclusions need to be further examined. This process will also be informed by the discussions of the follow-up to the forthcoming Commission Report on application of the Brussels I Regulation.

Proposal for a

m) the validity, nullity, or dissolution of legal persons, and the validity of decisions of their organs;

n) the validity of intellectual property rights other than copyright and related rights;

o) infringement of intellectual property rights other than copyright and related rights, except where infringement proceedings are brought for breach of a contract between the parties relating to such rights, or could have been brought for breach of that contract;

p) the validity of entries in public registers.

3. Notwithstanding paragraph 2, proceedings are not excluded from the scope of this Convention where a matter excluded under that paragraph arises merely as a preliminary question and not as an object of the proceedings. In particular, the mere fact that a matter excluded under paragraph 2 arises by way of defence does not exclude proceedings from the Convention, if that matter is not an object of the proceedings.

4. This Convention shall not apply to arbitration and related proceedings.

5. Proceedings are not excluded from the scope of this Convention by the mere fact that a State, including a government, a governmental agency or any person acting for a State, is a party thereto.

6. Nothing in this Convention shall affect privileges and immunities of States or of international organisations, in respect of themselves and of their property.

Article 3 Exclusive choice of court agreements

For the purposes of this Convention -

a) "exclusive choice of court agreement" means an agreement concluded by two or more parties that meets the requirements of paragraph c) and designates, for the purpose of deciding disputes which have arisen or may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, the courts of one Contracting State or one or more specific courts of one Contracting State to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of any other courts;

b) a choice of court agreement which designates the courts of one Contracting State or one or more specific courts of one Contracting State shall be deemed to be exclusive unless the parties have expressly provided otherwise;

c) an exclusive choice of court agreement must be concluded or documented -

i) in writing; or

d) an exclusive choice of court agreement that forms part of a contract shall be treated as an agreement independent of the other terms of the contract. The validity of the exclusive choice of court agreement cannot be contested solely on the ground that the contract is not valid.

Article 4 Other definitions

1. In this Convention, "judgment" means any decision on the merits given by a court, whatever it may be called, including a decree or order, and a determination of costs or expenses by the court (including an officer of the court), provided that the determination relates to a decision on the merits which may be recognised or enforced under this Convention. An interim measure of protection is not a judgment.

2. For the purposes of this Convention, an entity or person other than a natural person shall be considered to be resident in the State -

a) where it has its statutory seat;

b) under whose law it was incorporated or formed;

c) where it has its central administration; or

d) where it has its principal place of business.

CHAPTER II – JURISDICTION

Article 5 Jurisdiction of the chosen court

1. The court or courts of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement shall have jurisdiction to decide a dispute to which the agreement applies, unless the agreement is null and void under the law of that State.

2. A court that has jurisdiction under paragraph 1 shall not decline to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that the dispute should be decided in a court of another State.

3. The preceding paragraphs shall not affect rules -

a) on jurisdiction related to subject matter or to the value of the claim;

b) on the internal allocation of jurisdiction among the courts of a Contracting State. However, where the chosen court has discretion as to whether to transfer a case, due consideration should be given to the choice of the parties.

Article 6 Obligations of a court not chosen

A court of a Contracting State other than that of the chosen court shall suspend or dismiss proceedings to which an exclusive choice of court agreement applies unless -

a) the agreement is null and void under the law of the State of the chosen court;

b) a party lacked the capacity to conclude the agreement under the law of the State of the court seised;

c) giving effect to the agreement would lead to a manifest injustice or would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the State of the court seised;

d) for exceptional reasons beyond the control of the parties, the agreement cannot reasonably be performed; or

e) the chosen court has decided not to hear the case.

Article 7 Interim measures of protection

Interim measures of protection are not governed by this Convention. This Convention neither requires nor precludes the grant, refusal or termination of interim measures of protection by a court of a Contracting State and does not affect whether or not a party may request or a court should grant, refuse or terminate such measures.

CHAPTER III – RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 8 Recognition and enforcement

1. A judgment given by a court of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement shall be recognised and enforced in other Contracting States in accordance with this Chapter. Recognition or enforcement may be refused only on the grounds specified in this Convention.

2. Without prejudice to such review as is necessary for the application of the provisions of this Chapter, there shall be no review of the merits of the judgment given by the court of origin. The court addressed shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of origin based its jurisdiction, unless the judgment was given by default.

3. A judgment shall be recognised only if it has effect in the State of origin, and shall be enforced only if it is enforceable in the State of origin.

4. Recognition or enforcement may be postponed or refused if the judgment is the subject of review in the State of origin or if the time limit for seeking ordinary review has not expired. A refusal does not prevent a subsequent application for recognition or enforcement of the judgment.

5. This Article shall also apply to a judgment given by a court of a Contracting State pursuant to a transfer of the case from the chosen court in that Contracting State as permitted by Article 5, paragraph 3. However, where the chosen court had discretion as to whether to transfer the case to another court, recognition or enforcement of the judgment may be refused against a party who objected to the transfer in a timely manner in the State of origin.

Article 9 Refusal of recognition or enforcement

Recognition or enforcement may be refused if -

a) the agreement was null and void under the law of the State of the chosen court, unless the chosen court has determined that the agreement is valid;

b) a party lacked the capacity to conclude the agreement under the law of the requested State;

c) the document which instituted the proceedings or an equivalent document, including the essential elements of the claim,

i) was not notified to the defendant in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant entered an appearance and presented his case without contesting notification in the court of origin, provided that the law of the State of origin permitted notification to be contested; or

ii) was notified to the defendant in the requested State in a manner that is incompatible with fundamental principles of the requested State concerning service of documents;

d) the judgment was obtained by fraud in connection with a matter of procedure;

e) recognition or enforcement would be manifestly incompatible with the public policy of the requested State, including situations where the specific proceedings leading to the judgment were incompatible with fundamental principles of procedural fairness of that State;

f) the judgment is inconsistent with a judgment given in the requested State in a dispute between the same parties; or

g) the judgment is inconsistent with an earlier judgment given in another State between the same parties on the same cause of action, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the requested State.

Article 10 Preliminary questions

1. Where a matter excluded under Article 2, paragraph 2, or under Article 21, arose as a preliminary question, the ruling on that question shall not be recognised or enforced under this Convention.

2. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment was based on a ruling on a matter excluded under Article 2, paragraph 2.

3. However, in the case of a ruling on the validity of an intellectual property right other than copyright or a related right, recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused or postponed under the preceding paragraph only where -

a) that ruling is inconsistent with a judgment or a decision of a competent authority on that matter given in the State under the law of which the intellectual property right arose; or

b) proceedings concerning the validity of the intellectual property right are pending in that State.

4. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment was based on a ruling on a matter excluded pursuant to a declaration made by the requested State under Article 21.

Article 11 Damages

1. Recognition or enforcement of a judgment may be refused if, and to the extent that, the judgment awards damages, including exemplary or punitive damages, that do not compensate a party for actual loss or harm suffered.

2. The court addressed shall take into account whether and to what extent the damages awarded by the court of origin serve to cover costs and expenses relating to the proceedings.

*Article 12 Judicial settlements (transactions judiciaires)*

Judicial settlements (transactions judiciaires) which a court of a Contracting State designated in an exclusive choice of court agreement has approved, or which have been concluded before that court in the course of proceedings, and which are enforceable in the same manner as a judgment in the State of origin, shall be enforced under this Convention in the same manner as a judgment.

Article 13 Documents to be produced

1. The party seeking recognition or applying for enforcement shall produce -

a) a complete and certified copy of the judgment;

b) the exclusive choice of court agreement, a certified copy thereof, or other evidence of its existence;

c) if the judgment was given by default, the original or a certified copy of a document establishing that the document which instituted the proceedings or an equivalent document was notified to the defaulting party;

d) any documents necessary to establish that the judgment has effect or, where applicable, is enforceable in the State of origin;

e) in the case referred to in Article 12, a certificate of a court of the State of origin that the judicial settlement or a part of it is enforceable in the same manner as a judgment in the State of origin.

2. If the terms of the judgment do not permit the court addressed to verify whether the conditions of this Chapter have been complied with, that court may require any necessary documents.

3. An application for recognition or enforcement may be accompanied by a document, issued by a court (including an officer of the court) of the State of origin, in the form recommended and published by the Hague Conference on Private International Law.

4. If the documents referred to in this Article are not in an official language of the requested State, they shall be accompanied by a certified translation into an official language, unless the law of the requested State provides otherwise.

Article 14 Procedure

The procedure for recognition, declaration of enforceability or registration for enforcement, and the enforcement of the judgment, are governed by the law of the requested State unless this Convention provides otherwise. The court addressed shall act expeditiously.

Article 15 Severability

Recognition or enforcement of a severable part of a judgment shall be granted where recognition or enforcement of that part is applied for, or only part of the judgment is capable of being recognised or enforced under this Convention.

CHAPTER IV – GENERAL CLAUSES

Article 16 Transitional provisions

1. This Convention shall apply to exclusive choice of court agreements concluded after its entry into force for the State of the chosen court.

2. This Convention shall not apply to proceedings instituted before its entry into force for the State of the court seised.

Article17 Contracts of insurance and reinsurance

1. Proceedings under a contract of insurance or reinsurance are not excluded from the scope of this Convention on the ground that the contract of insurance or reinsurance relates to a matter to which this Convention does not apply.

2. Recognition and enforcement of a judgment in respect of liability under the terms of a contract of insurance or reinsurance may not be limited or refused on the ground that the liability under that contract includes liability to indemnify the insured or reinsured in respect of -

a) a matter to which this Convention does not apply; or

b) an award of damages to which Article 11 might apply.

Article 18 No legalisation

All documents forwarded or delivered under this Convention shall be exempt from legalisation or any analogous formality, including an Apostille.

Article 19 Declarations limiting jurisdiction

A State may declare that its courts may refuse to determine disputes to which an exclusive choice of court agreement applies if, except for the location of the chosen court, there is no connection between that State and the parties or the dispute.

Article 20 Declarations limiting recognition and enforcement

A State may declare that its courts may refuse to recognise or enforce a judgment given by a court of another Contracting State if the parties were resident in the requested State, and the relationship of the parties and all other elements relevant to the dispute, other than the location of the chosen court, were connected only with the requested State.

Article 21 Declarations with respect to specific matters

1. Where a State has a strong interest in not applying this Convention to a specific matter, that State may declare that it will not apply the Convention to that matter. The State making such a declaration shall ensure that the declaration is no broader than necessary and that the specific matter excluded is clearly and precisely defined.

2. With regard to that matter, the Convention shall not apply -

a) in the Contracting State that made the declaration;

b) in other Contracting States, where an exclusive choice of court agreement designates the courts, or one or more specific courts, of the State that made the declaration.

Article 22 Reciprocal declarations on non-exclusive choice of court agreements

1. A Contracting State may declare that its courts will recognise and enforce judgments given by courts of other Contracting States designated in a choice of court agreement concluded by two or more parties that meets the requirements of Article 3, paragraph c), and designates, for the purpose of deciding disputes which have arisen or may arise in connection with a particular legal relationship, a court or courts of one or more Contracting States (a non-exclusive choice of court agreement).

2. Where recognition or enforcement of a judgment given in a Contracting State that has made such a declaration is sought in another Contracting State that has made such a declaration, the judgment shall be recognised and enforced under this Convention, if -

a) the court of origin was designated in a non-exclusive choice of court agreement;

b) there exists neither a judgment given by any other court before which proceedings could be brought in accordance with the non-exclusive choice of court agreement, nor a proceeding pending between the same parties in any other such court on the same cause of action; and

c) the court of origin was the court first seised.

Article 23 Uniform interpretation

In the interpretation of this Convention, regard shall be had to its international character and to the need to promote uniformity in its application.

Article 24 Review of operation of the Convention

The Secretary General of the Hague Conference on Private International Law shall at regular intervals make arrangements for -

a) review of the operation of this Convention, including any declarations; and

b) consideration of whether any amendments to this Convention are desirable.

Article 25 Non-unified legal systems

1. In relation to a Contracting State in which two or more systems of law apply in different territorial units with regard to any matter dealt with in this Convention -

a) any reference to the law or procedure of a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to the law or procedure in force in the relevant territorial unit;

b) any reference to residence in a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to residence in the relevant territorial unit;

c) any reference to the court or courts of a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to the court or courts in the relevant territorial unit;

d) any reference to a connection with a State shall be construed as referring, where appropriate, to a connection with the relevant territorial unit.

2. Notwithstanding the preceding paragraph, a Contracting State with two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply shall not be bound to apply this Convention to situations which involve solely such different territorial units.

3. A court in a territorial unit of a Contracting State with two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply shall not be bound to recognise or enforce a judgment from another Contracting State solely because the judgment has been recognised or enforced in another territorial unit of the same Contracting State under this Convention.

4. This Article shall not apply to a Regional Economic Integration Organisation.

Article 26 Relationship with other international instruments

1. This Convention shall be interpreted so far as possible to be compatible with other treaties in force for Contracting States, whether concluded before or after this Convention.

2. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty, whether concluded before or after this Convention, in cases where none of the parties is resident in a Contracting State that is not a Party to the treaty.

3. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty that was concluded before this Convention entered into force for that Contracting State, if applying this Convention would be inconsistent with the obligations of that Contracting State to any non-Contracting State. This paragraph shall also apply to treaties that revise or replace a treaty concluded before this Convention entered into force for that Contracting State, except to the extent that the revision or replacement creates new inconsistencies with this Convention.

4. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty, whether concluded before or after this Convention, for the purposes of obtaining recognition or enforcement of a judgment given by a court of a Contracting State that is also a Party to that treaty. However, the judgment shall not be recognised or enforced to a lesser extent than under this Convention.

5. This Convention shall not affect the application by a Contracting State of a treaty which, in relation to a specific matter, governs jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments, even if concluded after this Convention and even if all States concerned are Parties to this Convention. This paragraph shall apply only if the Contracting State has made a declaration in respect of the treaty under this paragraph. In the case of such a declaration, other Contracting States shall not be obliged to apply this Convention to that specific matter to the extent of any inconsistency, where an exclusive choice of court agreement designates the courts, or one or more specific courts, of the Contracting State that made the declaration.

6. This Convention shall not affect the application of the rules of a Regional Economic Integration Organisation that is a Party to this Convention, whether adopted before or after this Convention -

a) where none of the parties is resident in a Contracting State that is not a Member State of the Regional Economic Integration Organisation;

b) as concerns the recognition or enforcement of judgments as between Member States of the Regional Economic Integration Organisation.

CONVENTION ON THE CHOICE OF COURT

(Concluded November 25, 1965)

The States signatory to the present Convention,
Desiring to establish common provisions on the validity and effects of agreements on the choice of court,
Have resolved to conclude a Convention to this effect and have agreed upon the following provisions:

Article 1
In the matters to which this Convention applies and subject to the conditions which it prescribes, parties may by an agreement on the choice of court designate, for the purpose of deciding disputes which have arisen or may arise between them in connection with a specific legal relationship, either –
(1) the courts of one of the Contracting States, the particular competent court being then determined (if at all) by the internal legal system or systems of that State, or
(2) a court expressly named of one of the Contracting States, provided always that this court is competent according to the internal legal system or systems of that State.

Article 2
This Convention shall apply to agreements on the choice of court concluded in civil or commercial matters in situations having an international character.
It shall not apply to agreements on the choice of court concluded in the following matters –
(1) the status or capacity of persons or questions of family law including the personal or financial rights or obligations between parents and children or between spouses;
(2) maintenance obligations not included in sub-paragraph (1);
(3) questions of succession;
(4) questions of bankruptcy, compositions or analogous proceedings, including decisions which may result therefrom and which relate to the validity of the acts of the debtor;
(5) rights in immovable property.

Article 3
This Convention shall apply whatever the nationality of the parties.

Article 4
For the purpose of this Convention the agreement on the choice of court shall have been validly made if it is the result of the acceptance by one party of a written proposal by the other party expressly designating the chosen court or courts.
The existence of such an agreement shall not be presumed from the mere failure of a party to appear in an action brought against him in the chosen court.
The agreement on the choice of court shall be void or voidable if it has been obtained by an abuse of economic power or other unfair means.

Article 5
Unless the parties have otherwise agreed only the chosen court or courts shall have jurisdiction.
The chosen court shall be free to decline jurisdiction if it has proof that a court of another Contracting State could avail itself of the provisions of Article 6(2).

Article 6

Every court other than the chosen court or courts shall decline jurisdiction except –
(1) where the choice of court made by the parties is not exclusive,
(2) where under the internal law of the State of the excluded court, the parties were unable, because of the subject-matter, to agree to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts of that State,
(3) where the agreement on the choice of court is void or voidable in the sense of Article 4,
(4) for the purpose of provisional or protective measures.

Article 7
Where, in their agreement, the parties have designated a court or the courts of a Contracting State without excluding the jurisdiction of other courts, proceedings already pending in any court thus having jurisdiction and which may result in a decision capable of being recognised in the State where the defence is pleaded, shall constitute the basis for the defence of lis pendens.

Article 8
Decisions given by a chosen court in the sense of this Convention in one of the Contracting States shall be recognised and enforced in the other Contracting States in accordance with the rules for the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments in force in those States.

Article 9
Where the conditions for recognition and enforcement of a decision rendered on the basis of an agreement on the choice of court are not fulfilled in another Contracting State, the agreement shall not preclude any party from bringing a new action in the courts of that State.

Article 10
Settlements made in the chosen court in the course of proceedings there pending which are enforceable in the State of that court shall be treated in the same manner as decisions made by that court.

Article 11
This Convention shall not derogate from Conventions containing provisions on the matters governed by this Convention to which the Contracting States are, or shall become, Parties.

Article 12
Any Contracting State may reserve the right not to recognise agreements on the choice of court concluded between persons who, at the time of the conclusion of such agreements, were its nationals and had their habitual residence in its territory.

Article 13
Any Contracting State may make a reservation according to the terms of which it will treat as an internal matter the juridical relations established in its territory between, on the one hand, physical or juridical persons who are there and, on the other hand, establishments registered on local registers, even if such establishments are branches, agencies or other representatives of foreign firms in the territory in question.

Article 14
Any Contracting State may make a reservation according to the terms of which it may extend its exclusive jurisdiction to the juridical relations established in its territory between, on the one hand, physical or juridical persons who are there and on the other hand establishments registered on local registers, even if such establishments are branches, agencies or other representatives of foreign firms in the territory in question.

Article 15

Any Contracting State may reserve the right not to recognise agreements on the choice of court if the dispute has no connection with the chosen court, or if, in the circumstances, it would be seriously inconvenient for the matter to be dealt with by the chosen court.

Article 16
The present Convention shall be open for signature by the States represented at the Tenth Session of the Hague Conference on Private International Law.
It shall be ratified, and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands.

Article 17
The present Convention shall enter into force on the sixtieth day after the deposit of the third instrument of ratification referred to in the second paragraph of Article 16.
The Convention shall enter into force for each signatory State which ratifies subsequently on the sixtieth day after the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

Article 18
Any State not represented at the Tenth Session of the Hague Conference on Private International Law may accede to the present Convention after it has entered into force in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 17. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands.
The Convention shall enter into force for such a State in the absence of any objection from a State, which has ratified the Convention before such deposit, notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands within a period of six months after the date on which the said Ministry has notified it of such accession.
In the absence of any such objection, the Convention shall enter into force for the acceding State on the first day of the month following the expiration of the last of the periods referred to in the preceding paragraph.

Article 19
Any State may, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, declare that the present Convention shall extend to all the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible, or to one or more of them. Such a declaration shall take effect on the date of entry into force of the Convention for the State concerned.
At any time thereafter, such extensions shall be notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands.
The Convention shall enter into force for the territories mentioned in such an extension on the sixtieth day after the notification referred to in the preceding paragraph.

Article 20
Any State may, not later than the moment of its ratification or accession, make one or more of the reservations mentioned in Articles 12, 13, 14 and 15 of the present Convention. No other reservation shall be permitted.
Each Contracting State may also, when notifying an extension of the Convention in accordance with Article 19, make one or more of the said reservations, with its effect limited to all or some of the territories mentioned in the extension.
Each Contracting State may at any time withdraw a reservation it has made. Such a withdrawal shall be notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands.
Such a reservation shall cease to have effect on the sixtieth day after the notification referred to in the preceding paragraph.

Article 21
The present Convention shall remain in force for five years from the date of its entry into force in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 17, even for States which have ratified it or acceded to it subsequently.
If there has been no denunciation, it shall be renewed tacitly every five years.

Any denunciation shall be notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands at least six months before the end of the five year period.
It may be limited to certain of the territories to which the Convention applies.
The denunciation shall have effect only as regards the State which has notified it. The Convention shall remain in force for the other Contracting States.

Article 22
The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands shall give notice to the States referred to in Article 16, and to the States which have acceded in accordance with Article 18, of the following –
a) the signatures and ratifications referred to in Article 16;
b) the date on which the present Convention enters into force in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 17;
c) the accessions referred to in Article 18 and the dates on which they take effect;
d) the extensions referred to in Article 19 and the dates on which they take effect;
e) the reservations and withdrawals referred to in Article 20;
f) the denunciations referred to in the third paragraph of Article 21.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed the present Convention.
Done at The Hague, on the 25th day of November, 1965, in the English and French languages, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the Netherlands, and of which a certified copy shall be sent, through the diplomatic channel, to each of the States represented at the Tenth Session of the Hague Conference on Private International Law.

Convention drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters - Declaration, annexed to the minutes of the Council, adopted during the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 28 and 29 May 1998 when drawing up the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters

CONVENTION drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES to this Convention, Member States of the European Union,

REFERRING to the Council Act of 28 May 1998 drawing up, on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters,

DESIROUS of laying down rules determining the jurisdiction of Member States' courts with regard to proceedings relating to divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment,

AWARE of the importance of laying down rules of jurisdiction concerning parental responsibility over the children of both spouses on the occasion of proceedings to dissolve or loosen the marriage bond,

WISHING to ensure simplification of the formalities governing the recognition and enforcement of such judgments in the European area,

BEARING IN MIND the principles on which the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, signed in Brussels on 27 September 1968, is based,

WHEREAS Article K.3(2)(c) of the Treaty on European Union provides that conventions drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of that Treaty may stipulate that the Court of Justice of the European Communities shall have jurisdiction to interpret their provisions, in accordance with such arrangements as they may lay down,

HAVE AGREED ON THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS:

TITLE I SCOPE

Article 1

1. This Convention shall apply to:

(a) civil proceedings relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment;

(b) civil proceedings relating to parental responsibility for the children of both spouses on the occasion of the matrimonial proceedings referred to in (a).

2. Other proceedings officially recognised in a Member State shall be regarded as equivalent to judicial proceedings. The term 'court` shall cover all the authorities with jurisdiction in these matters in the Member States.

TITLE II JURISDICTION

SECTION 1 GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 2 Divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment

1. In matters relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment, jurisdiction shall lie with the courts of the Member State:

(a) in whose territory:

- the spouses are habitually resident, or
- the spouses were last habitually resident, in so far as one of them still resides there, or
- the respondent is habitually resident, or
- in the event of a joint application, either of the spouses is habitually resident, or
- the applicant is habitually resident if he or she resided there for at least a year immediately before the application was made, or
- the applicant is habitually resident if he or she resided there for at least six months immediately before the application was made and is either a national of the Member State in question or is 'domiciled` there;

b) of nationality of both spouses or of 'domicile of both spouses` established on a long-term settled basis.

2. Each Member State shall stipulate in a declaration made when giving the notification referred to in Article 47(2) whether it will be applying the criterion of nationality or of 'domicile` referred to in paragraph 1.

3. For the purpose of this Convention, 'domicile` shall have the same meaning as it has under the legal systems of the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Article 3 Parental responsibility

1. The Courts of a Member State exercising jurisdiction by virtue of Article 2 on an application for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment shall have jurisdiction in a matter relating to parental responsibility over a child of both spouses where the child is habitually resident in that Member State.

2. Where the child is not habitually resident in the Member State referred to in paragraph 1, the courts of that State shall have jurisdiction in such a matter if the child is habitually resident in one of the Member States and

(a) at least one of the spouses has parental responsibility in relation to the child and,

(b) the jurisdiction of the courts has been accepted by the spouses and is in the best interests of the child.

3. The jurisdiction conferred by paragraphs 1 and 2 shall cease as soon as:

(a) the judgment allowing or refusing the application for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment has become final, or

(b) in those cases where proceedings in relation to parental responsibility are still pending on the date referred to in (a), a judgment in these proceedings has become final, or

(c) the proceedings referred to in (a) and (b) have come to an end for another reason.

Article 4 Child abduction

The courts with jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 3 shall exercise their jurisdiction in conformity with the Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, and in particular Articles 3 and 16 thereof.

Article 5 Counterclaim

The court in which proceedings are pending on the basis of Articles 2 to 4 shall also have jurisdiction to examine a counterclaim, in so far as the latter comes within the scope of this Convention.

Article 6 Conversion of legal separation into divorce

Without prejudice to Article 2, a court of a Member State which has given a judgment on a legal separation shall also have jurisdiction for converting that judgment into a divorce, if the law of that Member State so provides.

Article 7 Exclusive nature of jurisdiction under Articles 2 to 6

A spouse who:

(a) is habitually resident in the territory of a Member State; or

(b) is a national of a Member State or who has his or her 'domicile` in the territory of a Member State within the meaning of Article 2(2), may be sued in another Member State only in accordance with Articles 2 to 6.

Article 8 Residual jurisdiction

1. Where no court of a Member State has jurisdiction pursuant to Articles 2 to 6, jurisdiction shall be determined, in each Member State, by the laws of that State.

2. As against a respondent who is not habitually resident and is not either a national or does not have his 'domicile` within the territory of a Member State within the meaning of Article 2(2), any national of a Member State who is habitually resident within the territory of another Member State may, like the nationals of that State, avail himself of the rules of jurisdiction applicable in that State.

SECTION 2 EXAMINATION AS TO JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY

Article 9 Examination as to jurisdiction

Where a court of a Member State is seised of a case over which it has no jurisdiction under this Convention and over which a court of another Member State has jurisdiction by virtue of this Convention, it shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

Article 10 Examination as to admissibility

1. Where a respondent does not enter an appearance, the court with jurisdiction shall stay the proceedings so long as it is not shown that the respondent has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or that all necessary steps have been taken to this end.

2. The provisions of Article 19 of the Convention of 26 May 1997 on the Service in the Member States of the European Union of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters shall be applied instead of the provisions in paragraph 1 if the document instituting the proceedings had to be transmitted abroad in accordance with that Convention.

SECTION 3 LIS PENDENS AND DEPENDENT ACTIONS

Article 11

1. Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought before courts of different Member States, the court second seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

2. Where proceedings for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment not involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought before courts of different Member States, the court second seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

3. Where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, the court second seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

In that case, the party who brought the relevant action before the court second seised may bring that action before the court first seised.

SECTION 4 PROVISIONAL AND PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Article 12

In urgent cases, the provisions of this Convention shall not prevent the courts of a Member State from taking such provisional, including protective, measures in respect of persons or assets in that State as may be available under the law of that Member State, even if, under this Convention, the court of another Member State has jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

TITLE III RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 13 Meaning of judgment

1. For the purposes of this Convention, 'judgment` means a divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment pronounced by a court of a Member State, as well as a judgment relating to the parental responsibility of the spouses given on the occasion of such matrimonial proceedings, whatever the judgment may be called, including a decree, order or decision.

2. The provisions of this Title shall also apply to the determination of the amount of costs and expenses of proceedings under this Convention and to the enforcement of any order concerning such costs and expenses.

3. For the purposes of implementing this Convention, documents which have been formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments and are enforceable in one Member State and also settlements which have been approved by a court in the course of proceedings and are enforceable in the Member State in which they were concluded shall be recognised and declared enforceable under the same conditions as the judgments referred to in paragraph 1.

SECTION 1 RECOGNITION

Article 14 Recognition of a judgment

1. A judgment given in a Member State shall be recognised in the other Member States without any special procedure being required.

2. In particular, and without prejudice to paragraph 3, no special procedure shall be required for up-dating the civil-status records of a Member State on the basis of a judgment relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment given in another Member State, and against which no further appeal lies under the law of that Member State.

3. Any interested party may, in accordance with the procedures provided for in Sections 2 and 3 of this Title, apply for a decision that the judgment be or not be recognised.

4. Where the recognition of a judgment is raised as an incidental question in a court of a Member State, that court may determine that issue.

Article 15 Grounds of non-recognition

1. A judgment relating to a divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment shall not be recognised:

(a) if such recognition is manifestly contrary to the public policy of the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(b) where it was given in default of appearance, if the respondent was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable the respondent to arrange for his or her defence unless it is determined that the respondent has accepted the judgment unequivocally;

(c) if it is irreconcilable with a judgment given in proceedings between the same parties in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(d) if it is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another Member State or in a non-Member State between the same parties, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

2. A judgment relating to the parental responsibility of the spouses given on the occasion of matrimonial proceedings as referred to in Article 13 shall not be recognised:

(a) if such recognition is manifestly contrary to the public policy of the Member State in which recognition is sought taking into account the best interests of the child;

(b) if it was given, except in case of urgency, without the child having been given an opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(c) where it was given in default of appearance, if the person in default was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable that person to arrange for his or her defence unless it is determined that such person has accepted the judgment unequivocally;

(d) on the request of any person claiming that the judgment infringes his or her parental responsibility, if it was given without such person having been given an opportunity to be heard;

(e) if it is irreconcilable with a later judgment relating to parental responsibility given in the Member State in which recognition is sought; or

(f) if it is irreconcilable with a later judgment relating to parental responsibility given in another Member State or in the non-Member State of the habitual residence of the child provided that the later judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

Article 16 Non-recognition and findings of fact

1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised in a case provided for in Article 43.

2. In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction in the case referred to in paragraph 1, the court applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the Member State of origin based its jurisdiction.

3. Without prejudice to paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in Article 15(1)(a) and (2)(a) may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction set out in Articles 2 to 8.

Article 17 Differences in applicable law

The recognition of a judgment relating to a divorce, legal separation or a marriage annulment may not be refused because the law of the Member State in which such recognition is sought would not allow divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment on the same facts.

Article 18 Non-review as to substance

Under no circumstances may a judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 19 Stay of proceedings

1. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in another Member State may stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal against the judgment has been lodged.

2. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom may stay the proceedings if enforcement is suspended in the Member State of origin by reason of an appeal.

SECTION 2 ENFORCEMENT

Article 20 Enforceable judgments

1. A judgment on the exercise of parental responsibility in respect of a child of both parties given in a Member State and enforceable in that Member State shall be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.

2. However, in the United Kingdom, such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland or in Northern Ireland when, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom.

Article 21 Jurisdiction of local courts

(a) The jurisdiction of local courts in relation to an application for enforcement shall be determined by reference to the place of the habitual residence of the person against whom enforcement is sought or by reference to the place of habitual residence of any child to whom the application relates;

(b) Where neither of the places referred to in (a) can be found in the Member State where enforcement is sought, the jurisdiction of local courts is determined by reference to the place of enforcement.

3. In relation to procedures referred to in Article 14(3), the jurisdiction of local courts shall be determined by the internal law of the Member State in which proceedings for recognition or non-recognition are brought.

Article 22 Procedure for enforcement

1. The procedure for making the application shall be governed by the law of the Member State in which enforcement is sought.

2. The applicant must give an address for service within the area of jurisdiction of the court applied to. However, if the law of the Member State in which enforcement is sought does not provide for the furnishing of such an address, the applicant shall appoint a representative ad litem.

3. The documents referred to in Articles 33 and 34 shall be attached to the application.

Article 23 Decision of the court

1. The court applied to shall give its decision without delay. The person against whom enforcement is sought shall not at this stage of the proceedings be entitled to make any submissions on the application.

1. If enforcement is authorised, the person against whom enforcement is sought may appeal against the decision within one month of service thereof.

2. If that person is habitually resident in a Member State other than that in which the decision authorising enforcement was given, the time for appealing shall be two months and shall run from the date of service, either on him or at his residence. No extension of time may be granted on account of distance.

Article 26 Courts of appeal and means of contest

1. An appeal against the judgment authorising enforcement shall be lodged, in accordance with the rules governing procedure in contradictory matters:

Article 27 Stay of proceedings

1. The court with which the appeal is lodged may, on the application of the appellant, stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal has been lodged against the judgment in the Member State of origin or if the time for such appeal has not yet expired. In the latter case, the court may specify the time within which an appeal is to be lodged.

2. Where the judgment was given in Ireland or the United Kingdom, any form of appeal available

2. An applicant who requests the enforcement of a judgment given by an administrative authority in Denmark may, in the Member State addressed, be eligible for the provisions of paragraph 1 if he presents a statement from the Danish Ministry of Justice to the effect that he fulfils the economic requirements to qualify for the grant of complete or partial legal aid or exemption from costs or expenses.

Article 32 Security, bond or deposit

No security, bond or deposit, however described, shall be required of a party who in one Member State applies for enforcement of a judgment given in another Member State on the ground that he or she is a foreign national or that he or she is not 'domiciled` or habitually resident in the Member State in which enforcement is sought.

2. In addition, in the case of a judgment given in default, the party seeking recognition or applying for enforcement shall produce:

(a) the original or certified true copy of the document which establishes that the defaulting party was served with the document instituting the proceedings or with an equivalent document; or

(b) any document indicating that the defendant has accepted the judgment unequivocally.

3. A person requiring the updating of the civil-status records of a Member State, as referred to in Article 14(2), shall also produce a document indicating that the judgment is no longer subject to a further appeal under the law of the Member State where the judgment was given.

Article 34 Other documents

A party applying for enforcement shall also produce documents of whatever nature which establish that, according to the law of the Member State of origin, the judgment is enforceable and has been served.

Article 35 Absence of documents

1. If the documents specified in Article 33(1)(b) or (2) are not produced, the court may specify a time for their production, accept equivalent documents or, if it considers that it has sufficient information before it, dispense with their production.

2. If the Court so requires, a translation of such documents shall be furnished. The translation shall be certified by a person qualified to do so in one of the Member States.

Article 36 Legalisation or other similar formality

The provisions of this Convention shall apply only to legal proceedings instituted, to documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments and to settlements which have been approved by a court in the course of proceedings after its entry into force in the Member State of origin and, where recognition or enforcement of a judgment or authentic instruments is sought, in the Member State addressed.

2. However, judgments given after the date of entry into force of this Convention between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed in proceedings instituted before that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with the provisions of Title III if jurisdiction was founded on rules which accorded with those provided for either in Title II of this Convention or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

TITLE V GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 38 Relation with other Conventions

1. Subject to the provisions of Articles 37, 40 and paragraph 2 of this Article, this Convention shall, for the Member States which are parties to it, supersede conventions existing at the time of entry into force of this Convention which have been concluded between two or more Member States and relate to matters governed by this Convention.

2. They shall continue to have effect in respect of judgments given and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic before the entry into force of this Convention.

Article 41 Agreements between Member States

Without prejudice to the grounds for non-recognition provided for in Title III, judgments given pursuant to the agreements referred to in Article 38(3) shall be recognised and enforced in Member States which are not parties to those agreements provided that those judgments were given in a forum consistent with a forum provided for in Title II.

4. Member States shall send to the depositary of this Convention:

(a) a copy of the Treaties referred to in paragraphs 1 and 3;

(b) any denunciations of or amendments to those Treaties.

Article 43 Non-recognition and non-enforcement of judgments based on Article 8

This Convention shall not prevent a Member State from assuming, in a convention on the recognition and enforcement of judgments, an obligation towards a non-Member State not to recognise a judgment given in another Member State where, in cases provided for in Article 8, the judgment could only be founded on grounds of jurisdiction other than those specified in Articles 2 to 7.

Article 44 Member States with two or more legal systems

With regard to a Member State in which two or more systems of law or sets of rules concerning matters governed by this Convention apply in different territorial units:

(d) any reference to the rules of the requested Member State shall refer to the rules of the territorial unit in which jurisdiction, recognition or enforcement is invoked.

TITLE VI COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 45

The Court of Justice of the European Communities shall have jurisdiction to give rulings on the interpretation of this Convention, in accordance with the provisions of the Protocol drawn up by the Council Act of 28 May 1998.

2. Member States shall notify the depositary of the completion of the constitutional rules for the adoption of this Convention.

3. This Convention and any amendment to it referred to in Article 49(2) shall enter into force 90 days after the notification referred to in paragraph 2 by the State which, being a member of the European Union at the time the Council adopts the Act drawing up this Convention, is the last to complete that formality.

4. Until this Convention enters into force, any Member State, may, when giving the notification referred to in paragraph 2 or at any later date, declare that as far as it is concerned the Convention, with the exception of Article 45, shall apply to its relations with Member States that have made the same declaration. Such declarations shall apply 90 days after the date of deposit.

Article 48 Accession

1. This Convention shall be open to accession by any State that becomes a member of the European Union.

2. The text of this Convention in the language or languages of the acceding Member State, as drawn up by the Council, shall be authentic.

3. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the depositary.

4. This Convention shall enter into force with respect to any Member State that accedes to it 90 days after the deposit of its instrument of accession or on the date of entry into force of the Convention if it has not already entered into force at the time of expiry of the said period of 90 days.

5. Where this Convention is not in force at the time of the deposit of their instrument of accession, Article 47(4) shall apply to acceding Member States.

Article 49 Amendments

1. Amendments to this Convention may be proposed by any Member State or by the Commission. Any proposal for amendment shall be forwarded to the depositary, who shall communicate it to the Council.

2. Amendments shall be drawn up by the Council, which shall recommend their adoption by the Member States in accordance with their respective constitutional rules. Amendments thus adopted shall enter into force in accordance with Article 47(3).

3. However, at the request of the Member State concerned, the naming of the courts or means of appeal referred to in Articles 21(1), 26(1) and (2), 28(1) and 29 may be amended by decision of the Council.

Article 50 Depositary and publication

1. The Secretary-General of the Council shall act as depositary of this Convention.

2. The depositary shall publish in the Official Journal of the European Communities:

(a) the adoptions and accessions;

DECLARATION BY IRELAND, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION

Notwithstanding the provisions of this Convention, Ireland may maintain the jurisdiction which it has to refuse to recognise a divorce obtained in another Member State where that divorce has been obtained as a result of the party, or parties, deliberately misleading a court of the State in question in relation to its jurisdictional requirements such that recognition of the divorce would not be compatible with the Constitution of Ireland.

This declaration will apply for a period of five years. It will be renewable every five years.

DECLARATION, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION BY ANY OF THE NORDIC MEMBER STATES ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 38(2)

The application of the Convention of 6 February 1931 between Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden comprising international private law provisions on marriage, adoption and guardianship, together with the Final Protocol thereto, is in line with Article K.7 of the Treaty in that the Convention does not prevent the establishment of closer cooperation between two or more Member States in so far as such cooperation does not conflict with, or impede, that provided for in the Convention.

They undertake no longer to apply Article 7(2) of the 1931 Nordic Agreement in their mutual relations and to review at an early date the rules of jurisdiction applicable in the framework of that Agreement in the light of the principle set out in Article 38(2)(b) of the Convention.

The grounds for refusal used in the context of the uniform laws are in practice applied in a manner consistent with those laid down in Title III of this Convention.

DECLARATION BY THE ITALIAN DELEGATION, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION

With regard to Article 42 of the Convention, Italy reserves the right, in respect of judgments by Portuguese ecclesiastical courts, to adopt the procedures and carry out the checks provided for in its own legal system in respect of similar judgments by ecclesiastical courts, on the basis of the agreements it has concluded with the Holy See.

Declaration, annexed to the minutes of the Council, adopted during the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 28 and 29 May 1998 when drawing up the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters (98/C 221/02)

The Council, conscious of the adverse effect which the length of proceedings on requests before the Court of Justice of the European Communities might have in the field of family law, stresses the need for an examination as soon as possible of possible ways of reducing the length of such proceedings; the Council proposes that this examination be carried out by the Competent body within the Council, together with the Court of Justice.

Council Act of 28 May 1998 drawing up, on basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters

COUNCIL ACT of 28 May 1998 drawing up, on basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters (98/C 221/01)

THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty on European Union, and in particular Article K.3(2)(c) thereof,

Whereas, for the purposes of achieving the objectives of the Union, the Member States regard the laying down of rules on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments in proceedings relating to divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment, and those relating to parental responsibility over the children of both spouses on the occasion of matrimonial proceedings, as matters of common interest falling within the scope of judicial cooperation in civil matters provided for in Title VI of the Treaty;

Having examined the views of the European Parliament (1) following the consultation conducted by the Presidency in accordance with Article K.6 of the Treaty,

HAS DECIDED that the Convention, the text of which is given in the Annex and which has been signed today by the representatives of the Governments of the Member States, is hereby drawn up, RECOMMENDS that it be adopted by the Member States in accordance with their respective constitutional rules.

Done at Brussels, 28 May 1998.

For the Council

The President

J. STRAW

(1) Opinion delivered on 30 April 1998 (OJ C 152, 18.5.1998).

ANNEX

CONVENTION drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES to this Convention, Member States of the European Union,

REFERRING to the Council Act of 28 May 1998 drawing up, on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters,

DESIROUS of laying down rules determining the jurisdiction of Member States' courts with regard to proceedings relating to divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment,

AWARE of the importance of laying down rules of jurisdiction concerning parental responsibility over the children of both spouses on the occasion of proceedings to dissolve or loosen the marriage bond,

WISHING to ensure simplification of the formalities governing the recognition and enforcement of such judgments in the European area,

BEARING IN MIND the principles on which the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, signed in Brussels on 27 September 1968, is based,

WHEREAS Article K.3(2)(c) of the Treaty on European Union provides that conventions drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of that Treaty may stipulate that the Court of Justice of the European Communities shall have jurisdiction to interpret their provisions, in accordance with such arrangements as they may lay down,

HAVE AGREED ON THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS:

TITLE I SCOPE

Article 1

1. This Convention shall apply to:

(a) civil proceedings relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment;

(b) civil proceedings relating to parental responsibility for the children of both spouses on the occasion of the matrimonial proceedings referred to in (a).

2. Other proceedings officially recognised in a Member State shall be regarded as equivalent to judicial proceedings. The term 'court` shall cover all the authorities with jurisdiction in these matters in the Member States.

TITLE II JURISDICTION

SECTION 1 GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 2 Divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment

1. In matters relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment, jurisdiction shall lie with the courts of the Member State:

(a) in whose territory:

- the spouses are habitually resident, or
- the spouses were last habitually resident, in so far as one of them still resides there, or
- the respondent is habitually resident, or
- in the event of a joint application, either of the spouses is habitually resident, or
- the applicant is habitually resident if he or she resided there for at least a year immediately before the application was made, or
- the applicant is habitually resident if he or she resided there for at least six months immediately before the application was made and is either a national of the Member State in question or is 'domiciled` there;

b) of nationality of both spouses or of 'domicile of both spouses` established on a long-term settled basis.

2. Each Member State shall stipulate in a declaration made when giving the notification referred to in Article 47(2) whether it will be applying the criterion of nationality or of 'domicile` referred to in paragraph 1.

3. For the purpose of this Convention, 'domicile` shall have the same meaning as it has under the legal systems of the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Article 3 Parental responsibility

1. The Courts of a Member State exercising jurisdiction by virtue of Article 2 on an application for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment shall have jurisdiction in a matter relating to parental responsibility over a child of both spouses where the child is habitually resident in that Member State.

2. Where the child is not habitually resident in the Member State referred to in paragraph 1, the courts of that State shall have jurisdiction in such a matter if the child is habitually resident in one of the Member States and

(a) at least one of the spouses has parental responsibility in relation to the child and,

(b) the jurisdiction of the courts has been accepted by the spouses and is in the best interests of the child.

3. The jurisdiction conferred by paragraphs 1 and 2 shall cease as soon as:

(a) the judgment allowing or refusing the application for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment has become final, or

(b) in those cases where proceedings in relation to parental responsibility are still pending on the date referred to in (a), a judgment in these proceedings has become final, or

(c) the proceedings referred to in (a) and (b) have come to an end for another reason.

Article 4 Child abduction

The courts with jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 3 shall exercise their jurisdiction in conformity with the Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, and in particular Articles 3 and 16 thereof.

Article 5 Counterclaim

The court in which proceedings are pending on the basis of Articles 2 to 4 shall also have jurisdiction to examine a counterclaim, in so far as the latter comes within the scope of this Convention.

Article 6 Conversion of legal separation into divorce

Without prejudice to Article 2, a court of a Member State which has given a judgment on a legal separation shall also have jurisdiction for converting that judgment into a divorce, if the law of that Member State so provides.

Article 7 Exclusive nature of jurisdiction under Articles 2 to 6

A spouse who:

(a) is habitually resident in the territory of a Member State; or

(b) is a national of a Member State or who has his or her 'domicile` in the territory of a Member State within the meaning of Article 2(2), may be sued in another Member State only in accordance with Articles 2 to 6.

Article 8 Residual jurisdiction

1. Where no court of a Member State has jurisdiction pursuant to Articles 2 to 6, jurisdiction shall be determined, in each Member State, by the laws of that State.

2. As against a respondent who is not habitually resident and is not either a national or does not have his 'domicile` within the territory of a Member State within the meaning of Article 2(2), any national of a Member State who is habitually resident within the territory of another Member State may, like the nationals of that State, avail himself of the rules of jurisdiction applicable in that State.

SECTION 2 EXAMINATION AS TO JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY

Article 9 Examination as to jurisdiction

Where a court of a Member State is seised of a case over which it has no jurisdiction under this Convention and over which a court of another Member State has jurisdiction by virtue of this Convention, it shall declare of its own motion that it has no jurisdiction.

Article 10 Examination as to admissibility

1. Where a respondent does not enter an appearance, the court with jurisdiction shall stay the proceedings so long as it is not shown that the respondent has been able to receive the document instituting the proceedings or an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence, or that all necessary steps have been taken to this end.

2. The provisions of Article 19 of the Convention of 26 May 1997 on the Service in the Member States of the European Union of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters shall be applied instead of the provisions in paragraph 1 if the document instituting the proceedings had to be transmitted abroad in accordance with that Convention.

SECTION 3 LIS PENDENS AND DEPENDENT ACTIONS

Article 11

1. Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought before courts of different Member States, the court second seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

2. Where proceedings for divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment not involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought before courts of different Member States, the court second seised shall of its own motion stay its proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established.

3. Where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, the court second seised shall decline jurisdiction in favour of that court.

In that case, the party who brought the relevant action before the court second seised may bring that action before the court first seised.

SECTION 4 PROVISIONAL AND PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Article 12

In urgent cases, the provisions of this Convention shall not prevent the courts of a Member State from taking such provisional, including protective, measures in respect of persons or assets in that State as may be available under the law of that Member State, even if, under this Convention, the court of another Member State has jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.

TITLE III RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

Article 13 Meaning of judgment

1. For the purposes of this Convention, 'judgment` means a divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment pronounced by a court of a Member State, as well as a judgment relating to the parental responsibility of the spouses given on the occasion of such matrimonial proceedings, whatever the judgment may be called, including a decree, order or decision.

2. The provisions of this Title shall also apply to the determination of the amount of costs and expenses of proceedings under this Convention and to the enforcement of any order concerning such costs and expenses.

3. For the purposes of implementing this Convention, documents which have been formally drawn up or registered as authentic instruments and are enforceable in one Member State and also settlements which have been approved by a court in the course of proceedings and are enforceable in the Member State in which they were concluded shall be recognised and declared enforceable under the same conditions as the judgments referred to in paragraph 1.

SECTION 1 RECOGNITION

Article 14 Recognition of a judgment

1. A judgment given in a Member State shall be recognised in the other Member States without any special procedure being required.

2. In particular, and without prejudice to paragraph 3, no special procedure shall be required for up-dating the civil-status records of a Member State on the basis of a judgment relating to divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment given in another Member State, and against which no further appeal lies under the law of that Member State.

3. Any interested party may, in accordance with the procedures provided for in Sections 2 and 3 of this Title, apply for a decision that the judgment be or not be recognised.

4. Where the recognition of a judgment is raised as an incidental question in a court of a Member State, that court may determine that issue.

Article 15 Grounds of non-recognition

1. A judgment relating to a divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment shall not be recognised:

(a) if such recognition is manifestly contrary to the public policy of the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(b) where it was given in default of appearance, if the respondent was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable the respondent to arrange for his or her defence unless it is determined that the respondent has accepted the judgment unequivocally;

(c) if it is irreconcilable with a judgment given in proceedings between the same parties in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(d) if it is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another Member State or in a non-Member State between the same parties, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

2. A judgment relating to the parental responsibility of the spouses given on the occasion of matrimonial proceedings as referred to in Article 13 shall not be recognised:

(a) if such recognition is manifestly contrary to the public policy of the Member State in which recognition is sought taking into account the best interests of the child;

(b) if it was given, except in case of urgency, without the child having been given an opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the Member State in which recognition is sought;

(c) where it was given in default of appearance, if the person in default was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time to enable that person to arrange for his or her defence unless it is determined that such person has accepted the judgment unequivocally;

(d) on the request of any person claiming that the judgment infringes his or her parental responsibility, if it was given without such person having been given an opportunity to be heard;

(e) if it is irreconcilable with a later judgment relating to parental responsibility given in the Member State in which recognition is sought; or

(f) if it is irreconcilable with a later judgment relating to parental responsibility given in another Member State or in the non-Member State of the habitual residence of the child provided that the later judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

Article 16 Non-recognition and findings of fact

1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised in a case provided for in Article 43.

2. In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction in the case referred to in paragraph 1, the court applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the Member State of origin based its jurisdiction.

3. Without prejudice to paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in Article 15(1)(a) and (2)(a) may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction set out in Articles 2 to 8.

Article 17 Differences in applicable law

The recognition of a judgment relating to a divorce, legal separation or a marriage annulment may not be refused because the law of the Member State in which such recognition is sought would not allow divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment on the same facts.

Article 18 Non-review as to substance

Under no circumstances may a judgment be reviewed as to its substance.

Article 19 Stay of proceedings

1. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in another Member State may stay the proceedings if an ordinary appeal against the judgment has been lodged.

2. A court of a Member State in which recognition is sought of a judgment given in Ireland or the United Kingdom may stay the proceedings if enforcement is suspended in the Member State of origin by reason of an appeal.

SECTION 2 ENFORCEMENT

Article 20 Enforceable judgments

1. A judgment on the exercise of parental responsibility in respect of a child of both parties given in a Member State and enforceable in that Member State shall be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.

2. However, in the United Kingdom, such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland or in Northern Ireland when, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom.

Article 21 Jurisdiction of local courts

1. The application shall be submitted:

- in Belgium, to the 'Tribunal de première instance` or the 'Rechtbank van eerste aanleg` or the 'erstinstanzliche Gericht`,
- in Denmark, to the 'byret (fogedret)`,
- in the Federal Republic of Germany, to the 'Familiengericht`,
- in Greece, to the 'öïíïïiåe¡o áñùôïäéêåßï`,
- in Spain, to the 'Juzgado de Primera Instancia`,
- in France, to the presiding Judge of the 'Tribunal de grande instance`,
- in Ireland, to the High Court,
- in Italy, to the 'Corte d'apello`,
- in Luxembourg, to the presiding Judge of the 'Tribunal d'arrondissement`,
- in the Netherlands, to the presiding Judge of the 'arrondissementsrechtbank`,
- in Austria, to the 'Bezirksgericht`,
- in Portugal, to the 'Tribunal de Comarca` or 'Tribunal de Família`,
- in Finland, to the 'käräjäoikeus/tingsrätt`,
- in Sweden, to the 'Svea hovrätt`,
- in the United Kingdom,

(a) in England and Wales, to the High Court of Justice;

(b) in Scotland, to the Court of Session;

(c) in Northern Ireland, to the High Court of Justice.

2. (a) The jurisdiction of local courts in relation to an application for enforcement shall be determined by reference to the place of the habitual residence of the person against whom enforcement is sought or by reference to the place of habitual residence of any child to whom the application relates;

(b) Where neither of the places referred to in (a) can be found in the Member State where enforcement is sought, the jurisdiction of local courts is determined by reference to the place of enforcement.

3. In relation to procedures referred to in Article 14(3), the jurisdiction of local courts shall be determined by the internal law of the Member State in which proceedings for recognition or non-recognition are brought.

Article 22 Procedure for enforcement

1. The procedure for making the application shall be governed by the law of the Member State in which enforcement is sought.

2. The applicant must give an address for service within the area of jurisdiction of the court applied to. However, if the law of the Member State in which enforcement is sought does not provide for the furnishing of such an address, the applicant shall appoint a representative ad litem.

3. The documents referred to in Articles 33 and 34 shall be attached to the application.

Article 23 Decision of the court

1. The court applied to shall give its decision without delay. The person against whom enforcement is sought shall not at this stage of the proceedings be entitled to make any submissions on the application.

Article 32 Security, bond or deposit

No security, bond or deposit, however described, shall be required of a party who in one Member State applies for enforcement of a judgment given in another Member State on the ground that he or she is a foreign national or that he or she is not 'domiciled` or habitually resident in the Member State in which enforcement is sought.

Article 35 Absence of documents

State addressed.

2. However, judgments given after the date of entry into force of this Convention between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed in proceedings instituted before that date shall be recognised and enforced in accordance with the provisions of Title III if jurisdiction was founded on rules which accorded with those provided for either in Title II of this Convention or in a convention concluded between the Member State of origin and the Member State addressed which was in force when the proceedings were instituted.

This declaration may be withdrawn, in whole or in part, at any moment;

2. They shall continue to have effect in respect of judgments given and documents formally drawn up or registered as authentic before the entry into force of this Convention.

Article 41 Agreements between Member States

Without prejudice to the grounds for non-recognition provided for in Title III, judgments given pursuant to the agreements referred to in Article 38(3) shall be recognised and enforced in Member States which are not parties to those agreements provided that those judgments were given in a forum consistent with a forum provided for in Title II.

4. Member States shall send to the depositary of this Convention:

(a) a copy of the Treaties referred to in paragraphs 1 and 3;

(b) any denunciations of or amendments to those Treaties.

Article 43 Non-recognition and non-enforcement of judgments based on Article 8

This Convention shall not prevent a Member State from assuming, in a convention on the recognition and enforcement of judgments, an obligation towards a non-Member State not to recognise a judgment given in another Member State where, in cases provided for in Article 8, the judgment could only be founded on grounds of jurisdiction other than those specified in Articles 2 to 7.

Article 44 Member States with two or more legal systems

With regard to a Member State in which two or more systems of law or sets of rules concerning matters governed by this Convention apply in different territorial units:

(a) any reference to habitual residence in that Member State shall refer to habitual residence in a territorial unit;

(b) any reference to nationality shall refer to the territorial unit designated by the law of that State;

(c) any reference to the authority of a Member State having received an application for divorce or legal separation or for marriage annulment shall refer to the authority of a territorial unit which has received such an application;

(d) any reference to the rules of the requested Member State shall refer to the rules of the territorial unit in which jurisdiction, recognition or enforcement is invoked.

4. Until this Convention enters into force, any Member State, may, when giving the notification referred to in paragraph 2 or at any later date, declare that as far as it is concerned the Convention, with the exception of Article 45, shall apply to its relations with Member States that have made the same declaration. Such declarations shall apply 90 days after the date of deposit.

DECLARATION BY IRELAND, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION

Notwithstanding the provisions of this Convention, Ireland may maintain the jurisdiction which it has to refuse to recognise a divorce obtained in another Member State where that divorce has been obtained as a result of the party, or parties, deliberately misleading a court of the State in question in relation to its jurisdictional requirements such that recognition of the divorce would not be compatible with the Constitution of Ireland.

This declaration will apply for a period of five years. It will be renewable every five years.

DECLARATION, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION BY ANY OF THE NORDIC MEMBER STATES ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 38(2)

The application of the Convention of 6 February 1931 between Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden comprising international private law provisions on marriage, adoption and guardianship, together with the Final Protocol thereto, is in line with Article K.7 of the Treaty in that the Convention does not prevent the establishment of closer cooperation between two or more Member States in so far as such cooperation does not conflict with, or impede, that provided for in the Convention.

They undertake no longer to apply Article 7(2) of the 1931 Nordic Agreement in their mutual relations and to review at an early date the rules of jurisdiction applicable in the framework of that Agreement in the light of the principle set out in Article 38(2)(b) of the Convention.

The grounds for refusal used in the context of the uniform laws are in practice applied in a manner consistent with those laid down in Title III of this Convention.

DECLARATION BY THE ITALIAN DELEGATION, TO BE ANNEXED TO THE CONVENTION

With regard to Article 42 of the Convention, Italy reserves the right, in respect of judgments by Portuguese ecclesiastical courts, to adopt the procedures and carry out the checks provided for in its own legal system in respect of similar judgments by ecclesiastical courts, on the basis of the agreements it has concluded with the Holy See.

Declaration, annexed to the minutes of the Council, adopted during the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 28 and 29 May 1998 when drawing up the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters (98/C 221/02)

The Council, conscious of the adverse effect which the length of proceedings on requests before the Court of Justice of the European Communities might have in the field of family law, stresses the need for an examination as soon as possible of possible ways of reducing the length of such proceedings; the Council proposes that this examination be carried out by the Competent body within the Council, together with the Court of Justice.

Explanatory Report on the Convention, drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters (approved by the Council on 28 May 1998) prepared by Dr Alegría Borras Professor of Private International Law University of Barcelona

EXPLANATORY REPORT on the Convention, drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters (approved by the Council on 28 May 1998) prepared by Dr ALEGRIA BORRAS Professor of Private International Law University of Barcelona (98/C 221/04)

I. BACKGROUND TO THE CONVENTION

1. European integration was mainly an economic affair to begin with and for that reason the legal instruments established were designed to serve an economic purpose. However, the situation has changed fundamentally in recent times so that integration is now no longer purely economic and is coming to have an increasingly profound effect on the life of the European citizen, who finds it hard to understand that he encounters problems in matters of family law while so much progress has been made in property law. The issue of family law therefore has to be faced as part of the phenomenon of European integration. We only need to look at the questions put in the European Parliament not only on dissolution of marriages but also on more general aspects of family law (marriage contracts, paternity, child abduction, adoption, etc.). This Convention is a first step, and a positive and decisive one, along this new road and it may open the way to other texts on matters of family law and succession.

2. This Convention was made possible by the Maastricht Treaty, which opened up new channels for judicial cooperation in civil matters under Article K.3 (see Section II, paragraph 11). Until then, what limited scope there was depended only on Article 220 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community. In that Article, the Member States undertook, so far as is necessary, to enter into negotiations with each other with a view to securing for the benefit of their nationals the simplification of formalities governing the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments of courts or tribunals and of arbitration awards. In a note sent to the Member States on 22 October 1959 inviting them to commence negotiations, the Commission pointed out that:

'a true internal market between the six States will be achieved only if adequate legal protection can be secured. The economic life of the Community may be subject to disturbances and difficulties unless it is possible, where necessary by judicial means, to ensure the recognition and enforcement of the various rights arising from the existence of a multiplicity of legal relationships. As jurisdiction in both civil and commercial matters is derived from the sovereignty of Member States, and since the effect of judicial acts is confined to each national territory, legal protection and, hence, legal certainty in the common market are essentially dependent on the adoption by the Member States of a satisfactory solution to the problem of recognition and enforcement of judgments`.

Various Conventions have been concluded directly or indirectly on the basis of Article 220 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community. The major achievement in judicial matters was the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters and the various amendments resulting from enlargement of the Community. Article 1(2) of that Convention excludes a range of matters from its scope. These exclusions were based on a great variety of grounds and some of the matters excluded have been dealt with in other Conventions, for instance the Convention on insolvency proceedings signed in Brussels on 23 November 1995.

In addition, the 30 years which have passed since its conclusion and the practical application of the Brussels Convention have led to the initiation of a process of revision of the latter, carried out at the same time as that of the Lugano Convention of 16 September 1988 (the so-called parallel Convention). As only preliminary studies have been carried out and only two meetings have been held of the ad hoc Working Party set up to prepare the revised text, it has not been possible to take account of those proceedings in the drafting of this Convention. There is still the possibility, therefore, of adapting this Convention to the revised Brussels Convention at a later date.

As the situation changed, it was normal that Member States should endeavour to respond to European citizens' new requirements and this Convention is the latest such endeavour. The desire to extend the 1968 Brussels Convention to family issues is a recent development and the grounds are twofold.

3. In the first place, the grounds for exclusion from the 1968 Brussels Convention need to be recalled. The Jenard report (explanatory report on the original version of the Convention) justified the exclusion of matters relating to natural persons as follows:

'Even assuming that the Committee managed to unify the rules of jurisdiction in this field, and whatever the nature of the rules selected, there was such disparity on these matters between the various systems of law, in particular regarding the rules of conflict of laws, that it would have been difficult not to re-examine the rules of jurisdiction at the enforcement stage. This in turn would have meant changing the nature of the Convention and making it much less effective. In addition, if the Committee had agreed to withdraw from the court of enforcement all powers of examination, even in matters not relating to property rights, that court would surely have been encouraged to abuse the notion of public policy, using it to refuse recognition to foreign judgments referred to it. The members of the Committee chose the lesser of the two evils, retaining the unity and effectiveness of their draft while restricting its scope. The most serious difficulty with regard to status and legal capacity is obviously that of divorce, a problem which is complicated by the extreme divergences between the various systems of law.`

The 1968 Convention is therefore the 'general convention` on recognition and enforcement, under the mandate in Article 220 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community; it does not exclude any civil or commercial matter per se and could have dealt with status and legal capacity. They were excluded because of their complexity and the fact that they did not directly affect economic integration.

4. In the second place, in family law the major issue is divorce, matrimonial matters as dealt with in this Convention. It should be noted that the Jenard report refers to the 'extreme divergences` between systems of law at a time when there were only six Member States; those divergences are clearly greater now that there are 15 Member States, so that the difficulties facing the Working Party were greater. These are not minor differences; some of them even have constitutional implications. In other cases the difficulties affect the recognition or non-recognition of the various forms of civil status affected by the Convention (for instance, separation and annulment are unknown in the national law of Finland and Sweden). Even among States which have all the various forms covered, there are significant differences in the rules (grounds, prior separation requirement, etc.).

Neither the time required to achieve a convention nor the compromise solutions which had to be worked out in some instances can therefore come as a surprise. The exclusion of this matter from the 1968 Convention and the preparation of this Convention highlight the difference between family litigation and property litigation. European integration has advanced considerably in the 30 years since the 1968 Brussels Convention was drawn up. The achievement of free movement of persons and establishment of increasingly frequent family links between individuals who are nationals or residents of different countries demanded a judicial response which is provided by this Convention, taking account of the various elements involved.

5. A full discussion was held on the question whether a convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters was necessary. Some Member States, which were parties to the Hague Convention of 1 June 1970 on the Recognition of Divorces and Legal Separations, expressed satisfaction at the results achieved by applying it. Other Member States, however, which were not parties to the 1970 Hague Convention, declared that they were not prepared to become parties to it. There were three fundamental arguments in favour of considering the advantages of drawing up a new convention in a European context:

(a) the desire to introduce uniform standards for jurisdiction in matrimonial matters;

(b) the need to introduce modern rules for the recognition and enforcement of judgments on annulment, divorce and separation among the Member States of the European Union, establishing a uniform procedure;

(c) the avoidance of parallel procedures on matrimonial matters in different Member States, establishing rules on lis pendens, an innovation that on its own would be justification for the Convention and would contribute to the prevention of contradictory rulings.

For all those reasons the Council decided to initiate negotiations on the conclusion of a convention on these matters. It should also be pointed out that Article 18 of the 1970 Hague Convention allows the States party to it to conclude conventions on those matters.

6. The initial purpose of the Convention was to extend the 1968 Brussels Convention to cover matrimonial matters. Hence the starting-point for the preparation of this Convention lies in the text of the 1968 Convention which is cited in the preamble. It would have been impossible to disregard such an important background text which has been demonstrably successful and is accompanied by extensive case-law from the Court of Justice of the European Communities, making it possible to pinpoint its most controversial features in the section applicable to this text. Nevertheless, the differing matters covered in both texts result in significant differences on a number of points (e. g. the fact that there is no general forum and the absence of any hierarchy in the grounds of jurisdiction) whereas in other areas the rules are more convergent (as for lis pendens and automatic recognition). The outcome is therefore a separate convention although the objectives pursued are the same: to unify the rules on international jurisdiction and to facilitate international recognition and enforcement of judgments.

Unless stated otherwise, the identical terms in the 1968 Brussels Convention and in this Convention must in principle be considered to mean the same thing and therefore the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities must be taken into consideration. It should be noted that on provisions for which the wording is the same as in the Brussels Convention, there is little to add to the explanatory reports on the 1968 Convention and the subsequent amendments thereto. It seemed advisable, nevertheless, to reproduce the necessary sections of the earlier report in this one for ease of consultation by the judiciary, who are thus not obliged to consult several different texts in conjunction.

7. In the early 1990s consideration was given in the context of European political cooperation to the viability of a convention at European level on proceedings to dissolve or loosen the marriage bond. On the basis of a questionnaire drawn up by the United Kingdom Presidency in 1992 and a synthesis of the replies prepared by the Danish Presidency in the first half of 1993, the Member States conducted an initial exchange of views on the matter. Under the Belgian Presidency in the second half of 1993, before the Treaty on European Union came into force, Professor Marc Fallon was invited to a meeting of the Working Party in his capacity as Secretary of the European Group on Private International Law and reported on the Heidelberg Project, which was prepared by that Group and is so called because it was approved in Heidelberg on 2 October 1993. The European Group, as a group of specialists whose sole objective is to make proposals in the fields in which Community law and private international law come together, approved a proposal for a convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in family and succession matters which was of considerably broader scope than this Convention. The need to achieve results and developments in the studies carried out made it necessary to focus the work within the European Union on a more limited range of subjects.

8. At its meeting in Brussels on 10 and 11 December 1993 the European Council considered that the entry into force of the Treaty opened up new prospects for the European citizen, requiring additional work to be carried out in respect of certain aspects of the citizen's family life. To that end, the Council considered that examination of the possibilities of extending the scope of the 1968 Brussels Convention to matters of family law should be actively pursued. In the first half of 1994 the Greek Presidency circulated a questionnaire to the Member States to identify the general outline of what the Convention should contain. In the light of the replies received, a synthesis was drawn up and used as a basis for the instruction to draw up a draft convention given by the European Council in June 1994. In the second half of 1994 the German Presidency presented a draft convention covering only divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment. The Spanish and French delegations then requested the inclusion of child custody within the scope of the convention.

9. When describing the background to the Convention, we cannot fail to mention the contacts maintained with the Hague Conference on Private International Law. While the European Union was preparing the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Matrimonial Matters, the Hague Conference on Private International Law was revising the Convention of 5 October 1961 concerning the powers of authorities and the law applicable in respect of the protection of infants. That situation must be taken into account in relation to the possibility of a provision in the new Hague Convention relating to the competence of the authorities of the country of divorce to adopt measures to protect the children, although differing working methods require different approaches. Thus, while the European Union has observer status at the Hague Conference (so that representatives of the Commission and the Council Secretariat are attending the proceedings in The Hague), the reverse is not possible under the Treaty establishing the European Community and the Treaty on European Union. For that reason, beginning with the French Presidency in the first half of 1995, the Troika, the Council Secretariat and the Commission, alongside the official meetings, held informal meetings with the Permanent Bureau of The Hague Conference on Private International Law in view of the links between the texts under preparation in both forums.

The initial problems regarding the relationship between the two Conventions under preparation were thus resolved and the result is visible both in the Convention which is the subject of this report, concluded between the Member States of the European Union, and in the Hague Convention of 19 October 1996 on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children. At the Council of Ministers of Justice and Home Affairs on 25 September 1995, it was agreed that 'it was essential to make provision for custody of children in the context of these proceedings, in the form of measures supplementary to those laid down in the Hague Convention`. Therefore once the Hague Convention had been concluded, its provisions were taken into account by the Working Party, particularly those directly affecting the Convention now under consideration, i. e. Article 10 regarding the jurisdiction of the courts deciding on the annulment of a marriage, an application for divorce or legal separation of the parents to take measures directed to the protection of the child and Article 52 regarding the relationship between the Hague Convention and other Conventions, and particularly the possibility for one or more Contracting States to conclude agreements which contain, in respect of children habitually resident in any of the States Parties to such agreements, provisions on matters governed by the Hague Convention.

10. Preparation of the text of the Convention became the responsibility of the Working Party on Extension of the Brussels Convention which has been meeting on a constant basis since 1993. The negotiations were lengthy and on some points particularly difficult. At the Council meeting in December 1997, under the Luxembourg Presidency, final political agreement was reached on a series of provisions on the basis of the final compromise solution proposed by the Presidency.

In broad terms, that is the history of the laborious but fruitful work which went into preparing the Convention now before us.

II. GENERAL LAYOUT OF THE CONVENTION

11. The first point of interest is the legal basis for the text. When the Brussels Convention was concluded in 1968 only Article 220 of the Treaty was available as a basis. At present we have, in addition to that Article, another provision which can serve as a legal basis for the Convention: the new provision introduced by the Maastricht Treaty, i. e. Article K.3 in conjunction with Article K.1. In point 6 of Article K.1, 'judicial cooperation in civil matters` is listed as one of the 'matters of common interest` referred to in the introductory wording to that Article for the purposes of achieving the objectives of the Union. Such cooperation undoubtedly contributes to the achievement of one of the objectives of the Union, 'to develop close cooperation on justice` (Article B).

Dealing in a precise and appropriate manner with the matter which is the subject of the Convention is undoubtedly a significant achievement in terms of provisions on judicial cooperation between the Member States of the European Union in civil matters. Accordingly Article K.3 of the Treaty was chosen as the legal basis for the Convention although Article 220 would also have been a theoretically possible legal basis. Finally, it should be pointed out that the legal basis has consequences for the drafting process, but not for legal practitioners or for the citizen as regards the application of the Convention.

In line with the provisions of Title VI, the Commission was fully associated with the proceedings of the Working Party, that is to say it took an active, positive part in the preparation of the text. At the close of the Working Party's proceedings, the Presidency, in accordance with Article K.6 of the Treaty on European Union, presented the text of the draft Convention for consideration by the European Parliament.

The European Parliament delivered its opinion in the plenary session of 30 April 1998. During May 1998 the relevant Council bodies studied the opinions expressed by the European Parliament.

On 28 May 1998 the Council approved the Convention, signed on the same day by the representatives of all the Member States.

12. The concerns and the thinking underlying the preparation of the Convention are clear from the Preamble, which highlights four aspects:

1. The desire to introduce uniform modern standards for jurisdiction on annulment, divorce and separation and to facilitate the rapid and automatic recognition among Member States of judgments on such matters given in the Member States.

2. The importance of laying down rules of jurisdiction concerning parental responsibility over the children of both spouses on the occasion of such proceedings and therefore simplifying the formalities governing the rapid and automatic recognition and enforcement of the relevant judgments.

3. The need to bear in mind the principles on which the 1968 Brussels Convention is based; this Convention is therefore influenced by the Brussels Convention but differs in so far as the matter covered is different.

4. The possibility of giving jurisdiction to the Court of Justice of the European Communities to interpret the provisions of the Convention.

13. Two characteristics of the Convention need to be emphasised:

A. The Convention is what is known as a 'double treaty` in that it contains rules of direct jurisdiction and also rules for the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments. It is modelled on the Brussels Convention, which was at the time a revolutionary step, but it introduces substantial changes. Rules of international jurisdiction are thus laid down which have to be respected by the court of origin and may lead it to decline jurisdiction where it does not consider that jurisdiction lies with it under the rules of the Convention. The citizen thus enjoys legal certainty and a climate of mutual confidence is established allowing the introduction of a system of automatic recognition and a greatly simplified enforcement system.

B. Once the Convention has been adopted in the Member States in accordance with constitutional requirements and has entered into force in each Member State, it will become applicable ex officio. This means that it is compulsory to apply all the rules in the Convention and that, between the States party to it, those rules will, as from the date of entry into force, replace all other national or contractual provisions, subject only to the limitations resulting from the Convention itself and within the relevant constitutional framework. The mechanism is thus at once founded on and incorporated into each Member State's national legislation. Situations not covered by the Convention will therefore be subject to national law.

14. The Convention is divided into seven titles, as follows:

Title I:	Scope
Title II:	Jurisdiction
Title III:	Recognition and enforcement of judgments
Title IV:	Transitional provisions
Title V:	General provsions
Title VI:	Court of Justice
Title VII:	Final provisions

It will be obvious that the core of the Convention, and therefore the section which gave rise to most discussion, lies in Titles II and III (jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments). Discussion of those issues also reflected, to a large extent, the whole debate on scope (Title I).

15. Title I of the Convention (scope) contains only one Article which was the subject of lengthy discussion which had to be resolved by a political agreement setting the material scope of the Convention to include proceedings on divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment and proceedings relating to parental responsibility for the children of both spouses on the occasion of the application.

16. Title II contains rules of direct international jurisdiction, i.e. rules which must be respected by the court of origin prior to a judgment in matrimonial proceedings. Such provisions do not, however, affect the distribution of territorial jurisdiction within each State or the situations of States the legal systems of which have not been unified. The existence of direct jurisdiction in matrimonial matters is undoubtedly the major innovation in this Convention. Conventions dealing with such matters are normally confined to the recognition and enforcement of judgments and the concomitant inclusion of rules on indirect jurisdiction, that is to say the examination of the jurisdiction of the court of origin to be made by the court of the State in which recognition is sought.

This Title is divided into four sections:

(a) Section 1 contains the provisions on grounds of jurisdiction, that is to say the grounds of jurisdiction stricto sensu (Articles 2 to 8). The central provision is Article 2 which establishes the grounds in matrimonial matters and it is supplemented by Article 3 on parental responsibility and Article 4 regarding the particular rule relating to the 1980 Hague Convention. The text then deals with counterclaims (Article 5) and conversion of legal separation into divorce (Article 6) and Article 7 covers the exclusive nature of jurisdiction under Articles 2 to 6 while Article 8 covers residual jurisdiction and is parallel to the provision in Article 4 of the 1968 Brussels Convention.

(b) Section 2 (Articles 9 and 10) deals with examination as to jurisdiction in accordance with the grounds in the Convention and as to whether the respondent has been able to arrange for his defence.

(c) Section 3 (Article 11) deals with lis pendens and dependent actions.

(d) Section 4 (Article 12) deals with provisional and protective measures.

17. Title III is the logical consequence of Title II and deals with recognition and enforcement of judgments. At first sight, it might seem that once the subjects covered in the earlier Articles had been resolved, matters would be easy, but that was not the case. Discussions focused mainly on the effects of automatic recognition in relation to the civil-status records and the grounds of non-recognition and non-enforcement. In the same way, account had to be taken of the restriction of recognition to the dissolution of the link and its not affecting other matters (see paragraphs 22 and 64). The problem also affects the need for enforcement and the issue is in turn resolved in relation to the scope. The procedure for enforcement is similar to that in the Brussels Convention.

18. Title IV contains the transitional provisions and Title V the general provisions while Title VI relates to interpretation by the Court of Justice and Title VII contains the final provisions.

III. ANALYSIS OF THE PROVISIONS

TITLE I A. Scope

Article 1 Scope

19. This matter is the essential point which justifies the very existence of the Convention and its extent which, as indicated in paragraph 12, includes rules on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters. Determining the scope involves separate issues, relating on the one hand to the type of proceedings conducted and on the other to matters covered.

20. As to the type of proceedings, paragraph 1 refers to 'civil proceedings`, to the exclusion of all other types of proceedings, since these are the normal proceedings conducted in matters of divorce, legal separation or marriage annulment. The term 'civil` is nevertheless intended to define the object of the Convention clearly. It is to be understood not only as a means of including the administrative proceedings referred to in paragraph 2 but also as a means of excluding all merely religious proceedings. The result is as follows:

A. In addition to civil judicial proceedings, the scope of the Convention also includes other non-judicial proceedings occuring in matrimonial matters in certain States. Administrative procedures officially recognised in a Member State are therefore included. In Denmark, for instance, there is, in addition to the judicial course of action, an administrative procedure before the Statsamt (District Council) or before the Københavns Overpræsidium (which performs the same functions as the Statsamt for Copenhagen). For that procedure to apply, there must be grounds for divorce and agreement between the spouses both on the divorce and on matters connected with it (custody, maintenance, etc.). Appeals against the judgments given by the Statsamt and the Københavns Overpræsidium lie to the Ministry of Justice (Civil Law Directorate) and may then be subject to judicial review through the normal procedure. In the same way, it may be noted that in 1983 Finland adopted a system under which matters relating to custody, residence and visiting may be settled outwith the legal proceedings by agreement that must be approved by the 'kunnan sosiaalilautakunta/kommunal socialnämnd` (communal social (welfare) board): 'Laki lapsen huollosta ja tapaamisoikeudesta`/'Lag angående vårdnad om barn och umgängesrätt`, Law 361 of 8 April 1983, Sections 7, 8, 10, 11 and 12).

For that reason, the text stipulates, as did Article 1 of the 1970 Hague Convention on the recognition of divorces and legal separations, that the term 'court` shall cover all the authorities, judicial or otherwise, with jurisdiction in matrimonial matters in the Member States.

B. The Convention excludes from its scope religious proceedings, which may become more frequent as a result of immigration (Muslim and Hindu marriages, for instance).

Article 42 safeguards agreements concluded between certain Member States and the Holy See (see commentary on Article 42 paragraph 120).

21. In the matters covered, a distinction also needs to be made between purely matrimonial questions and questions of parental responsibility.

22. The Convention is confined to proceedings relating to the marriage bond as such, i.e. annulment, divorce and legal separation. So the recognition of divorce and annulment rulings affects only the dissolution of the marriage link. Dispite the fact that they may be interrelated, the Convention does not affect issues such as, for example, fault of the spouses, property consequences of the marriage, the maintenance obligation or other possible accessory measures (such as the right to a name, etc.). As to maintenance, in addition to other international instruments, jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments are covered by the 1968 Brussels Convention which contains a specific jurisdiction rule (Article 5(2)) and there is also the Rome Convention of 6 November 1990 on the simplification of procedures for the recovery of maintenance payments, which is no longer in force. On all other issues the rules (national or international) currently applicable between the States in question will continue to apply.

23. The most complex issue is parental responsibility since in some States the legal system requires that the decision on matrimonial matters includes parental responsibility, while in others matrimonial and child-protection issues follow totally separate routes, that is to say the judgment on the marriage does not necessarily cover parental responsibility and may even refer judgment on it to other authorities. For that reason, separate problems had to be faced and it was difficult to bring all States to accept the text in paragraph 1(b) which includes the issue in this Convention rather than leaving it for a separate text, as some delegations had originally proposed. It is a question, however, only of the matters relating to parental responsibility that appear to be linked to the matrimonial proceedings when those take place (see Article 3(3)).
